"Don't suffer!" cried the girl, "Let me go, Velasco, let me go! We will sit here together, side by side; be my comrade again, my big brother! Laugh, Velasco! Smile at me! When you look like that and come so close, I am frightened! Don't tease any more! The bread is hard like a nut; see, I will crack it between my teeth. Where is the honey-cake, Velasco? Give me me a piece."

"Do you care for me, Kaya? Look me in the eyes and tell me."

The girl pushed him away from her slowly and turned away her head with a flush: "Is that your violin over there in the straw, lying in a little nest all by itself,—cradled so snug and so warm? It is charming to be a gypsey, Velasco. Are you glad I came to you, or are yousorr y? That night, do you remember the violets? I flung them straight at your feet! I wasn't a boy then, but I threw straight, Velasco, listen—I—I care for you—but don't—kiss me!"

"Kaya—Kaya!"

"Hush! Shut your eyes! Put your head back in the straw and go to sleep. When it is time for the dance I will wake you. I will sit here close beside you and watch, as you watched over me. Shut your eyes, Velasco.

"Won't you—Kaya?"

"Go to sleep, Velasco—hush!"

"If I shut my eyes—will you?"

"Hush!"

The sun-beams danced on the dusty floor, and the light came dimly through the cobwebs. Velasco lay with his arm under his head, his young limbs stretched in the straw, asleep. He mumured and tossed uneasily. There was a flush on his face and his dark hair fell over his brows and teased him, and he flung it back, half unconscious.

Kaya covered him with the blanket, kneeling beside him in the straw. She moved without rustling, drawing it in softly, and smoothing the straw with her fingers.

"It is my fault that he is lying here in a loft," she whispered low to herself, "He does it for me! His hands have been frozen—for me! They were so white, and firm, and supple; and now—they are scratched and swollen!"

She gave a frightened glance about the loft; and then bent over him, holding back a fold of the blanket. "He is asleep!" she breathed, "he will never know!"

She stooped low with her golden head and kissed his hands one after the other, lightly, swiftly, pressing her lips to the scratches. He murmured again, tossing uneasily; and she fell backwards in the straw, gazing at him, with her arms locked over her breast and her heart throbbing madly.

"No—he is asleep!" she said, "he is fast asleep! Another hour, and then in the dusk I will wake him. He will play for the dancing—Velasco! The greatest violinist in all Russia—he will play for the peasants to dance!"

She gave a little sob, half smothered. "It was wicked," she said, "unpardonable! I didn't know then—how could I know? If I had known! God, save him! Give him back his life and his art that he has given to me. Give it all back to him and let me suffer alone the curse of the Cross—the curse of the—Cross! Make me strong to resist him! Ah, Velasco!"

She was sobbing through her clenched teeth; staring at him, stretching out her arms to him.

—"Velasco!"

BLOOD BAD IN THE WINTER

Is it any wonder that the system becomes poisoned with impure waste matter in the winter time, when you think of the artificial life we lead?

With doors and windows tight shut we breathe the same air over and over again until it is incapable of purifying the blood.

In vain effort to cast the poisons out of the system the liver and kidneys are worked over time until they too are played out. Then comes the pains in the back, the headaches, the attacks of constipation and indigestion.

The quickest and most certain way to overcome this condition is by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. They act definitely and directly on the liver and kidneys, awaken them to renew energy in filtering poisons from the bowels and remove the cause of indigestion, backache and other body pains.

You are not experimenting when you use Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. They are unique in their combined action on the liver and kidneys and for this reason stand without a rival as a means of purifying the blood and cleansing the filtering and digestive systems.

BRITISH TOURISTS

Arrangements for a Tour of the Maritime Provinces

F. W. Frier, publisher of the London Coloniser, has arranged to conduct two large parties of British tourists and home-seekers on a trip through Nova Scotia and New Brunswick early in the summer. The party will tour Nova Scotia, leaving Quebec via the Intercolonial Railway for Amherst. After a two-day sojourn there, the party will visit Oxford and Pugwash, and go to New Glasgow via Brown's Point on the short line. They will spend a day looking over the industries of New Glasgow and the surrounding country, and will go from thence to Sydney. They will be shown the many features of interest throughout Cape Breton, and the opportunities for farming and market gardening will be impressed on the visitors, many of whom are men of means, who are looking over Eastern Canada with a view to settlement. They will return from Sydney to Halifax by the I.C.R., and from thence will tour the South Shore and the Annapolis Valley. The party is to be personally conducted by Mr. Frier by special arrangement with the Nova Scotia government.

KILL ALL HOUSE FLIES

Earl Grey Advises Ottawa's Mayor to Inaugurate Company

Earl Grey wrote a letter to the Mayor of Ottawa, urging an immediate warfare on house flies. He suggested that a systematic campaign should be inaugurated, and calls on the Mayor to take the lead. His Excellency thinks that Ottawa, as the capital, should set an example to other cities, both in a campaign to kill the flies before they breed and in securing sanitary conditions.

CORONATION CARD OF FINE DESIGN

The Official Invitations to Westminster Abbey are Remarkable Pieces of Workmanship

The card inviting privileged guests to Westminster Abbey for the crowning of the King and Queen on June 22 is a remarkable piece of workmanship and design. The card, which measures thirteen and a half inches by eleven and a quarter inches, is much larger than that used at the Coronation of King Edward. It is the work of Mr. Bernard Partridge, and has been engraved by the Swan Electric Engraving Company. The general design, which is admirable in conception, emphasizes the maritime greatness of the British Empire, the sea, with the sun rising over it forming the fitting background for the entire design. In the centre is a beautiful winged symbolical figure of Britannia in classical drapery, carrying in her right hand the Royal sceptre, with the Cross, and in the left the Orb, the emblem of sovereignty. Perched on the top of her aureoled helmet, which is also winged, sits a miniature British lion. On the right of the figure are shown the Royal Arms og King George and the royal monogram, "G.R." Beneath the medallion of the arms lie the sword of state and the trident. The Queen's Arms on the left of the central figure closely resembles those of the King, except that the letters "M.R." (Mary Regina) are here substituted. Below the medallion of the Queen's Arms is the cornucopia or horn of plenty. Six smaller symbolical medallions, three on each side of the feet of the central figure, surmounted by the Royal Crown, indicate the various Dominions of the Empire. The four stars represent the four provinces of the South African Union; the maple leaf, of Canada; the rose, shamrock and thistle, the United Kingdom; the five stars, the five States of Australia, while the Indian and New Zealand symbols are readily distinguishable. Between six and eight thousand of these cards are being issued. The peers' cards, which are being sent out by the College of Heralds, are signed by the King himself. The others are issued through the Earl Marshal's Office, and signed by the Duke of Norfolk.

SWINDLER AT WORK

Clever Crook Who Took Several Thousand Dollars at Marseilles

The town of Marseilles has been victimized by a clever swindler to the tune of several thousand dollars. A good-looking and well-dressed man, calling himself Maurice de Larrain, who said he was honorary vice-president of the Lorraine Sporting Club, in Lorraine, arrived at one of the best hotels in Marseilles. There is no more patriotic town in France than Marseilles, and the recent arrest of the president of the Lorraine Sporting Club at a gymnastic fete in Germany made the new arrival a popular hero. De Larrain was interviewed, and his portrait appeared in all the local papers. He was wined and dined extensively, and gave several lectures on Alsace and Lorraine which were largely attended. Then one day he told the police that his pocket-book and cheque-book had been stolen in the street, and that he had received from the thief an anonymous letter, which he showed. The stealer of the pocket-book wrote to say that unless $100 was given to the messenger at once when he should send for it, he would hand over to Germany a document of great importance contained in the pocket-book. De Larrain told nobody what the document was, but excitement grew as excitement can grow in Marseilles, when next day the newspapers published a second letter threatening de Larrain with death if he continued urging the claims of Alsace and Lorraine in Marseilles. De Larrain told his friends that he thought it wiser to go away for a few days. He left without paying his hotel bill, after borrowing $100 apiece from thirty or forty different people to buy back "the important document." Inquiries have been made about him in Metz and at the Lorraine Sporting Club. He is not known there, and it is extremely improbable that Marseilles will ever see him again, unless the police, who are looking for him, succeed in finding him.

KEYS OF DEATH AND HADES

Sheol to Be Destroyed, Then Will Come the Shout: "O, Hades, Where Is Thy Victory?"

Sunday, April 30.—Pastor Russell of Brooklyn Tabernacle preached today on the Resurrection, approaching the subject from another standpoint—the destruction of sheol, hades, the grave, the state of death. He considered a number of texts uniting his theme. He said:—

Death is spoken of throughout the Bible as an enemy. Merely hymn-book theology presents it as a friend, an angel sent of God. Death is introduced to our attention in the Bible as the penalty for sin, with the distinct understanding that had Adam not transgressed the Divine commands he need not have died, nor ever have been cast out of his Eden home. St. Paul emphasizes the fact that death is the penalty of sin and that the resurrection of the dead will come to mankind as the result of the redemptive work of Christ. He says, "Since by man comes death, by man also comes the resurrection of the dead. For as all in Adam die, even so all in Christ shall be made alive; but every man in his own order," band or cohost (I. Corinthians xv, 21-23).

As Genesis introduces death as a penalty for sin, Revelation concludes the great drama by pointing out Christ's victory and the destruction of sin and death, the release of all the members of Adam's family from his sentence and eventually the bringing of all the willing back to fellowship with God and to eternal life. Between these two extremes of Divine Revelation are the assurances of the Prophets and the words of Jesus and His Apostles explaining the processes of redemption and reconciliation. St. Paul summarizes these with the statement, "By one man's [disobedience] sin entered into the world, and death as the result of sin, and thus death passed upon all men, because all are sinners. . . . As by one man's disobedience [the] many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one shall [the] many be made righteous" (Romans v, 12-19).

In the poetic language of Scripture death is symbolically represented as a great monster which has been swallowing up the human family, never satisfied. Millions on millions have already been devoured. Mankind in vain has looked for a Deliverer—for one able to vanquish death and to deliver the prisoners from the great prison-house of sheol, hades, the grave. This monster was granted permission to devour the race by Him Who created us, because we were unworthy of eternal life. Death, therefore, is backed by the mandate of the Almighty, and He cannot overthrow His own decision.

The Divine proposition is that whoever would meet the requirements of Justice against Adam and his race might purchase or ransom them, and have full right to deliver them from the prison-house, the tomb. For four thousand years there were promises looking forward to this great Messianic Deliverer, but only promises—nothing was accomplished. Finally, in due time, God sent forth His Son.

He says that "He came not to condemn the world (not to add to its condemnation, nor to add to its sorrow or pain or trouble or hopelessness), but that the world through Him might be saved" from death—have life, perfect and everlasting, deliverance from the jaws of the monster and from his prison-house. But although more than eighteen centuries have since elapsed, the race is being swallowed up of this great monster, death, more voraciously than ever—ninety thousand every day. His prison-house, sheol, hades, the tomb, is supposed now to contain twenty thousand millions of Adam's children. Why the delay? Did God's plans go awry? Was the Saviour insufficient for His work? Was His sacrifice imperfect and unsatisfactory?

The Scriptures assure us that the sacrifice that Jesus offered (Himself) was a satisfaction, "ransom-price," for the sins of the whole world. They tell us that the Heavenly Father manifested His approval of the sacrifice when He granted the Pentecostal blessing, and that Jesus is even now at the Father's right hand waiting (Hebrews x, 12,13) until the time shall come when the heathen and the uttermost parts of the earth shall be given to Him, that He may establish His reign of righteousness, blessing the world and releasing all the prisoners of Sin and Death.

The delay is not in any sense an indication of weakness, nor of any change in the Divine program. It merely indicates that there is another feature of the Almighty's purpose which we did not for a time discern. The work is to be a great one. Twenty thousand millions are to be delivered from death's prison-house. And all of them will need instruction, uplifting, chastening, schooling, to prepare them for the Divine blessing of life everlasting. The time for instruction and uplifting is declared to be a thousand years. The power for the instruction is the Messianic Kingdom, the Rulers of which will be Messiah and His Bride—joint-heir with Him in His Kingdom. During the past nineteen centuries God, by His Word and providences, has been calling and drawing a "little flock" to Christ to be His Bride.

And not until all of these shall be called, drawn, tested, proven faithful unto death as followers in the Master's footsteps, will the elect Body be complete and the slaying of the great monster, Sin and Death, be begun and accomplished. For that day the saints are waiting and praying, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly!" And for that day the whole creation is waiting, although not clearly informed respecting the blessings in store for them (Romans viii, 19, 22).

St. Paul points us to the great Deliverer, the glorified Messiah, as the time when He shall take the Kingdom under His Heavens and begin the fulfilment of the prayer He taught us, "Thy Kingdom come; Thy will be done on earth as in heaven." He tells us He must reign until He shall have put all enemies under His feet—"The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death" (I. Corinthians xv, 26). The meaning is clear. Messiah's Kingdom will address itself promptly to the rectification of every form of unrighteousness, financial, political, social, religious. He will rule the world with a rod of iron and every nation and every system or element contrary to the Divine standards of righteousness will be broken to shivers with His "iron rod." Thus will righteousness be established in the earth, in the midst of "a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation."

But the putting down of sin will be but the beginning of Messiah's work, Satan being bound, and the reign of sin thus estopped, each transgression will receive a just recompense and each good endeavor a just reward. Gradually mankind will rise out of sin and therefore proportionately come from under the power of death, until all the willing and obedient shall be fully delivered from all danger as respects the monster which has devoured our race for sixty centuries. Not only so, but those twenty thousand millions who have gone into the prison-house of death will be released—not all at once, but gradually, as the Apostle declares, "Every man in his own order," or band.

By the close of the thousand years of Messiah's reign, His victory over Sin and Death will be complete. Every member of Adam's race will have been lifted from the prison-house of death. It will be a prison-house no longer, for there will be no prisoners in it; mankind will have been lifted out of the clutches of Sin and Death, weakness and depravity, by the processes of restitution, resurrection, uplifting (Acts iii, 19-23). The victory over sin will be complete, because all who love sin and are willingly its servants, after being released from the condemnation of the Adamic death, will be destroyed in the Second Death. Thus Adamic Sin and Death will finally be completely routed and the prison-house of death be broken up. And Adam and his family, not willingly sinners, will all be set at liberty—restored to human perfection, as the earth will be brought to Edenic perfection.

Then will be brought to pass the Divine prophecy, "O, death, where is thy sting? O, grave, where is thy victory?" (I. Corinthians xv, 55).

We must notice when this is to be brought to pass. It is not now true. The sting of death is in us all, for, as the Apostle explains, Sin is the sting of death. And because all have been stung by sin, all are dying. It will require the entire Messianic Age to fully extract from humanity the virus, the sting, of sin by bringing mankind to perfection. Only as the sting of death is removed will the power of death relax, because it is a part of the Divine Law that "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." Death now has its sting. But when that which is perfect shall have come, the sting will be gone, the imperfection and weakness will be gone, the cause for sin will also be gone.

Not now, but then, will be brought to pass the saying, "O, Hades, where is thy victory?" Hades, sheol, the grave, has been having a victory over Adam's race for over sixty centuries. And its victory will not be entirely overthrown until the Redeemer shall have delivered from the power of the grave the last member of the human family—for all of whom "He died, the Just for the unjust, to bring us back to God."

Thus, as the Apostle says, with the culmination of Christ's Kingdom, with the deliverance of all mankind from the power of Sin and Death, death will be swallowed up in victory. The Apostle probably quoted from Hosea xiii., 14, where we read, "I will ransom them from the power of the grave (sheol); I will redeem them from death; O death, I will be thy plagues (gradual destruction); O grave (sheol), I will be thy destruction; repentance shall be hid from mine eyes." The Almighty will never change or turn from this decision. Death and the grave, sheol, hades (the Bible hell), are to be destroyed. Every member of Adam's race is to be delivered by Him who redeems all.

A key is a symbol of authority and symbolizes a legal power to open the prison-house and to release the prisoners. Adamic death has been a legal penalty upon our race—a just penalty. But although all shared the condemnation and weakness, God foresaw that some of the race, if granted the opportunity, would gladly return to loyalty to His laws. He has, therefore, made provision through Jesus for every member of the race, great and small, rich and poor. World-wide redemption will be provided and world-wide opportunity for the coming to a knowledge of the Truth and for being uplifted or resurrected will be afforded. The right or power to release mankind from the power of death and from the prison-house of the tomb, sheol, hades, the grave, is represented by the key in the hands of Messiah. He gained that key, that rightful authority to set us free from the grave, by the redemption which He accomplished for us at Calvary.

This figure of the prison-house was used also by the Lord through Isaiah the Prophet. Is it not written that the Lord was anointed to preach a message of good tidings to the meek, to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives of Sin and Death and the opening of the prison-house of death to those that are bound? And did not Jesus apply this very prophecy to Himself? (Isaiah lxi, 1; Luke iv, 18). Surely our Lord opened no earthly prison-doors at His first advent. But just as surely He [illegible] that He would open the prison-doors and set all the captives free. His death, "the Just for the unjust," was in order that He might have the rightful authority to release the prisoners—by His death He opened the key.

Hopefully this glorious work will be accommodated, and in the communion of it the elect Church of this Gospel Age is invited to have a share. Hence the Church is called out from the world first under a special Covenant of sacrifice that she may with her Lord, the Redeemer, become part of the Seed of Abraham on the spirit plane (Galatians iii, 29).

"And death and hell (hades) were cast into the lake of fire. This is the Second Death" (Revelation xx, 14).

In the symbolic language of Revelation, Messiah's reign is described as a glorious opportunity for all mankind to come back into harmony with the Almighty and to obtain everlasting life through the great Mediatorial Kingdom. The symbolic picture of which this text is a part, describes the establishment of Messiah's Kingdom, the saints of this Gospel Age being with Him in His throne, in His Kingdom, reigning with Him—a Royal Priesthood (Revelation xx, 4-6).

The context further describes that period, in which all mankind shall be brought to a knowledge of the Truth, when all will "stand before the great White Throne." Messiah's Judgment Throne, to be tried, to be tested, to be proven whether they will accept or refuse the perfection and eternal life which Divine mercy will then make possible for them. During that thousand years of Messiah's reign, as we have seen, death will be gradually swallowed up in victory. And as the prisoners of the tomb are gradually released, the grave will be destroyed, will be no more.

The statement, death and hades were cast into the lake of fire, which is the Second Death, is merely another way of explaining to us that Adamic death, and the grave connected therewith, will be superseded by the Second Death. Any of the race who, by the close of the Mediatorial reign, will not have come up to perfection and will not have gotten entirely free from the power of sin and the tomb, will themselves be responsible for their wrong condition, their imperfection. The great Mediator will have done everything right, proper and necessary for all. Whoever then will come short of eternal life will himself only be to blame. And the trial time over, any not fully delivered, any still held by sin and death, will be willingly held, and all such will be turned over to the Second Death, destruction, symbolized by fire, from which there will be no recovery.

Let it be remembered that the Valley of Hinnom, outside of Jerusalem the earthly, where only the vile refuse was destroyed, will find its antitype in the Second Death, symbolically represented as a lake of fire outside the New Jerusalem. In it will be consumed utterly, completely, everything out of harmony with the Divine will.

In the New Testament, as we have seen, hades stands for the grave or state of death, which results from Adam's transgression; while Gehenna represent the Second Death, which will come only upon those who shall first have been delivered from the Adamic sentence, or shall have had at least a full opportunity for deliverance and who will manifest their love for sin more than for righteousness and who, therefore, will be sentenced to the Second Death.

But in the Old Testament there is no distinctive word used to represent the Second Death — the extinction which will be the penalty of personal, wilful transgression. To meet the difficulty the word sheol is used a second time. For instance, we read of some who will be wilfully wicked after enjoying a knowledge of the Truth—not merely inheritors of imperfection and weaknesses which they have not overcome, but intelligently wilful sinners—"The wicked shall be returned to sheol together with all people who forget God" (Psalm ix, 17). In our Common Version the prefix re is improperly omitted.

The "wicked" are only those who sin against light, knowledge and opportunity, and only those can be said to forget God who have once known Him—who have been brought to a knowledge of the Truth and turned from it. Truly, my hearers, the resurrection hope is the great theme of the Bible.

A Much-Licked Son.

It may or may not be true, but the story is told of the late Bishop Du-Moulin. His son, living in Chicago, wrote on the fourth of July, and the letter started out this way:

"Dear Father: I am celebrating the day we licked you."

The old bishop wrote back and this is a free translation of one sentence in his letter:

"I would be celebrating every day in the year if I celebrated every day I licked you."—Weekly Star.

Undoubtedly True.

"Anyway," said the man who was getting the worst of the argument, "there's one thing no woman has ever done and probably never will do."

"What is that?" queried the fair suffragette.

"Spoil anything through silence," answered the mere man as he hurried away.

A Royal Letter.

Written by King Edward, when ten years old, to his sister, the Princess Royal, a letter has just been sold for $33.50.

Pay in Britain.

In five counties of Ireland the average pay of hired men on the farms is less than $2.43 a week, in all Ireland it is $3.74, in Wales and Monmouthshire it is $4.38, in England it is $4.46, and in Scotland it is $4.76.

Origin of "Grog."

Grog, the sea term for rum-and-water, got its name from Admiral Edward Vernon, who introduced the mixture in the navy. He was nicknamed "Old Grog," because he wore grogram breeches.

Explained.

Young Lady—You say you were on a raft for six weeks and had nothing to eat but mutton. Where did you get the mutton from?

Old Salt—Well, you see, miss, the sea was very choppy."

CAUTION!

The difference between "vanilla" (so-called) and is a difference you never can appreciate until you have tried Shirriff's. It is a flavor revelation. Far stronger—and immeasurably finer—than the common kinds. Ask the groceryman.

Shirriff's

Other delicious Shirriff flavorings are Lemon, Almond, Ratafia, Rose, Pineapple, Strawberry and ninety others.

St. Lawrence Sugar

MONTREAL, 22nd February, 1909.

I HEREBY CERTIFY that I have drawn by my own hand ten samples of the St. Lawrence Sugar Refining Co's EXTRA STANDARD GRANULATED SUGAR, indiscriminately taken from four lots of about 150 barrels each and six lots of about 450 bags each. I have analyzed same and find them uniformly to contain 99-99/100 to 100 per cent of pure cane sugar, with no impurities whatever.

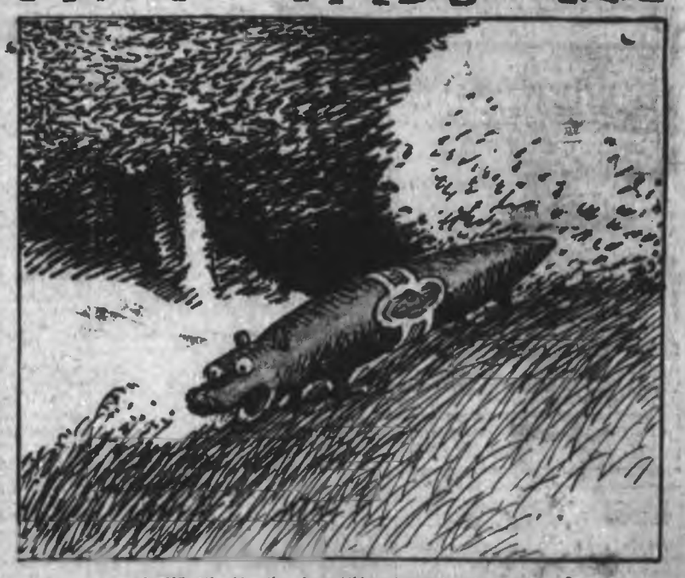
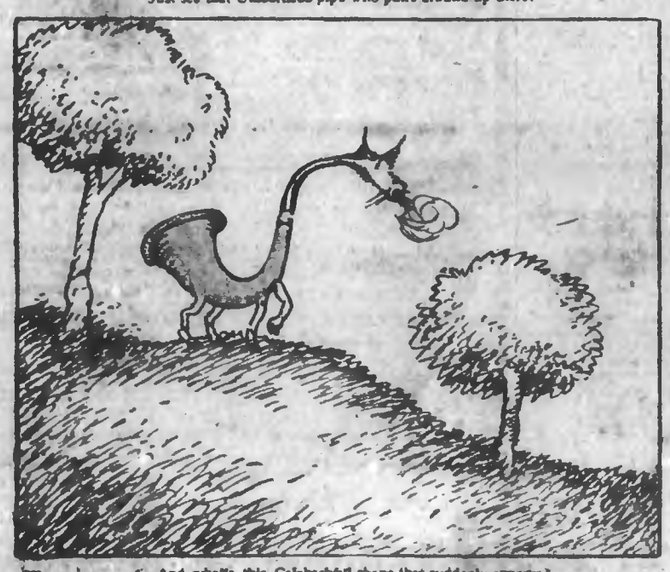
THE TERRORS OF THE TINY TADS

1—"I guess we're in Tobacco-land," the Tiny Tads declare.
"Just see that Unicorncob-pipe who puffs around up there!"

2—He has a sort of troubled look, perhaps he wants a light.
Mosquitobacco too, no doubt, would be a welcome sight.



3—What is this other funny thing that makes the Tinies run?
It must be a Cigargoyle, for it surely looks like one.



4—And what's this Calabashful shape that suddenly appears?
It must be a Jackalebash, to judge him by his ears.

5—Oh, see! The rain has sent the Tinies running helter-skelter,

6—The shower has passed but still the grass is wet and very bad,
"You'll all get Kangarheumatiz," forewarns a Tiny Tad.

AEROPLANE WAR TO BE GHASTLY

Expert Says the People of the Big Cities Will Have to Find Shelter Underground

M. Mallet, a member of the French Aeronaut Club, analyses the various changes science has brought into warfare, and points out that though the more primitive weapons have been gradually replaced by rifle and cannon, the field of battle has hitherto remained the same. Aviation has, however, changed all this, and thus completely revolutionises military science. All the time, labor and money spent in fortifying frontiers is now useless. For no number of troops massed behind the ramparts will any longer be able to arrest the flight of the new warbirds. Thus the whole of the military edifice, which men and nations have given of their best to build, falls like a house of cards, and the education of the modern warrior must begin all over again. The conquest of the air has shaken the throne of Mars to its very foundation. In addition to instructive comments on the wanton waste of millions spent on weapons and dreadnoughts, which the flying machine will render obsolete, the author gives us a wierd picture of a battle in the air. Before it the imagination recoils in horror. We are told that in order to escape certain death the people of vast cities like London, Paris, and New York, which will inevitably be the objective of the aerial invaders, will have to seek shelter underground. Life under such conditions would be entirely changed. The whole race would be transformed and have to adapt itself to subterranean cities, where every day existence would be the living death of the tomb.

M. Louis Bleriot, who made the first flight across the Channel, spoke in the same vein. "A battle in the air," he said, "will present a spectacle infinitely more ghastly in its hideousness than anything on land or sea. I have no doubt that in a year or two military and naval flying machines will be able to carry explosives of the deadliest nature. With such formidable weapons the havoc wrought by belligerents will be of indescribable magnitude. If ever so horrible a struggle is allowed to take place. Can this calamity be averted? I am rather pessimistic on this point. The only hope is that the movement for international arbitration will receive an impetus corresponding with the activity displayed in inventing or perfecting engines of war." It should be remembered that M. Bleriot is actually engaged in promoting a company for building military aeroplanes in England, but so great is his aversion against war that he desires to see it abolished, even though this would mean that his company would have to go out of business.

ASSISTS THE POOR

King George Sends a Subscription to the Fresh Air Fund

The King has sent a subscription of $125 to the Fresh Air Fund. His Majesty has always shown the deepest sympathy with the aims and achievements of the F.A.F., which was able to give more than 20,000 poor children a day in the country last year and provide a fortnight's holiday by the sea for 4,000 others. As Prince of Wales, the King was a regular subscriber to the Fund, and three years ago, accompanied by the present Queen, he spent part of the afternoon with a thousand poor children in Epping Forests, and saw the F.A.F. at work bringing rosy cheeks and smiles to wan faces. The whole of the working expenses in connection with the Fund are borne by the promoters, Messrs. C. Arthur Pearson, Limited, the "Standard" Newspapers, Limited, the "Daily Express," Limited, and the Ragged School Union. Every penny of the money given to the children is used for the children's happiness. The King's $125 means a day in the country for 667 children who would never have a day's holiday were it not for the F.A.F., which, for a penpence can take one child for one day into the forests and fields.

NO PROTESTANT RIVAL

A New Production of the Passion Play Will Not be Allowed

There will be no Protestant rival to the Oberammergau Passion Play. Such a performance had been planned to take place at Eisenach, a little town at the foot of the famous Wurtburg, replete with historic associations with Martin Luther and the Reformation. But now the police of the Grand Ducky of Saxe-Weimar have stanned in and vetoed the play by refusing their sanction. It had been arranged to present a "Jesus Teturology," a play on realistic lines showing the last years and Passion of Christ, but differing widely from the Gospel version. The authorities held that this play was likely to give offence to people holding orthodox religious views. In the projected play Jesus was presented as a physician who had travelled in India, where he had imbibed the ideas of brotherhood and charity which are expressed in his teachings. Other sacred characters has been treated from a similarly free point of view.

THRIVING PRUSSIAN CITY

The youngest "city" of Prussia is Hamborn, which has been raised to its present rank by Imperial Cabinet order on attaining its 100,000th inhabitant. Forty years ago it had less than 1,000, and the scene of its thriving zinc and iron industries was an idyllic country landscape. Manufacturing wooden shoes, fishing, and going to church were the chief occupations of its people in those days, whereas to-day the rolling mills and social democracy take up most of their time and attention.

PRIEST WHO STOLE

Bouron's Remarkable Story of His Love Episode in Paris

A detective has arrested a priest for thieving in a big department shop in the Rue de Rivoli. The priest, whose name is Bouron, told an extraordinary story. He is an abbe in the Yonne department, and some weeks ago fell in love and eloped with the wife of the local judge. Bouron came to Paris with the woman, and put away his priest's clothes. He spent all his money, and dared not, he said, confess the fact to his companion. He was seen to steal two silk blouses and a silk petticoat. Declaring that love had driven him to theft, as the detective was taking him to the police station, Bouron drew a revolver and attempted to commit suicide. The policeman wrested the revolver from him, and he is now in prison.

OPPOSES MISSIONARIES

Mr. Lin Shao-Yang, in a book just published entitled "A Chinese Appeal to Christendom Concerning Christian Missions," protests against the "absurd, contemptible and demoralising medley that forms the stock in trade of missionaries," and urges that China be left to work out her own salvation, as far as religion is concerned, without western interference.

GATEWAY MIDDLE WEST

Six Points Where American Immigrants Enter Canada

Between Kenora and the Rockies there are six points where United States immigrants enter Canada. The chief of these is North Portal, a few miles south of Moose Jaw. During every day of the year ending March 31st there passed ten carloads of settlers' effects—northward, ever northward. The total number of cars was 3,218, more than ten for every working customs' day in the year. And with the cars came the settlers—northward, ever northward. German-Americans, Swedish-Americans, Norwegian-Americans, Canadian-Americans, and Americans—all bearing northward, where land is twenty dollars an acre instead of sixty or a hundred. During the year there were 27,982 of these trekkers, nearly ninety a day. North Portal is the southern gateway to Saskatchewan and Alberta, as Winnipeg to the eastern gateway.

INDIANS GET CASH

The Songhee tribe of Indians, British Columbia, are no longer "poor." Every head of a family in the tribe is to receive $10,000 cash. There are about forty-five of them. The Province of British Columbia is to pay it. Their reservation within the limits of Victoria has been transferred to the Province. A new reservation will be given the Indians in return, the old one going to the Province. The Indians get the money in actual cash; it will not be placed in a trust fund.

RAILWAY CONSTRUCTION

Engineers have been instructed to begin at once on the location of the Canadian Pacific Railway line from Glentay, sixteen miles west of Smith's Falls, to Toronto, and it is expected that this railroad will be in operation in about two years. Steel will be laid on the new railway from Victoria Harbor to Bethady, near Peterboro', this year, and before the snow flies it is expected that wheat will be hauled from that harbor.

Electricity for Farmers

The Ontario Government is sending officials to Europe to study the application of electricity to agriculture, with a view to extending to the rural communities the benefits of the hydro-electric system.

The Board of Trade Endorses the Industrial Commissioner

AGREEMENT WITH C. P. R. IS FINALLY PASSED BY THE COUNCIL

The Council Insists Upon the Resignations of the Two Firemen

INFLUENTIAL DEPUTATION URGES RETENTION OF MR. DUGGAN AS INDUST. COMMISSIONER

Writ Upon the Council and Messrs. D. O'Connell and W. H. Denham as Spokesmen Show Their Confidence in Mr. Duggan and Eulogize His Fitness for the Position

ACTION WAS DEFERRED

Despite the presence of a large deputation representing the Board of Trade and other prominent citizens, to urge that the office of Industrial Commissioner be retained, that Mr. Duggan, the present commissioner, be engaged for another year, and that the matter be settled immediately, the Council last night decided to give the subject further consideration. The Manufacturers' committee had taken up the question at a meeting in the afternoon and had reported recommending that the office be continued and that the matter of appointing the Commissioner be left with the committee and a committee from the Board of Trade. There was a very large attendance of citizens in the deputation the speaking being done by Messrs. D. O'Connell and W. H. Denham. The particular clause in the report affecting the Commissioner goes back to the committee of the Whole for further discussion.

Ald. Buller, chairman of the Manufacturers' committee read and moved the adoption of the following report.

Gentlemen, — Your Manufacturers committee beg leave to report and recommend as follows:

1. That the department of the Industrial Commissioner be continued for another year and that the matter of engaging a commissioner and other matters in connection with the office be left with this committee, together with three representatives of the Board of Trade, with power to act, and that the City Treasurer be authorised to make payments out of the appropriation made for this department on the order of the committee.

2. That a by-law be submitted to the electors to provide for purchasing that part of Park Lot No. 5 between George and Aylmer streets to add to the King Edward Park, of lots Nos. 9 and 10, north of Hunter and west of Mark streets, and of land in the west for a park or playground, and that this committee make further enquiries regarding land in the west for this purpose.

When the report was read, Ald. Duncan moved, seconded by Ald. Graham, that Clause 1 be struck out and referred back to the Manufacturers' committee to discuss and report back to the Council.

Mr. O'Connell stated that there was a large deputation of citizens present who were anxious to be heard before the matter was settled and on motion it was decided to hear the views of the visitors.

Mr. O'Connell reviewed the steps that had been carried out in the establishing of the office of Industrial Commissioner and in the securing of Mr. Duggan for that position. He pointed out that the Board of Trade had secured subscriptions from citizens to the amount of $2000 and the council had granted $2500 to pay for the office during the first year and it had been decided that the office was to be in charge of the Board of Trade. A committee had been appointed by the Board to look after the matter and he (the speaker) had been made president of that committee. They had advertised for applicants for the position and had selected Mr. Duggan from a large number. He had come most highly recommended and the speaker could say that he had fully and satisfactorily lived up to what had been said of him. During his term of office the Board of Trade had been in touch with him and he did not think that it was possible to make a selection in any sense as satisfactory to the people of Peterborough. Mr. Duggan's work had been eminently satisfactory to the Board of Trade. He had worked hard and had been faithful and earnest. That he had not secured more industries was not to be wondered at; it was not claimed that it was possible for anyone to get in many industries in one year. It was only possible to lay the foundation and Mr. Duggan was in touch with a number of concerns that he was sure would come to fruition during the year. Acting on instructions from the Board of Trade he had devoted a good deal of time to the water power question and had been unremitting in his attention to this important matter. It had been felt that if Peterborough was to go ahead the city

EXAMINER WANT AD. BRINGS A HOST OF APPLICANTS

The following letter received by the Examiner is self explanatory.

Dear Sirs,—Please take out the advertisement running in your paper asking for domestic aid. Before 8 p.m. on Saturday evening no fewer than seven persons had answered the advertisement, and the door bell was rung so incessantly that I had to leave the house. If people want to find out how many want domestic employment in this city, they should advertise in your paper,

Yours,

OFFER FREE POWER TO CITY FOR ADVERTISING PURPOSES

At the meeting of the City Council last night a proposition was read from the Electric Power Co. Limited, offering to supply for advertising purposes to the city, electric current free of all expenses sufficient to light one 50 Watt Tungsten lamp for each 100 inhabitants over and above 5,000. The company advises that special illumination of the business sections and of the streets leading to the stations might be the best form of advertising.

The matter was referred to the Fire Water and Light Committee and the clerk was instructed to write and thank the Electric Power Company for their generous offer.

REPAIRS TO BE MADE TO POLICE COURT AND STATION

The police court and police station are to be enlarged and repaired.

At least a motion was put through the city council last night asking the City Trust Commissioners to go ahead with the work after the plans drawn up by Mr. Blackwell have been approved by the council.

Ald. Duncan, in introducing the matter, pointed out the need of repairs at once.

Ald. Buller did not think it a good policy to spend much money on the old building when a new city hall was being talked of.

Chief Thompson pointed out that in Toronto and Hamilton they were discussing the advisability of taking their police courts away from the city buildings. At all events the present quarters were in bad shape and improvements were needed.

THE PROPER CELEBRATION OF CORONATION DAY

In connection with the great celebration proposed to be held on Coronation Day, the Reception Committee now has the matter in hand, and may be depended upon to handle the matter with prompt action. It has also been suggested that the military authorities, the City Council and the Chimes Committee co-operate with a view to holding a magnificent celebration on that day.

A number of representative citizens were present to bring the matter to the attention of the City Council last night, but through some mistake, the opportunity was lost. Peterborough has a unique opportunity in the inauguration of the largest chimes in Canada, and there is no reason why it should not come before the whole country, if an energetic effort is made. Prompt action is necessary to assure the assistance of leading men, who will be otherwise engaged later on.

An old boys' reunion has also been suggested in connection with the inauguration, and some steps might be taken in this direction, for, no doubt there will be numbers of former citizens who will desire to be present on this occasion.

CARTERS FORBIDDEN TO DUMP ANY REFUSE ON WATER STREET

Mr. James Stubbs, of 659 Water St., complained in the Police Court this morning, that Mr. Edward Flaherty, Carter, dumped ashes, and refuse of an objectionable character on the ash dump on Water St., in front of his residence. His Worship, Magistrate Dumble, dismissed the case with a warning that in future all carters must not dump any more refuse on this dump. Mr. Stubbs stated that he had lived on the street for four years, and that during that time he had to complain about several times about the same thing, and about the same man. Mr. Flaherty denied depositing any offensive material there. He said that in carting ashes, the grass and leaves off the lawns were mixed up with them, but he failed to see any thing wrong with dumping leaves there. Mr. Stubbs argued that there was a terrible stench off the place, and that all the people on the street would be willing to sign a petition to have the carters stopped from dumping refuse there. His Worship thought that if this was the case, that it would be better to stop carters from dumping any kind of material there.

Thomas McDonald was charged with vagrancy. He pleaded not guilty, and the Chief gave evidence which proved the accused was guilty. In view of the prisoner's record and the evidence taken in the case His Worship decided to send him back to Cobourg where his home is. He had been in the city only a week, but had been drunk all the time and that is why he landed in Court. McDonald was here a year ago in the same condition and was sent out of the city for good, but he broke his promise to stay away, and paid another visit, with the stated results.

DEP. CHIEF AND CAPT. MUST RESIGN

$16,000 NEEDED FOR SOME CHANGES IN CITY SCHOOLS

Deputation From Board of Education Waits Upon the City Council to Urge that Work be Done at Once---Would Have to be Carried Out During the Holidays---Top Flat of King Edward School to be Completed---New Heating and Ventilating System for Old Collegiate and Vestibule and Outside Stairs for the Central.

At last night's meeting of the city council a deputation representing the Board of Education with Messrs. John Crane, the chairman of the Board and Dr. Morrison as spokesman was present and laid before the council the necessity of the immediate expenditure of some $16000 on repairs and alterations at the Central and King Edward schools.

Mr. John Crane, the first speaker, pointed out that it would be necessary to have the contemplated improvements carried out during the summer holidays. Speaking of the King Edward school, he explained that it was a twelve room school, of which only eight rooms had been finished, the top flat being left uncompleted. There were four hundred pupils in attendance there now and there was no accommodation for some thirty pupils who could go only half a day. Two more rooms at least would be required before the beginning of the next term and it was proposed to finish the top flat of the building. In the old Collegiate building a new system of heating and ventilation would be necessary—in fact the government grant would be withheld on the recommendation of the provincial inspector unless some improvements was made. A new retaining wall would also have to be constructed.

The Central school itself was not in proper shape for children at the present time. The halls were dark, the floors were all gone and the building had always been a fire-trap. It had been suggested to put two vestibules at the south and west of the present school and to remove the stair-cases to the outside of the building.

The cost of the work outlined in the different schools had been estimated at $16,000, and he asked the council to do something in the matter at once.

Ald. Duncan was of the opinion that some of the money asked for might be used to advantage on the west ward school, which he thought was hardly fit to send children to.

"I hope you are not going to spend any money on the East Ward school," remarked Ald. Morgan. "The old building should be torn down."

Mr. Crane remarked that the repairs were needed immediately. He admitted that the conditions in the West and East Ward schools were not as they should be, but said that they would receive attention in due time.

Dr. Morrison, in supporting the request of the Board, said that he did not agree with those who proposed that the old Central school building should be torn down and replaced by a new one. The suggested alterations would make the Central an up-to-date first class school that would serve its purposes for a couple of generations and it would seem a misfortune to tear down such a building.

On motion of Ald. Duncan and Brown, the matter was referred to the Finance committee.

VOTE STOOD 6 TO 4

The city council last night, after a heated and acrimonious discussion, passed the report of the Fire, Water and Light committee, a clause of which calls for the resignation of Deputy Chief Grange and Capt. Samuel Thomas of the Fire Department. It will be remembered that the matter was discussed by the Fire, Water and Light committee a month ago, the action of the committee being caused by a letter which appeared in the Examiner criticising Ald. Kerneghan and with the instigation of which the two officials were charged. Ald. Buller, Anderson, Edgar and Bradburn opposed the clause, but it was supported by Ald. Metheral, Morgan, Graham, Kerneghan, Duncan and Brown. The latter was in favour of a compromise measure, calling upon the two men to apologize, but there was no seconder to the motion. The report of the committee was as follows:

Gentlemen,—Your Fire, Water and Light committee beg leave to report as follows:

1. We met with the chairman of the Water Commissioners and Mr. Kendrey of the Auburn Woollen Co. in regard to fire protection for the Auburn Woollen Mills and suggest that the Water Commissioners would ascertain what it would cost to provide fire protection for the mills and inform this committee.

2. In view of the fact that the city has decided to use oil on the streets, we recommend that an agreement be made with the Peterborough Water Commissioners for water for public purposes other than hydrants at $1,000 a year, if the Water Commissioners will agree to this.

3. We recommend that the tender of the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. for 500 feet of magnet multiple woven fire hose at $1.00 per foot, with couplings complete, be accepted, the company to give a guarantee that it will stand 400 lbs. pressure on delivery and fully guarantee it for three years against all defects of workmanship and material.

4. We recommend that the Peterborough Light & Power Co. be instructed to change the light at the corner of Charlotte and Bethune streets to the centre of the street.

5. We recommend that the Chief of the Fire Brigade, be requested to ask Assistant Chief Grange and Capt. Thomas to send in their resignations.

When the report was read, and its adoption moved by Ald. Metheral and Morgan, Ald. Buller took objection to several clauses. He stated that the committee was making a big mistake in buying any other brand of hose than the Paragon. The matter had been threshed out often before, and the best experts had stated that this was the only hose worth buying. While they might be saving 10 cents a foot in the initial cost of the hose, it would cost dollars in the end.

"I move that Clause 5 be struck out," said Ald. Buller. "I don't think it right to intertere. The Chief should have full control of the men under him."

"I second the motion," said Ald. Anderson. "I don't think it wise to dispense with the services of these men. They have been, according to the Chief, trustworthy and efficient in every way, I don't think it at all fair; neither man has done anything that he should be asked to resign for. The Chief should have full charge."

"I think these men should come here and apologize," said Ald. Brown.

"May I ask what they have to apologize for?" asked Ald. Anderson.

"Well, they have no right to say that Ald. Kerneghon is as big a liar as Ananias," returned Ald. Brown.

"We are not living in Russia," remarked Ald. Buller, hotly. "We are living in Canada and under the British flag. I think it is a disgrace and a shame to handle these men as they have been handled."

There was a burst of applause from the large audience at this statement.

Ald. Graham said things had been going wrong at the fire hall and it was time to put a stop to it."

Mayor Morrow thought the men should be brought before the committee—they were not being given a fair chance.

"There has been quite a bit of applause from the gallery," remarked Ald. Metheral. "Ald. Kerneghan made a remark in the council in regard to hose and other matters. If an alderman sent here to represent the people

NEW MILITARY DIVISION.

Good-bye to Peterborough's hope to be made the centre of a military division. Our splendid armouries, set in the midst of our beautiful and beautifully kept Central Park, with the lessons of order and military smartness it presents, didn't contribute pull enough. By a recent order, Military Districts Numbers 3 and 4 are amalgamated to form the Third Military Division in Eastern Canada, with headquarters in Kingston. This third divisional area comprises the counties of Durham, Northumberland Victoria, Peterborough, Hastings, Prince Edward, Lennox, Addington, Frontenac, Haliburton, Carleton, Dundas, Glengarry, Renfrew, Russell, Stormont, Grenville, Lanark, Wright, Labelle, Pontiac, Leeds, Prescott, the district of Nipissing south of Mattawa River (exclusive of the townships of Ferris and Bonfield).

ANOTHER EXPLODED SCANDAL.

On Thursday, April 27th, the Toronto Telegram devoted a page, less a column, to the exploitation of a veiled reference to an alleged attempt to ruin a member of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's cabinet, by convicting him of corrupt acts in relation to the deposit and checking out of large sums of money from the Imperial Bank.

The Telegram asserted that the "head and front" of the attack upon the integrity of the Cabinet Minister consisted in the items in the Minister's bank account, contained in the photographic reproduction of a page of the bank's ledger. The Telegram naively adds that the "facts" it pointed at were "forced upon the attention of this journal," but the "force" was not great enough to lead the Telegram to run the risk of a libel suit by giving the name of the minister, slandered by stealth. And its prudence was justified, for the President of the Imperial Bank, Mr. D. R. Wilkie, declares that the photograph of the alleged bank ledger page printed by the Telegram to indicate the figures of the Minister's account, is not a photograph of the account and does not represent the actual figures. The Telegram has not the boldness of some members of the Conservative Opposition, who, in waging the campaign of slander against the Liberals, quote from public documents what these documents do not contain, and when caught in flagrante delictu, have not the manliness to retract. Will the Toronto journal have the fairness to explain that the photograph of the page of the bank ledger was an impudent forgery, and that as this constituted the "head and front" of the attack on the Minister the whole structure innuendo and insinuation of wrong doing falls to the ground. It is sad to see a member of the press degrade itself to the level of some members of parliament.

OBSTRUCTION.

The Conservative Opposition in Parliament have taken a pretty large responsibility, in deciding upon a policy of obstruction, a course that demands less brains than "brass." They may succeed in prolonging and adding to the expense of the session, a trifle compared with the practical cessation of public business and the neglect of important legislation. They will prevent Canada being represented at the Imperial Conference at London by the ablest and most outstanding premier of the Dominions beyond the seas. They may precipitate a premature general election, upon old lists, and upon old riding boundaries, which will disfranchise the west to a very large extent, and result in Western Canada being represented in the new Parliament by a dozen instead of thirty or more members. They base their policy of obstruction upon their opposition to reciprocity, claiming that it must be submitted to the people. In the ordinary course of events, there will be a general election within two years, and the most logical way is to have the reciprocity agreement put into force and give the people a chance of voting upon something they know, something concrete, not a mere theory. There does not seem to be anything to be gained by the policy of obstruction; not even party advantage to the Conservative party; for they will be responsible for the injury of the national interests that such a policy will bring. Unfortunately, according to the rules of Parliament, the Opposition have it in their power to do wrong. They have it in their power to prevent the voting of supplies, after the interim supply, recently voted, becomes exhausted. When, however, the Opposition is confronted with the direct result of their unpatriotic policy of obstruction, they may hesitate. They have only to think of what will happen if they block supply. Every post office throughout the country would have to close; no mails could be carried; the Intercolonial railway would have to stop every wheel on its line; the canals, which have before them the prospect of the greatest season on record, could not be operated; and so on throughout the whole list of public service. Every public servant would have to go without his salary and would be dependent upon his credit at his purveyors for the necessaries of life, and every business house in the country would feel the effect of the paralysis which would ensue.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Grand Trunk Railway should be made a ward and provided with a guardian. Here we have this reckless railway corporation proposing to spend ten million dollars for track elevation and new terminals in Montreal; and this in the face of the assurance of Conservative rail-aways that reciprocity will ruin railway traffic and railways.

The death of Sir C. A. P. Pelletier, says the Ottawa Free Press, removes one of the very few survivors of the real old guard of the Liberal party. A member of the House of Commons in the early days of Confederation, he was also Minister of Agriculture in the Mackenzie Government and was later one of the most popular speakers which the Senate has ever possessed. A descendent of one of the first French families in Quebec, he was, like the late Sir Elzear Taschereau, a splendid type of the courtly French-Canadian gentleman.

HAPPY HUNTING GROUNDS.

(Winnipeg Free Press.)

Thompson Seton tells us that the Barren Grounds caribou, between the Mackenzie River and Hudson Bay, number more than 30,000,000, and may be double that. He says that in the very largest estimate the number killed by the Indians, the Eskimo and the Arctic whalers do not exceed 40,000—a number so small as to have no influence on the herds. As outside hunters rarely enter the region, this represents practically all the destruction by man. The wolves account for a few each year, but as the natural increase of such a herd would be several millions, the toll taken by man and wolf can make no permanent difference. They were probably never more numerous than now, and the destruction from outside sources is becoming less and less every year.

AN OUTRAGED NOBLEMAN.

(London Advertiser.)

Lord Onslow, the owner of an estate near Guildford, some 30 miles from London, sings his swan-song in the Times. He says he has decided to sell his land under the pressure of the Lloyd-George taxes, and enjoy himself in the south of France. The exactions of the budget, he declares, absolve the territorial magnate from his time-honoured duties of dispensing charity and guiding local administration.

The budget lays no new burden upon agriculture, but Lord Onslow's land, being more suburban than rural, is "ripening" for building purposes and acquiring a market price beyond its mere value as a producer of crops. Lord Onslow admits this; his land, because of its situation, was "bound to suffer early—his own words. It is precisely this species of property that the land clauses of the budget were framed to reach. Its increment of value comes not from the exertions of its owners or occupiers, but from the growth of urban communities.

The suffering complained of by the noble lord will not wring tears from many of his countrymen. He will get an excellent price for his land—there is a land boom in the United Kingdom just now—and it will pass into the hands of people who will make better use of it, because they need it more than does Lord Onslow. The mere fact that he was obliged to pay taxes is a proof that there was a demand for his property which enhanced its value beyond a mere agricultural level. Furthermore, there will be twenty or a hundred owners in place of one. The diffusion of property ought to be welcomed by true Conservatives. The feudal system is doomed in England, and on its ruins will be erected a more equitable order.

Price Too High For Conservative Opposition's Modest Demands

(The Globe)

The Opposition at Ottawa will graciously consent to the presence of Sir Wilfrid Laurier at the Imperial Conference if he will agree to transfer the government of the country to Mr. Borden and his colleagues. The leader of the Opposition put his propositions suavely, but there can be no doubt as to what they mean. The Premier may leave for Britain if he will agree to drop the reciprocity agreement for this session, he may go also if he will consent to take supply for two months and continue the session of Parliament after the Coronation, or he may go and make such arrangements as he can with his colleagues to continue the session during his absence. The Premier has not a few able lieutenants to whom he can entrust the conduct of business in the House. But, after all, Sir Wilfrid is the captain of the ship of State in Canada, and the Normans as well as the Saxons have the tradition that no captain worthy of the name leaves his ship while his crew remains to face a storm.

And there can be no doubt that if the Opposition hold to their intention of obstructing the business of the country to the extent of refusing supplies in the hope of forcing a general election before redistribution a political storm of great violence is about to break. Disguise it as he may in courteous language, the spirit that Mr. Borden exhibits is the spirit of Toryism from time immemorial. There seems to be opportunity of cheating a million people in western Canada, who are strongly in favour of reciprocity, out of a voice in settling the question if an election can be forced before the census results are known and the West secures the additional seats to which it is entitled. Therefore at the bidding of the moneyed interests of Montreal and Toronto, and to earn the huge campaign fund that is even now being spent riotously in the Press and on the platform, the Opposition are prepared to throw the entire machinery of government out of gear and prevent the doing of the veriest routine work of Parliament. To blandly suggest that at a moment when they are planning to wreck his Government Sir Wilfrid is urgently needed in London "for Imperial reasons" may be the Opposition's idea of humour, but the Liberal party is not yet educated up to an appreciation of that form of joke.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier's first duty is to Canada and his place is here. He believes, as his followers do, that he can best serve the Empire by making Canada prosperous and strong. The adoption of the reciprocity agreement will add vastly to the population of the Dominion within the next decade, and will increase the country's commercial strength materially. The Liberals of Britain will not misunderstand the situation. They know that Liberalism in Canada is as devoted to the cause of Imperial unity as is the Conservative party, and that when the Tories had power they spent in waving the flag the time and strength the Liberal party of Canada has devoted to the adoption of Imperial penny postage, the British trade preference, the inauguration of a system of naval defence, the garrisoning of Halifax and Esquimalt, and many other measures of practical Imperialism that were never thought of by its opponents.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier would have been one of the most picturesque figures in the great gathering of next month in London, and Liberals are sorry he will not be there, but they heartily agree with him that his first duty is to Canada, and that the price at which he must purchase leave of the Opposition to attend the Imperial Conference and the Coronation is too high.

THE DEADLOCK AT OTTAWA ON RECIPROCITY ISSUE

A Review of the Situation as it Now Presents Itself and Probable Course of Events—Liberals Are in Much Better Shape to Stand Long Fight Than the Opposition Side.

OTTAWA, APRIL 29.—The political situation now developed at Ottawa is the most interesting and the most illuminative of the present Parliament. The two parties have come to a deadlock on the reciprocity issue, the most important and far-reaching issue that has been before the country for many years. The minority is now attempting to dictate the policy of the majority on this issue, and unless the terms of the minority are accepted with reference to an indefinite postponement of the Government's proposals a practically complete blockade of the business of Parliament is threatened, with its immediate concomitant of preventing any Governmental representative at all at the Imperial Conference and the Coronation, and with its ultimate concomitant of forcing an appeal to the country this year without a redistribution of seats, and with the Government's present mandate from the people having still over two years to run.

Government Attitude Plain.

The attitude of the Government and of the Liberal majority in Parliament is very plain, and the issue at stake cannot be successfully disguised from the electors, despite the obvious attempts of the Opposition to lay on the Government the onus either for the non-attendance of Sir Wilfrid Laurier at the Conference or for the holding up of the business of Parliament.

Mr. Borden's Stand.

Mr. Borden on Friday in the Commons, in proposing that the Government abandon reciprocity for this session, or at least for two or three months in order to allow Sir Wilfrid to attend the Conference and the Coronation, made it very plain that this was the only condition on which the Opposition would agree to a temporary truce and a postponement of the ultimate crisis. He declared the uncompromising hostility of the Conservatives to reciprocity, and at the same time declared their belief that Canada's representation at the Conference was of more importance than the question of Canada's trade relations with the United States. In support of his contention he enumerated the subjects that are to be debated at the Conference, chiefly cheaper cable rates, merchant shipping and navigation laws, the "all-red" route, State-owned Atlantic cable and telegraph lines across Canada, and Imperial navy and military defence co-operation. It is significant that during the present session of Parliament none of these questions have been discussed in any very tangible shape by the Opposition, and in regard to none of them is there now any very concrete proposition before the country or any very general demand for immediate action thereon. Yet, Mr. Borden seriously advances the proposition that those matters are of more importance to the country than an enlargement of Canadian markets through reciprocal trade relations.

Postponement Would Not Help.

To allow the issue to go over now until next fall would practically mean a confession of failure on the part of the Government to be able to put through what it considers in the best interests of the country. Postponement would bring the question no nearer solution, and would be an admission that the majority in Parliament is unable to carry on responsible government. The Liberals have no intention of accepting any such compromise. Their position is clear. They will keep Parliament in session indefinitely on the issue, and it will not take long to leave only two questions before Parliament for consideration—namely, the ratification of the reciprocity agreement and the voting of supply to carry on the administration.

May Not Go Too Far.

It is not believed that the Opposition will go to extreme lengths in refusing to vote any supplies after the first of June next, when the money voted by the interim supply bill of last month will be exhausted. For the Opposition to do this, though it would force the Government to appeal to the country within a comparatively short time, would, at the same time, expose the obstructionists to an outcry from all parts of the country at the stoppage of all receipts of salary or wages from the many thousands of civil servants, employees on public works now in course of construction, etc. It would involve a widespread demoralisation of public business, for which the Opposition would undoubtedly have to take the blame. Moreover, it would mean an election without the promised redistribution of seats, and although the Opposition frankly confess that they will lose by such redistribution they dare not run the risk of forcing an injustice on perhaps two or three millions of the electors.

Looks Like Endurance Test.

The outlook, therefore, is for an endurance test in the Commons, with reciprocity as the chief subject of debate, continued until the Opposition decide to let the matter come to a vote. Obstruction would be carried on by means of continued talk from the Opposition benches on reciprocity, and by prolonged discussion of every item of supply brought down by the Government, on which there can be any excuse for talking.

Liberals in Best Shape.

This could be continued of course for months, and the Liberal members can stand the process even better than the Conservatives, since the burden of keeping the talk going would rest with the latter, while the Government could sit back and watch the show, merely being under the necessity of keeping a quorum in the House. It will probably not take more than a month or so for the Opposition to back down as gracefully as it may be sensible for them to do after committing themselves with more valor than discretion to the policy on which they have embarked. It is the opinion of the most astute Parliamentarians here that public opinion, the warm weather, the convenience of the members themselves, and the cessation next month of the regular monthly checks on indemnity allowance will before many weeks have elapsed bring a change over the spirit of the Opposition dream. At present they are apparently full of fight and courage, stimulated by the promise of large campaign contributions from the anti-reciprocity interests and by the loud-voiced enthusiasm of the Montreal and Toronto organizing end of the alleged alliance between the "tariff" reformers of Britain and the ultra-protectionists of Canada. The members of the Government are not at all worried over the situation.

Toronto's Tumble To Third Place

Toronto took another drop in the Eastern League standing and are now in third place as the result of a thirteen-innings defeat at the hands of Providence yesterday, the Greys thus cleaning up the series by copping all four games. Lush pitched good ball for Toronto, and the game was the best of the series, Providence finally winning by 3 to 2.

Rochester stopped Baltimore's winning streak by beating the Orioles by 7 to 3 in a long-drawn-out, hard-hitting game, by which Dygert was driven off the slab.

FOOTBALL

The Fast All Saints.

All Saints, they had a football team,
Renowned both far and near,
But when they played their first league match,
The goals they missed, "Oh, dear!"

The centre forward was so slow
He could not score at all,
Because you see, he had washed his pants
And did not want to fall.

The backs and half backs so they say
Were very good "by gum."
But when they saw the forwards play
It put them on the 'b'um."

So no wAll Saints buck up and show
The league, what you can do,
And then boys, if you win the cup,
We'll be very proud of you.

"Bradford City."

Famous Hockey Goal Keeper Is In The City

Percy Leseur, the famous goal keeper of the Ottawa hockey team, world's hockey champions and holders of the Stanley Cup, was in Peterborough today in the interests of his firm, Lally's, of Cornwall, the well known manufacturers of lacrosse sticks and baseball bats. The celebrated goaler, when seen by the Examiner, re-called the famous battle between the Smiths Falls team, of which he was a member, and the Toronto Marlboros which took place here some years ago, for the senior O.H.A. championship and which was attended by the biggest crowd that ever saw a game in Peterborough.

Speaking of hockey generally, he stated that it was improving all the time in the East as regards the elimination of rough play and the development of team work. The players have learned the necessity of getting in on the puck and there is very little hang dumping, the accepted "boxing" a player who heaves from well outside.

Asked if he expected to play next season, he replied that he hoped to. "I like the game and excitement," he remarked, "and it is hard to keep out of it."

Messrs. Trebilcock Bros. will handle the Lally sticks next season, having placed an order with Mr. Leseur to-day.

A USELESS EXISTENCE ENDED

BECOMES A VICTIM TO NEWBRO'S HERPICIDE

The dandruff germ is a busy little microbe constantly at work and always doing the same thing. Apparently with fiendish intelligence it burrows down into the hair follicles, destroys the hair life and finally crowds out the hair, causing baldness.

There are two sure ways of stopping the harmful career of this invisible microbic growth. One is to wait until the germ has induced incurable baldness after which the atrophied hair follicle offers no sustenance to the germ; the other is to USE NEWBRO'S HERPICIDE.

The dandruff germ cannot exist where Newbro's Herpicide is used intelligently. By killing the dandruff germ, it thus checks further accumulations of scarf skin and prevents the hair from coming out.

While many imitations and substitutes are offered for Newbro's Herpicide, there is nothing "just like it" or "just as good."

Get genuine Herpicide.

To-morrow ther ewill be another lack of confidence motion, and there may be a third on Thursday. It is quite evident that the obstruction wing of the Opposition is in full control just now.

THREE CARS BURNED

(Port Hope Guide)

Three cars, one used as a boarding place, the other the supply car of the Construction Company, and a box car, were burned at the C. N. R. Station at Osaca yesterday afternoon shortly after dinner. The fire originated from the boarding car, but the cause is unknown. An engine nearby drew the cars away and thus saved the Station from serious damage.

RAPID GROWTH

Mr. J. H. Smith of Rogers street, East City, who is an ardent agriculturist, is authority for the statement that some rhubarb in his garden, which he measured on Sunday, was four inches taller on Monday afternoon. This indicates some very rapid growth.

POST CARD COLUMN

Editor of the Examiner:

Sir,—I see by your morning contemporary that the council last night passed the report of the Fire, Water and Light committee, and not being a fireman, or afraid of "Cnay" Kerneghan or the rest of the Council. I would like a little space in your paper to deal with this matter. I venture to say that the decision of the Council will be a most unpopular one throughout the city, and that if a vote of the citizens was taken it would go greatly in favour of the retention of these two men. Deputy Chief Grange has lived many years in Peterborough and has been a quiet, inoffensive citizen, who enjoys the respect and esteem of a very large number of people. Captain Thomas, although not a resident for so nearly a long time as Mr. Grange, has shown himself a worthy citizen. Chief Howard has stated that there is absolutely nothing against the two men as far as he is concerned; their work has been satisfactory in every respect. Why then their resignation?

It is gathered that it is because Grange and Thomas are alleged to have instigated the writing of a letter which appeared in the Examiner criticising Ald. Kerneghan. The latter, a new comer in the council, early in the year raked the Fire Department over the coals for having left hose lying around the streets and on other points. A day or so after a letter appeared in the Examiner contradicting these statements. The aldermen believe that this latter was instigated by the two officials whose resignations have been asked for. Why, however, should they not have an investigation, have the two men on the carpet and give them a chance to explain, if any explanation is forthcoming? It is certainly contrary to all the principles of fair play to dismiss men without any investigation.—Q.

Reading between the lines, however, it is not hard to see that some of the aldermen are out after other scalps than those of the deputy-chief and the captain. Why don't they come out in the open and admit that they are hunting for a chance at Chief Howard, and not finding an opening, are taking revenge upon these two men?

Is it going to add anything to the efficiency of the fire department to dismiss the men who are next to Chief Howard in authority? Mr. Grange has been in the brigade for quite a long time now and has become familiar with the duties. In the event of Chief Howard not being available for any cause whatever, Mr. Grange would be capable of taking charge of affairs. But with he and the captain gone, who is there in the brigade to act? Surely not one of the raw recruits whom Ald. Morgan talks about? To fire the most experienced men in the brigade because the feelings of an alderman have been disgruntled may be pleasant to the alderman, but it's mighty poor business for the city and Peterborough's interests should take precedence over any private feelings.

It is not increasing the efficiency of the department to ignore Chief Howard and dismiss men whom he has pronounced as most highly satisfactory. Truly, Ald. Buller was right when it is said it was a shame and a disgrace to handle men as these two have been handled.

Yours, etc.,
"FAIR PLAY."

COUNCIL HOLDS BUSIEST SESSION OF THE SEASON

Very Large Amount of Business Taken Up at Last Night's Meeting—Communications Dealt With, Reports Received and By-laws Passed—Question of Fire Protection for Auburn Again to Front.

The City Council had a very busy session at the regular monthly meeting last night. In addition to the matters reported in other columns of this issue, a large amount of routine business was wiped off the slate, reports being received, communications dealt with and by-laws passed. From the Secretary of the Board of Health, enclosing a resolution of the Board, recommending to the City Council that scavengers be licensed, to enable the Sanitary Inspector to have knowledge of those who are engaged in such work, and that the license fee be 50 cents.

From the Tax Collector, giving the statement of roll.

From Mr. W. H. Moore, suggesting that the unnamed street lying between the city and the township of Smith, at the north end of the Hilliard property, be called Langton avenue, as a mark of respect to the memory of the late John Langton.

Board of Works.

Among the recommendations of the Board of Works was the following:

We recommend that the following work be done on the streets, named:

Victoria avenue—the west end gravelled.

Benson avenue—the hill to be cut down and the low part near the Normal School to be filled up.

Caddy street—to be graded.

Concession street—the culvert over the creek to be rebuilt.

Rogers street—to be gravelled north and south of Douro street.

Burnham street—the stones to be raked off and the street repaired.

Sophia street—to be gravelled.

Water street—the manhole at Edinburgh street and the sewer at that point to be repaired and the street to be graded and gravelled between Dublin and Antrim streets.

Mr. G. W. Mulligan asked for permission to use Central Park for the purpose of holding Gospel song services on Sunday evenings during the summer after the regular church services are over.

The request was granted on motion of Ald Morgan and Anderson. These services have been held for the past couple of years.

Mr. Larmonth was present in regard to the proposal to lay a water main across the new dam of the Auburn Power Company for fire protection purposes. In return for the conveyance to the Auburn Power Company of a triangular piece of land along the street line, needed by them in the construction of a tail race, the company had agreed to pay for the construction of a six inch pipe across the dam. However, Mr. Larmouth had since learned that the commissioners wished to lay a ten inch pipe and his company would not agree to pay for that although he was willing to pay for the cost of the six inch pipe if the city would pay the difference. He was of the opinion that the work the company was doing was a distinct improvement to that section and was worth the land in question.

Mr. Jas. Kendrey of the Auburn Woolen Company who was present to urge the immediate necessity of fire protection coincided in Mr. Larmouth's opinion.

The matter was referred to the Board of Works.

The dog by-law was amended making provision for a kennel license to cost $10.00.

A by-law making a grant of $150 to the Salvation Army Band upon the usual condition of giving a concert each week during the summer was passed.

A by-law increasing the salary of Medical Health Officer, Dr. McPherson and adding to his duties the testing of milk and water received its several readings and was carried, as was a by-law establishing a Board of Management for the Queen Mary (Isolation) Hospital.

Ald. Duncan thought a resolution should be passed conveying the five acres selected on the Hilliard property as a site for the new home to the Peterborough Protestant Home Board. It was explained by City Solicitor Hall that the agreement between the city and the Board had been referred to the latter's solicitor for approval.

The Mayor will call a special meeting to pass the by-law as soon as it has been approved.

On motion of Ald. Brown and Edgar the Property Committee will look into the matter of painting the band stand in Central Park. Ald. Kernehan inquired about some trouble in connection with the cess-pool at the Queen Mary Hospital and Ald. Duncan, chairman of the Property Committee promised to look into the matter. On motion of Ald. Morgan and Anderson the Board of Wrks are given power to purchase a new road sweeper.

The by-law authorising the execution of an agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway concerning the waterfront land required for freight offices and siding purposes in connection with the new Seaboard line was finally passed by the City Council last night.

The principal features of the agreement are that the C.P.R. is to pay $10,000 for the land in question while Charlotte and King Streets will be closed, the city are given access to the water front at Simcoe St and having power to build an over head bridge at Charlotte St.

Ald. Duncan brought up the question of protection at Simcoe St. and moved that if any protection was needed at that point, the company should furnish it at their own expense by order of the Board of Railway Commissioner. Ald. Brown seconded the motion.

Ald. Morgan moved in amendment seconded by Ald. Buller that no action be taken along this line and the amendment was carried.

Mr. G. W. Hatton who was present in the interests of the C.P.R., thanked the Council for their courtesy and stated that the C.P.R. would spend a considerable amount of money in Peterborough and would start at once.

HON. A. G. MACKAY CLOSES HIS RECIPROCITY TOUR

Reciprocity Explained to Thousands of Farmers---Great Interest Shown---"Give Reciprocity a Chance" Says the Farmer.

Hon. A. G. MacKay, addressed on Saturday at Goderich the closing meeting of a tour that extended over three weeks, in which time the leader of the Opposition discussed reciprocity in over a score of places, from Kingston in the east to Windsor in the west. The tour served a twofold purpose; it brought the Liberal leader into close touch with the people of the Province, and it gave to thousands of farmers and townspeople a clearer view of what the reciprocity agreement is and what it will mean, not only to agriculture, but to the country at large.

FARMERS ARE INTERESTED

Perhaps the most interesting feature of the series of meetings was the tremendous interest taken in the reciprocity question, despite the fact that an election is not in progress. In the country districts the halls were always crowded and it was a common thing for farmers to drive fifteen and twenty miles to hear the speakers. The night of the Straffordville meeting in Elgin county the rain came down in torrents and the roads were in bad shape, yet the Township Hall was crowded. The farmers have read a great deal about reciprocity in the newspapers and various pamphlets sent abroad, but the opportunity of hearing reciprocity discussed by a speaker as thoroughly grounded in the subject as Hon. Mr. MacKay attracted to the meetings every farmer that could conveniently get there.

WHAT WILL THE FARMER DO?

The lesson of the score of meetings held by Hon. A. G. MacKay in the past three weeks is that the farmer has just about made up his mind; he has decided to "give reciprocity a chance." Since the Conservative members at Ottawa awoke to the realisation that hysteria and flag-waving were making the opposition to the reciprocity agreement somewhat ridiculous, and came suddenly to earth, the farmers have been deluged with "boiler-plate" pamphlets attacking reciprocity. They have been told that their home market is going to be spoiled, that American products are going to flow over the boundary in great quantities. These pamphlets have given the party-bound individual a chance to make a show of justifying his position, but the average farmer, remembering that the Government entered into the present agreement as a concession to the men who sent their great delegation up Capital Hill, and contrasting prices of farm products on both sides of the boundary line, is not being convinced.

LITTLE OPPOSITION EXPRESSED

Resolutions endorsing reciprocity were introduced at practically every meeting held in the three weeks. At one meeting three men declared against the agreement, at several others one or two were opposed, but in a majority not one farmer stood up to vote against endorsing the pact. The significance of this is apparent when it is remembered that in all of these meetings a large number of Conservatives were present. In one or two they actually outnumbered the Liberals. The Conservatives who did not get up to vote for wider markets kept to their seats and gave no expression of opinion either way.

THE CONSERVATIVE FARMER

The position of the Conservative farmers was aptly summed up by one well known Bruce county farmer. "It's this way," he said. "The most of the Tory farmers think this a good thing. Quite a lot of them say so straight and are going to vote for it when the time comes. Others will tell you man to man that they think it will help us, but they don't like coming out open with it. A lot of those men will either vote for it without saying much, or, rather than vote against the party, they won't vote at all. It's not so easy," he added, "to go against your party."

And he was in a position to know, for he was a Conservative farmer who had come out in support of the agreement.

"ANNEXATION" CRY RIDICULOUS

The Liberal leader's tour showed that the Opposition members knew what they were doing when they abruptly dropped the "annexation" and "disloyalty" cries. It was hard work keeping them warm even for a few weeks and the response was discouraging. Hon. MacKay at the first few meetings paid some attention to the "annexation" bogey, but the farmers laughed at it, and at his remaining meetings "loyalty" or "disloyalty" figured very little in his addresses.

They took the pain from her side, cured her backache, and made her a well woman — Dodd's Kidney Pills always cure where the Kidneys are the cause of the trouble.

Tiverton, Digby Co., N.S., May 1st. (Special.)—"I advise every sufferer from Kidney Disease to use Dodd's Kidney Pills." Those are the words of Mrs. Lois McKay, of this place.

FINE LECTURE ON SOUTH AMERICA BY SENOR RAY

Famous South American Explorer Lectures on Habits and Customs of Natives—Tells of Cannibal District and of Strange Savage Customs—Great Cities and Horrible Revelations.

A large crowd of citizens, representing all denominations of the city, were present at Park street Baptist church last evening to hear the lecture by Senor Ray, of Bolivia, on the habits and customs of the natives, of South America, the necessity of missionary aid, the great buildings, and the advancement of the country as far as worldly advancement is concerned.

Mr. Ray, whose home is in Toronto, has spent a great many years in South America, and has had the privilege of seeing a country which very few white men are familiar with.

At the request of the audience last night, instead of lecturing on the country as before mentioned, and as he had intended, he showed lantern slide pictures of the different cities and scenery of the country. At the close of the pictures, each one of which were described in a very interesting way, Mr. Ray exhibited his collection of curios, among which were the following: Native weapons, both for hunting and for war, different kinds of wearing apparel, skins of jaguars and other fierce animals of the Brasilian forests, skins of the reptiles, which are the terror of the South American forests including the Anaconda and the Boa Constrictor. Idols, which were worshipped by the natives, sacred rattles, banners used in worshipping the God of thunder, and many other like things, too numerous to mention. Mr. Ray was, for some time, an explorer in the employ of the Bolivian Government, and while following this occupation went further in land than probably any other white man has ever gone, being at one time thousands of miles from a railway or the faintest sign of civilization. He travelled directly through the Cannibal district, and saw the Cannibals themselves. While making these trips, he was in company with a few natives of Bolivia, who had been, to a certain extent, civilized, but yet were wielders of the bow and arrow.

Speaking of Rio Janerio, Mr. Ray said that that famous city had a population of more than one million people, and scarcely any of them knew what the true God was. In comparison with Toronto and other Canadian cities, he said that they were 30 or 40 years out of date with the cities of South America. They have up-to-date street car service and the finest and most expensive buildings in the world. The people speak the Portugese language in the civilized cities, and they are indeed very luxurious spending more in dressing than the Speaking of Rio Janeiro, Mr. Ray stated that the dock of Rio Janiero cost over seventy million dollars ($70,000,000) and scarcely a dock in the North American continent cost one million. He stated that there were more millionaires in Buenos Ayres than any other city in the world, and more automobiles on the street than one would see on Broadway, New York. The city itself, is also probably the most beautiful city in the world. The greatness of the country, and the apparently civilized nature of the people, heretofore setforth, is only a screen over the terrors of it.

Mr. Ray went on to describe to a limited extent, the horrors of native wars and revolutionary outbreaks in the cities. He showed pictures of the batteries in action fighting the fleet in the harbour and the soldiers fighting in the city. He, himself, had the fortune, or the misfortune, to be right in the thick of a revolutionary outbreak, and witnessed the slaughtering of three thousand men, in a fight which lasted three days. It may also be of interest to the readers to know that the pictures, including those of the revolution, shown last night, were photographs from life.

Regarding emigration, Mr. Ray stated last night that three emigrants went to Bolivia and South America, for every one that comes to Canada. And regarding the price of fruit, he stated, as an example, that a hundred oranges of the very best class, could be purchased for five cents, and that a whole bunch of bananas could be purchased for the same amount. He stated that a single orange tree, and not necessarily a very big one, would bear as many as 10,000 oranges, and that one part of the tree would be in blossom, another part with green oranges on, and another with big ripe ones, all at the same time. Another peculiarity he mentioned, regarding fruit, was that a person could go out to his garden any season, or day in the year, and pick strawberries. They grow all the year around, as do many other such fruits. Although the city of Rio Janerio is far in advance of Canadian cities, Argentina cities are far behind them. The people are living in little huts, and they are so oppressed by the church that they can scarcely live. The speaker also told of the native priests, and showed pictures of them, and gave an imitation of them on the platform. He told of their heathenish ways of killing little children, where there were more than two in the family, and had on exhibition the club with which the deed was performed, and which was composed of a single piece of hard and heavy wood about two feet and a half long with a heavy wooden knob carved out at the end.

Mr. Ray also showed and described a number of scenes along the route he took when exploring, including a fight between a jaguar and a tapir, also a Boa Constrictor and an alligator, both being nearly twenty feet in length. Beautiful scenes of the Brasilian forests were also shown, including the famous palm trees, and the hardest wooded trees in the world. These were only a few of the interesting things which were the subject of discussion, and to-night a two hours' lecture will be given, and each of the curios will be described. The latter will be one of the interesting features of the evenings, as the articles are there to be inspected.

The large and enthusiastic audience showed their appreciation of the interesting and educative time they had spent, and nearly all expressed their wish to be present to-night. The Young Men's Bible Class is accountable for Mr. Ray's presence and are very lucky in procuring him, as he is very much in demand. He has promised, that if all is well, he will come back to the city next autumn, to lecture again.

It is expected that a very large crowd will gather at the church to-night, as telephone messages were received from a number of citizens, requesting that Mr. Ray remain over to give the people a chance to hear his interesting lecture. Mr. Ray also has a book written by himself, entitled "Through Five Republics on Horseback," and copies may be obtained to-night at the church.

must have power and Mr. Duggan was instructed by the Board to look after the matter. He had been successful in securing a report from the Hydro-Electric Commission that might have cost the city $3500 or $4000, in any other way. Hon. Mr. Beck had come to Peterborough and had given the report at a meeting of citizens. As far as he knew it had not been the intention to have the report presented then, but that was Mr. Beck's matter and not Mr. Duggan's.

Mr. O'Connell urged upon the Council the retention of Mr. Duggan as Industrial Commissioner and sat down amid loud applause.

"I wish to ask one question," remarked His Worship. "Did Mr. Duggan send out notices saying the report would be given at that meeting?"

"Not as far as I know," replied Mr. O'Connell. "In fact, I don't think it was known that Mr. Beck was coming until the day he was here."

"Surely some member of the Citizens' committee will be able to answer that question, yes or no," said the Mayor.

Mr. W. H. Denham was called upon to speak and remarked that it would be one of the most unfortunate things that the city could do to discontinue the office of Industrial Commissioner at the present time. The speaker had many opportunities to look over Mr. Duggan's work and to be in conference with him. He was satisfied that Mr. Duggan had done an immense amount of work during the year, far more than any committee of the Board of Trade or Council could hope to do. He had worked hard, faithfully and with a great deal of zeal. He was sure that a vote of business men would be overwhelmingly in favour of the retention of the office. As regards the report of the Hydro-Electric Commission, Mr. Denham said that its being read at a meeting of citizens had been a surprise. It had been thought that Mr. Beck was only going to give an address.

Ald. Duncan explained that his motion that the matter should be referred to the Manufacturers' committee did not mean that he was opposed to the retention of the office but rather he did not feel like settling the matter without more consideration.

Ald. Buller remarked that there was no use sending the matter back to the Manufacturers' committee which had already dealt with the question.

Ald. Morgan said that he had been opposed to Mr. Duggan coming at first and had later wanted to cut his salary in two, but he thought he was becoming converted. He felt that there was lots of work for the Commissioner to do. He would be satisfied if he successfully dealt with the power question even if he did not get any industries. Once the power was secured it would not be possible to keep the industries from coming in. However, he thought that the council should talk over the matter with Mr. Duggan. The latter had been managed by the Board of Trade last year and the speaker did not think that body had done it very well.

Ald. Duncan changed his motion to read that the clause be referred to the committee of the Whole Council and in its new form the amendment seconded by Ald. Graham, was carried.

The other clause of the report was adopted without opposition.

cannot express an opinion without having officials of the fire department or any other department take it up, write a letter and have it published in the papers, practically calling him a liar, it is not as it should be. A poor, innocent fool who could write a letter, wrote this one and these two men read it and it was published in the paper. The committee raised the point and would not stand it any longer. The Chief discharged the man who wrote the letter. Who was the giulty party, the man who wrote the letter, or the men who told him to write it.

Ald. Metheral went on to say that things were not being conducted rightly at the fire hall and went after Chief Howard, raking up some matters that the council had heard of before. He further stated that one man had quit because Chief Howard had called him down for not blacking his (the Chief's) boots after he had been on duty all night.

Ald. Morgan said that he was prepared to stand by the report of his committee. Things were not right at the hall, and not as they should be. He said that there was nothing but a bunch of raw recruits, even if some citizens imagined that they had a good fire department. The reason that the men did not stay was not because of wages, as was alleged. Mr. Grange was a hard man to get along with. Ald. Morgan intimated that the council might have to go further and start at the head of the department.

Ald. Buller's amendment was then put and the yeas and nays called for with the following result:

Yeas—Ald. Buller, Anderson, Edgar and Bradburn.

Nays—Ald. Metheral, Morgan, Kerneghan, Graham, Brown and Duncan.

Ald. Brown moved that the men be asked to apologize and in the event of their doing so that they be kept on, but there was no seconder to the motion and the report went through, as read.

PUBLIC INAUGURATION OF CHIMES SUGGESTED JUNE 22

The following letter from Rev. Canon Davidson, Chairman of the Chimes Committee was read at last night's meeting of the Council and referred to a Committee:—

Gentlemen,—

We have just learned that the magnificent chime of bells obtained by the subscriptions of present and former citizens, irrespective of creed will be laid down in Peterboro before June 1st, the makers giving their opinion that it will be possible if desired to inaugurate the chimes on or after June 3. The inauguration of this, the largest chime of bells in Canada, in which so large a body of citizens is interested should be made a patriotic festival of considerable importance and a memorable occasion in the history of our City. Enquiries are already being made as to the date by old Peterboro citizens in other places and it is probable many of them would desire to be present.

As to this date it would seem now to be too late to arrange for the Kings birthday, June 3, with the added uncertainty as to the completion of the work by then. On the first of July, the 57th Regiment, which we expect will take part in the ceremony will be out of the City so that Coronation Day, June 22, seems to be the best choice and most appropriate for a patriotic demonstration. The Chimes Committee desire to know whether the day will be kept as a public holiday or whether the Mayor and Council would think it well to proclaim it as such.

The Committee which has so far dealt with this matter is a small one and advice and cooperation will be thankfully received with a view to satisfactorily carrying out a plan which will be in the interests of our City generally. The Chimes have been named the People's Chimes and will be operated in the public interests. The manner of their operation is to be worked out as is found to be expedient for the public welfare and I may add that the Toronto Globe has arranged to devote a pictorial supplement largely to the picturing and description of this unique event.

Thankfully yours,

J. C. DAVIDSON,

Chairman Chimes Committee.

FINE LECTURE ON SOUTH AMERICA BY SENOR RAY

Famous South American Explorer Lectures on Habits and Customs of Natives—Tells of Cannibal District and of Strange Savage Customs—Great Cities and Horrible Revolutions.

A large crowd of citizens, representing all denominations of the city, were present at Park street Baptist church last evening to hear the lecture by Senor Ray, of Bolivia, on the habits and customs of the natives, on South America, the necessity of missionary aid, the great buildings, and the advancement of the country as far as worldly advancement is concerned.

Mr. Ray, whose home is in Toronto, has spent a great many years in South America, and has had the privilege of seeing a country which very few white men are familiar with.

cannot express an opinion without having officials of the fire department or any other department take it up, write a letter and have it published in the papers, practically calling him a liar, it is not as it should be. A poor, innocent fool who could write a letter, wrote this one and these two men read it and it was published in the paper. The committee raised the point and would not stand it any longer. The Chief discharged the man who wrote the letter. Who was the guilty party, the man who wrote the letter, or the men who told him to write it.

Ald. Metheral went on to say that things were not being conducted rightly at the fire hall and went after Chief Howard, raking up some matters that the council had heard of before. He further stated that one man had quit because Chief Howard had called him down for not blacking his (the Chief's) boots after he had been on duty all night.

Ald. Morgan said that he was prepared to stand by the report of his committee. Things were not right at the hall, and not as they should be. He said that there was nothing but a bunch of raw recruits, even if some citizens imagined that they had a good fire department. The reason that the men did not stay was not because of wages, as was alleged. Mr. Grange was a hard man to get along with. Ald. Morgan intimated that the council might have to go further and start at the head of the department.

Ald. Buller's amendment was then put and the yeas and nays called for with the following result:

Yeas—Ald. Buller, Anderson, Edgar and Bradburn.

Nays—Ald. Metheral, Morgan, Kerneghan, Graham, Brown and Duncan.

Ald. Brown moved that the men be asked to apologize and in the event of their doing so that they be kept on, but there was no seconder to the motion and the report went through, as read.

PUBLIC INAUGURATION OF CHIMES SUGGESTED JUNE 22

The following letter from Rev. Canon Davidson, Chairman of the Chimes Committee was read at last night's meeting of the Council and referred to a Committee:—

Gentlemen,—

We have just learned that the magnificent chime of bells obtained by the subscriptions of present and former citizens, irrespective of creed will be laid down in Peterboro before June 1st, the makers giving their opinion that it will be possible if desired to inaugurate the chimes on or after June 3. The inauguration of this, the largest chime of bells in Canada, in which so large a body of citizens is interested should be made a patriotic festival of considerable importance and a memorable occasion in the history of our City. Enquiries are already being made as to the date by old Peterboro citizens in other places and it is probable many of them would desire to be present.

As to this date it would seem now to be too late to arrange for the Kings birthday, June 3, with the added uncertainty as to the completion of the work by then. On the first of July, the 57th Regiment, which we expect will take part in the ceremony will be out of the City so that Coronation Day, June 22, seems to be the best choice and most appropriate for a patriotic demonstration. The Chimes Committee desire to know whether the day will be kept as a public holiday or whether the Mayor and Council would think it well to proclaim it as such.

The Committee which has so far dealt with this matter is a small one and advice and cooperation will be thankfully received with a view to satisfactorily carrying out a plan which will be in the interests of our City generally. The Chimes have been named the People's Chimes and will be operated in the public interests. The manner of their operation is to be worked out as is found to be expedient for the public welfare and I may add that the Toronto Globe has arranged to devote a pictorial supplement largely to the picturing and description of this unique event.

Thankfully yours,
J. C. DAVIDSON,
Chairman Chimes Committee.

WANTS AN INQUIRY

Hon. Frank Oliver Absolutely Denies Insinuation and Courts an Investigation—Greeted With Cheers

FARMERS' BANK CASE

Ottawa, May 3.—On the request of Hon. Frank Oliver, whose name has been connected with charges made in a Toronto evening paper, Sir Wilfrid Laurier moved, when the Commons met yesterday afternoon, the appointment of a special committee to fully investigate the circumstances. The Minister of the Interior, who rose at the opening of the House, made a brief denial of the insinuation that anything other than the public interests had inspired his actions, and asked that a committee should be forthwith appointed to thoroughly investigate. His statement was greeted with prolonged Liberal cheers.

"Before the orders of the day are called," said Hon. Mr. Oliver, "I desire to read a despatch from Ottawa, which appeared in The Toronto World of Friday morning last."

The despatch set forth two distinct statements. One was to the effect that an order-in-council, dated May, 1908, gave the Canadian Northern Railway the privilege of transferring their choice of 600,000 acres of land earned through a railway subsidy grant, from Manitoba to the wheat lands of Saskatchewan. The other was that subsequently two amounts, one for $50,000 and the other for $19,000, had been deposited to the credit of Hon. Mr. Oliver in the Imperial Bank, Edmonton, this money having come from the Manhattan Bank of New York City.

After reading this newspaper statement, Mr. Oliver noted that no direct statement of any charge against him had been made. No connection was alleged or inferred between the transfer of the land and the alleged deposit of the money to his credit, but the statements were placed side by side for the purpose of creating connection.

Mr. Oliver declared that there was no foundation for such insinuation. The order-in-council had been passed on his recommendation and he had made that recommendation in the public interest. No money had been paid to him or anyone, in connection with the order-in-council.

No special charge had been made, declared Mr. Oliver, nevertheless he would ask that a special committee of the House be named to enquire into any charge which might be made in connection with this matter.

Sir Wilfrid then moved for the appointment of a select committee of five members of the House, to enquire into the matter to which the Minister of the Interior had referred.

R. L. Borden enquired as to the scope of the committee.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier said the committee would enquire under oath into all the circumstances surrounding the issue of this order-in-council.

Mr. Borden suggested the advisability of allowing the formal motion to stand over till to-day. To this the Prime Minister agreed. The matter there ended.

By 97 to 63, or a majority of 34, the Government yesterday voted down a motion by Haughton Lennox to pass a vote of censure on Hon. W. S. Fielding and the Treasury Board in connection with the Farmers' Bank failure. The motion read as follows: "The House regrets that in permitting the Farmers' Bank of Canada to commence and to continue business, the Minister of Finance and the Treasury Board failed to exercise such proper care and to take such reasonable precautions as were necessary to prevent evasion of the law and to protect the public interest."

The arguments brought forward were somewhat similar to those used when the Opposition recently moved for the appointment of a royal commission to enquire into the affairs of the defunct Institution, which motion was also defeated. Mr. Lennox said that without imputing to the Minister of Finance any wilful wrong or misconduct or want of good faith, he did deserve in his pubic capacity the censure of the House for inflicting a great wrong on a deserving class of people in this country. Mr. Fielding had been repeatedly warned that the promoters of the bank were not the best class of people to whom to grant a certificate, and he was also warned that there was an evasion of the Bank Act.

Mr. Fielding replied that it was much easier to be wise at a later stage than at the beginning. After all that had occurred, however, they must come to the conclusion that it was not the only step that was unfortunate, and for others Parliament was responsible. Four and a half years ago Travers was a reputable citizen. Accordingly, when Travers swore the affidavit regarding the deposit money of the Farmers' Bank, it was accepted. If Travers was known to be a criminal, was it conceivable that the Province of Ontario would have deposited $25,000 in the Farmers' Bank? he asked. However, nobody had suffered any loss, through the notes being irregular.

Five Persons Are Drowned In New Brunswick Accident.

Edmundston, N.B., May 3.—The saddest accident in the history of Edmundston happened here on Monday night, by which five lives were lost The wire used in running the ferry between this place and Madawaska, Maine, broke, when the boat was in the middle of the river, and the boat upset and all but one of the occupants drowned. The river is running high and is icy cold, so that those who were thrown into the river had little chance to help themselves. Those drowned are: Solomon Herbert, aged 22; Calixte Dufour, aged 40, both of St. David, Maine; Allen Phillips, aged 18, son of H. W. Phillips, C.P.R. station agent here; Isidore Moscovic, 14 years old, son of Joseph Moscovic, merchant, and a middle-aged man whose name cannot be learned.

Zepherin Dagle, who was in charge of the boat, was saved, but was unconscious when brought ashore. A boat with several men started out as soon as the accident was noticed, but the current was too swift for them to overtake those struggling in the water.

Mrs. Phillips was watching the boat in which her son was coming across the river, and the boy had waved a signal to her just before the wire rope broke.

Steamship Aletha Grounded.

Kingston, May 3.—Making a trip up the bay at 8 a.m. yesterday the steamer Aletha of the Bay of Quinte Navigation Co. met with a serious mishap. A steam pipe burst and one passenger, A. Ryder, manager of the Feldspar Mines, Verona, was badly scalded. Losing her controlling power the steamer finally grounded in Navy Bay. In order to keep the vessel from doing herself injury, a seacock was opened and water allowed to run in. The passengers were taken off in a yawlboat. Many were badly frightened and had life-preservers on. The damage to the vessel will not be very great.

Landed In Lifeboat.

Brockville, May 3.—Coming from Alexandra Bay Monday in the dense fog, the steamer Island Belle ran high and dry on the washout near the five-mile lighthouse in American waters.

The mail and two passengers landed in a lifeboat on the Canadian shore at Shoal Ferry, and proceeding to Brockville secured the services of the steamer Bigelow, which released the Belle, which sustained no damage. The shoal is one of the dangerous spots in the American channel, usually marked by a black buoy, which had not yet been placed in position.

Schooner Wrecked.

Halifax, May 3.—Job Bros. received a cablegram from Newfoundland stating that their schooner Cardinal had gone ashore at Lamaline Island, in a dense fog, and is a total wreck. The crew of eight were saved. No further particulars were given.

The Cardinal left here with 100 tons of coal for St. John's, Nfld., on April 28. She was partly covered by insurance. The cargo was also insured.

Schooner Burned.

San Juan, P.R., May 3.—An explosion on a Standard Oil lighter in Mayaguez harbor Monday night, set fire to the schooner Mary Bradford Pierce of Thomaston, Me. Capt. Lane and his crew escaped, but the fire in the vessel was still burning to-day and will cause a total loss. The schooner is valued at $30,000.

Schooner In Collision.

City Island, N.Y., May 3.—The schooner Palmetto (Br.) Guttendenburg of Lunenburg, N.S., while sailing through Hell Gate yesterday, was in collision with a New York, New Haven and Hartford car float, stove in her bow and broke her windlass, bowsprit and all head gear attached.

THE NEW BISHOP

Archdeacon W. R. Clark of Hamilton, is Elected Bishop of Niagara to Succeed the Late Bishop DuMoulin

A HARD CONTEST

Hamilton, May 3.—Venerable Archdeacon W. R. Clark of this city was last night elected Bishop of Niagara to succeed the late Bishop DuMoulin. This result was attained at 10.30 p.m. on the fifth ballot. He had 40 clergy and 35 votes, 38 clergy and 33 lay being required to elect. Rev. Dr. Patterson Smythe of Montreal was second in the balloting, with 20 clerical and 25 lay votes. None of other candidates whose name had been mentioned for the office received enough support to make them serious factors in the election.

Venerable Archdeacon William Reid Clark, the bishop-elect of Niagara, was born in Russell County in 1851, and is therefore 60 years of age. The early years of his life were spent on his father's farm. His education was received at Bishop's College, Lennoxville, Que., and in Trinity College, Toronto. In the latter institution he took his M.A. and B.A. He was ordained deacon in the cathedral at Ottawa in 1874, and two years later was priested in the cathedral at Hamilton. Afterwards he was principal and mathematical instructor in the Uxbridge High School. For 18 months he was missionary at Palmerston, and for two years curate-in-charge at Burlington, while for the next three years he served as rector of Barton and Glanford. Then for the long term of twenty-one years he lived at Ancaster as incumbent and rector. He then came to Hamilton and has been archdeacon of the diocese for the last eight years. For three years he acted as secretary of the Provincial Synod. He is at present secretary of General Synod of Canada. Archdeacon Clark's natural qualities and long experience eminently fit him for the high office to which he was elected last night. His humble piety combined with zeal for the best interests of the church, have distinguished him among his fellowmen, while his administrative and executive ability have been placed beyond question by the manner in which he has discharged his duties since he has been in charge of the Synod of Niagara. It is the general feeling among all classes that a better man could not have been chosen.

CALLS IT CONSPIRACY.

Chamberlain Hyde of New York Will Resign His Job.

New York, May 3.—Chas. H. Hyde, a native of Truro, N.S., will resign as city chamberlain at once. Under indictments and under the fire of practically every newspaper in New York, he announced last night that, although he is the victim of "one of the most wicked conspiracies in the history of the city," he will relinquish his position as custodian of the city's millions in order not to embarrass the Gaynor administration.

Indicted secretly late Monday on two counts, one charging him with bribery, the other with taking an unlawful fee, the city chamberlain pleaded guilty in the criminal branch of the Supreme Court yesterday afternoon, with permission to change or withdraw the plea up to May 16, and was released under $7,500 bail, furnished by Daniel S. McElroy, commissioner of taxes.

Detained at Quarantine.

Montreal, May 3.—The Dominion Liner Dominion, from Liverpool, which arrived at Quebec last night, was delayed for some time at the quarantine station at Gros Isle, owing to there being two suspected smallpox cases aboard. Two hundred and twenty-eight of the passengers who had been traveling in the same division as the suspects were landed at the quarantine station with two weeks' supplies before the steamer could come on to Quebec.

Carpenters Return to Work.

Kingston, May 3.—The carpenters were given an increase to 35 cents a day and returned to work, but the masons' helpers are still out. The stonecutters and masons have not yet settled their disagreement and work on Queen's new building is still held up.

CLAUSE PASSED

MR. BALFOUR'S COMMENT

London, May 3.—After the application of closure, clause two of the Parliament bill, which is the most important clause of the Government's measure for the curtailment of the powers of the House of Lords, was carried in the House of Commons last night, 299 to 195. Later clause three of the bill, providing that "any certificate of the Speaker of the House shall not be questioned in any court of law," was carried after closure, 256 to 132.

Clause two relates to any bill other than a money bill, and provides that if any such bill is passed by the House of Commons in three successive sessions and is rejected by the House of Lords at each of these sessions it shall become an act of Parliament on the royal assent. In amended form it provides that the two years delay shall be calculated from the date of the passing of the second reading of the bill in the House of Commons.

Before the vote was taken, Winston Spencer Churchill, the Home Secretary, said that the adoption of the clause was imperative, because there had come about a complete paralysis of the working constitution and denial of all form of redress to those who did not belong to the Conservative party. The safeguards which the clause left the House of Lords for delay and revision, he said, would still place the Liberals under great disabilities as compared with the Conservatives. That was the reason why reform of the House of Lords should follow as the complement of the Parliament bill.

Mr. Balfour, leader of the Opposition, declared that the real purpose of the bill was not improvement of the constitution, but the carrying of home rule. The Government had succumbed to the threats and cajoleries of the Nationalists and Laborites.

Again, by the aid of the closure, the remaining clauses, four, five and six, were adopted without amendment by large majorities.

Clause four provides "that nothing in this act shall diminish or qualify the existing rights and privileges of the House of Commons."

Clause five reads: "Five years shall be substituted for seven years as the time fixed for the maximum duration of Parliament under the Septennial Act, 1715.

Passed Three Bylaws.

Whitby, May 3.—The Town Council made a record session by sitting until an early hour yesterday morning, during which they passed three bylaws of extraordinary interest. Two of them will be voted upon by the electors on Monday, June 5, next. One is for the ratification of the agreement with the Seymour Power & Electric Co., by which cheap power from the Trent River is assured for delivery this summer. The maximum charge for current is $25 per horse power per year.

The other bylaw requiring the approval of the electors is one accepting from Mr. Andrew Carnegie a free public library building.

The third bylaw authorizes an agreement with the Markham and Pickering Independent Telephone Co., under which immediate construction of lines coupling up the system with the county town will be begun.

Prominent Kingston Lawyer Dead.

Kingston, May 3.—Robert Rogers, K.C., LL.D., died at four o'clock yesterday morning after an illness extending over three months. He was 68 years of age, and one of the city's oldest lawyers. He was the youngest son of the late Rev. R. V. Rogers, head master of the old Kingston Grammar School, and was a lecturer in law at Queen's and a member of the firm of Kirkpatrick, Rogers & Nicle. For many years he was lay secretary of the Ontario Synod.

Senate on Grain Bill.

Ottawa, May 3.—The Senate spent the whole of yesterday's sitting in committee on the grain bill. Sir Richard Cartwright proposed several amendments, the principal one providing that the Grain Commission should license as hospitals for the treatment of damaged or rejected grain, such a number of elevators at terminal points as they chose.

Cheaper Power For Galt.

Galt, May 3.—Galt Council has adopted a method of charging for Hydro-Electric power similar to those of other towns in the Power Union. This will give Galt power a great deal cheaper than the present rates from the company. A bylaw to raise $25,000 to extend the lighting system, so that all may benefit, will be voted on on May 29.

New Treaty of Commerce.

Berlin, May 3.—A new treaty of commerce between Germany and Sweden, under the new Swedish tariff, has been signed.

Auto Factory for Palmerston.

Palmerston, May 3.—This town voted Monday on a bylaw to raise $10,000 to buy and remodel the old carriage factory building, for use as an automobile factory. There were six adverse votes in a total of 256, leaving about 90 over the three-fifths required to carry the bylaw.

Toronto Inaugurates Hydro.

Toronto, May 3.—Striving vainly to make his voice heard above the thundering roar of thousands upon thousands of people, punctuated by piercing shrieks as women here and there in the surging crowd collapsed in fainting fits, Sir James Whitney last night officially inaugurated Hydro-Electric power in Toronto.

The inauguration provided a spectacle that challenges description. It was not carried off according to the program as carefully mapped out; Mayor Geary shouted a few sentences that not even those standing a few feet away could hear, Sir James fared little better, and in the excitement of the crowd's charge the civic officials threw their program to the winds, and not a word was heard then from the man whose splendid optimism, courage and tireless energy made the whole thing possible — Hon. Adam Beck. The address of the "Power Minister" was made inside the City Hall some time later.

Trial of Directors.

Toronto, May 3.—To-day is set for the first step in the prosecution of the Farmers' Bank cases, before Chief Justice Meredith, in the criminal assizes.

The court will take up the charge of conspiracy to fraudulently secure the certificate of the Treasury Board of Canada, which allowed the Farmers' Bank to commence business. Upon this charge the grand jury yesterday indicted John Watson, John Ferguson, Alex. Fraser and A. E. Lown, the provisional directors of the bank; Clark H. Smith, secretary; Dr. Beattie Nesbitt and J. J. Warren and J. R. Stratton, M.P.

Given Long Sentences.

Berlin, Ont., May 3.—Ernie Hamil and William Southwell, who pleaded guilty to the charges of theft and of receiving stolen goods, respectively, in connection with the robbery of the local G.T.R. ticket office, were yesterday sentenced by Magistrate Wier. Hamil gets four years and Southwell three in the penitentiary.

Appointed Lieutenant-Governor.

Quebec, May 3.—Sir Francois Langelier, acting chief justice of the Supreme Court, wired yesterday morning to Ottawa his final acceptance of the position of Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec, to succeed Sir Alphonse Pelletier.

Kingston Retail Merchants.

Kingston, May 3.—E. T. Stacey was yesterday elected president of the Retail Merchants' Association; W. H. Dyde, vice-president; George Mills, treasurer, and Howard Marshall, secretary.

We Go To SPECIALISTS

When we wish to have our teeth treated, do we call on the family physician or a nerve specialist? Not at all, we consult a man in the dental profession who has, by specialization on the organs of digestion and mastication, the proper scientific knowledge and skill to alleviate the sufferings produced by these particular organs. On the other hand, if our nerves are all unstrung and we are bordering on the verge of a nervous collapse, we give little thought to the dental surgeon and consult a specialist on neurosis. We should be just as careful who we have treat our eyesight. The eyes are one of the most important organs of the body, and should be treated only by a Specialist.

We are Specialists in the correcting of all errors of refraction in the Eye. We do all our own Lens Grinding, thus assuring promptness and positive accuracy.

"THE BLACK CROSS"

By OLIVE H. BRIGGS

CHAPTER XI.

The room was long, and low, and bare, lighted in the four corners by lamps, small and ill-smelling. The ceiling was blackened by the smoke from them, and the air was heavy, clouding the window-panes. At one end of the room was a raised platform, and on the platform sat two gypseys; the one was dark, in a picturesque, tattered costume, with a scarf about his waist, and a violin; the other was slight, with golden curls clipped short, and a ragged jacket of velveteen, worn at the elbows.

The floor of the room was crowed with dancers; sturdy, square-faced moujiks in high boots; and their sweethearts in kerchiefs and short skirts. The moujiks perspired, stamping the boards with their boots until the lamps rattled and shook, and the smoke rolled out of the chimneys; embracing the heavy forms of the women with hands worn and still grimy with toil.

"One, two—one, two—one, two, three—curtsey and turn—one, two, three."

The dark-haired gypsey sat limply in his chair, playing, his back half turned to the room. There was no music before him. He improvised as he played, snatches of themes once forgotten, woven and bound with notes of his own. His eyes were closed; he swayed a little in his chair, holding the violin close to his cheek.

"One, two—one, two—one, two, three."

The younger gypsey sat cross-legged on the floor, gazing down at the whirling crowd, blurred by the smoke. In his hands he held a tambourine, which he shook occasionally in rythm with the waltz, glancing over his shoulder at his companion and laughing. Occasionally they whispered together.

"You play too well, Velasco! Hist—scratch with the bow!"

"I can't Kaya, it is maddening!"

"Just a little, Velasco."

"Is that better? Tsyyacha-chertei, how it rasps one's ears!"

"Yes, but your technique, Velasco! No gypsy could play like that! Leave out the double stops and the trills!"

"I forget, little one, I forget! The Stradivarius plays itself. Keep the castanet rattling and then I will remember."

"Velasco, hist—st! There are strangers standing by the door; they have just come! Scratch a little more, just a little. Your tone is so deep and so pure. When you rubato, and then quicken suddenly, and the notes come in a rush like that, I can hardly keep still. My pulses are leaping, dancing! One, two—one, two, three!"

"Is that right? Don't ask me to scratch, Kaya! I can't bear it so close to my ear. The din of their stamping is frightful, the swine! No one will notice."

The whispering ceased. The gypsey bent his dark head again and the violin played on. "One, two—one, two, three!"

All of a sudden, voices began to call out from the floor, here and there among the dancers, irritated and angry; then an oath or two: "Keep time, Bradjaga, keep time!" Their heels beat against the floor.

The landlord crossed the room hastily, edging in and out among the dancers; he was frowning and rubbing his hands one over the other. When he reached the platform, he leaned on it with his elbows and beckoned to the gypsies.

"You don't play badly," he called, "not badly at all; but Dimitri, the old man, he suited them better. He always came strong on the beat. Play the old tunes, Bradjaga; something they know with a crash on the first, like this."

He clapped his hands: "One, two, three! One, two, three! And fast—just so, all the time."

"Chort vozmi!" (the devil take you) cried Velasco, "They don't like my playing! Don't clap your hands again—don't! The racket is enough to split one's ear-drums!"

He dropped his violin on his knees and stared blinking at the landlord, who was still gesticulating and taking little skipping steps by way of illustration.

"One, two, three—one, two, three! So, loud and strong! Just try it, Bradjaga!"

Velasco blinked again and a flush came slowly in his cheeks; "My poor Stradivarius," he said slowly in Polish, "They don't like you; they prefer a common fiddler with a crash on the beat! Bozhe moi! Kaya, do you hear?"

The younger gypsey made a sound half startled, half laughing, drawing nearer to him on the platform. "Hist, Velasco! They are peasants; they do not know! Ah, be careful—the strangers are crossing the floor. They are looking at you and talking together! I knew it, I feared it!"

The dancing had stopped, and threading their way through the groups came several ladies and a gentleman.

"Bradjaga," said the landlord. "This is Ivan Petrokoff, the famous musician of Moscow, who has deigned to honour my humble house with his presence. He wishes to examine your instrument."

The gentleman nodded brusquely, and stretched out a fat hand. He was short and quite bald, and he stuttered as he spoke. "Quite a d-decent fiddle for a gypsey," he said, "Let me s-see it!"

Velasco bowed with his hand on his heart: "It is mine," he said in a humble voice, "A thousand pardons, Barin! Impossible!"

"I will p-pay for it!" said the gentleman angrily, "How much do you w-want?"

Velasco smiled and put his hand to his heart again, shrugging his shoulders.

"Not that it is of any p-particular value," continued Petrokoff, "but I like the t-tone. I will give you —hm —s-sixty-five roubles!"

Velasco drew the bow softly over the strings; he was still smiling.

"Seventy! That is exorbitant for a g-gypsey's fiddle! You could buy a d-dozen other instruments for that, just as good! Come—will you t-take it?"

Velasco began to trill softly on the G string, and then swept over the arch with an arpeggio pianissimo.

"You are like a J-Jew!" exclaimed the musician. "You want to bargain! One hundred roubles then! There!" He turned to the landlord, stretching out his fat hands, palms upwards. "Absurd isn't it? The f-fellow must be mad!"

"Mad indeed," echoed the landlord. "A miserable, tattered bradjaga who can't even keep time. You heard yourself, Professor, how he changed the beat and threw the dancers out every moment or so. They are nothing but tramps; but if you want a fiddle, Barin, old Dimitri, who is sick in bed with the rheumatism in his legs, he will sell you his for a quarter the price and be thankful. A nice little instrument, fine and well polished, not old and yellow with the back worn!"

He twiddled his fingers in contempt.

Velasco ran lightly a scale over the strings. His hair fell over his brows and he half closed his eyes, gazing at the musician through the slits mockingly.

"Are you really the great Petrokoff?" he said, "The Professor of the Violin known through all Russia! From Moscow? Even the gypsies have heard of you!"

The Professor lifted his fingers to his lips and blew on them as if to warm the ends, which were flat and stubbed from much playing on the strings: "Humph!" he said, "You are only a boy! You are talented, it is true; but what do you know of violinists? You ought to be studying."

"That is true, Barin," said Velasco humbly. "I am only a poor gypsey; I know nothing!"

"Let me see your hand and your arm," said Petrokoff, "Yes, the shape is excellent; the muscles are good. You need training of course. If you come to the Conservatory at Moscow, I may be able to procure for you a scholarship for one of my classes."

"Ah, Barin—your Excellence, how kind you are!" murmured the gypsey. "I should like it above all things! Would the Barin teach me himself?"

"Certainly," said Petrokoff, loftily. "Certainly: but you would have to pass an examination. Your bowing, for instance, is bad! You should hold your arm so, and your wrist like this."

"Like this?" murmured Velasco, curving his wrist first in one way, then in another. "That is indeed difficult, Barin."

"Give the bow to me," said Petrokoff. "Now, let me show you! I am very particular about that with all my pupils. There—that is better."

The gypsey brushed a lock from his eyes and took up the bow carefully, as if he were handling an egg with the shell broken. "Ah—so?" he said "Of course! And can you play with your wrist like that, Barin?"

Petrokoff stretched out his hand and took the violin from the gypsey's arms: "Give it to me," he said. "You notice how limpid, how rich the tone! That comes from the method. You will learn it in time; the secret lies in the bowing, the way the wrist is held—so!"

Velasco opened his eyes wide: "Oh, how clumsy I am in comparison!" he said wistfully. "Your scale, Barin! I never heard such a scale." He gave a swift glance over his shoulder at his companion with a low whistle of astonishment.

"Your comrade seems to be choking," said one of the ladies, "I never heard any one cough so. Is he consumptive?"

"No—no!" said the gypsey. "It is probably a crumb of bread gone the wrong way; or the dust blown about by the dancing. He will recover. Barin—now tell me, do I hold the elbow right?"

"Not at all. The arm must be—so!"

"Ah—so?"

"That is better."

The gypsey ran his fingers over the strings in exact imitation of Petrokoff. The tone was thin, and his fingers moved stiffly as it weighted. His face wore an anxious expression. "Dear me!" he exclaimed. "It is more difficult than I imagined. Does every violinist hold his bow like that?"

Petrokoff cleared his throat and his chest swelled a little under his coat. "Bradjaga, I have taught the violin for twenty-five years—there is no other way."

The gypsey sighed. "My own way is so much simpler," he said, "Look!" His fingers flew over the neck of the Stradivarius in harmonics, swift and sure as the flight of a hawk; his bow seemed to leap in his hand, and when he reached the top note of all, high, clear and sweet, he trilled on it softly, swelling out into a tone pure and strange like the sighing of wind in the tree-tops. The hair fell over his brows, and for a moment there was silence in the room.

Kaya had stopped coughing; she had clapped one hand over her mouth to still the sound, and her blue eyes were fixed on one of the ladies, who was staring hard at the gypsey. They were listening intently. Petrokoff stood with his hands clasped over his waistcoat, his head a little to one side, nodding gently from time to time, as if listening to a pupil in his class room.

"Yes," he began, "as I said before, you have talent. I think I could make something out of you; but your bowing is very bad, very bad; your method is abominable! It would never be allowed in the Conservatory; and your harmonics—bah!"

He shrugged his shoulders, spreading his fat fingers in disgust. "Give me the violin again; it is too good an instrument for a boy. If you come to Moscow, I will give you two hundred roubles, just out of charity. The instrument isn't worth the half, as you know. But I have a good heart. I am interested in your progress. With the two hundred roubles you can pay for your lodging and food. The harmonics—listen! They should sound like this."

He played a few notes on the top of the instrument, shrill and shrieking. The gypsey stretched out his arms eagerly.

"Let me try, Barin!" he cried, "So—so?"

The harmonics seemed to squeak in derision; they flatted, and the sound was like the wheels of a cart unoiled.

"Stop!" cried Petrokoff, "It is horrible! For the love of heaven, Bradjaga, stop!"

The gypsey drew the bow slowly, and lingeringly over the flatted notes. It was like the wail of a soul in inferno; a shriek like a devil laughing.

"Ha—ha!" cried Velasco. "Now I understand! That is what you were after, Barin?"

Petrokoff eyed him sharply.

In Search Of Beauty

You Must First Win Health by Getting the Blood Rich and Red

DR. CHASE'S NERVE FOOD

Every man and every woman has an individual idea of what constitutes beauty.

Is beauty skin deep or does it depend on the glow which health alone can give? Is it due to regularity of feature or to the gracefulness and elasticity which accompany health and vigour?

To win beauty you must first gain health. Rich, red blood is the secret. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is successful and popular because it forms rich, red blood and in this way gives gracefulness to every movement and a healthful, natural glow to the complexion.

Thin blood and weak nerves soon give one a tired, worn out appearance. Worry and anxiety show themselves in wrinkles and care lines. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food enriches the blood, restores vigour to the nerves and drives away headaches and bodily pains.

By filling the arteries with new, red blood, Dr. Chase's Nerve Food rounds out the form to healthful proportions, makes the muscles and tissues firm and strong and gives vivacity to mind and body.

THE CANON'S NEAREST RELATIVE

A Short Story

"What is the likeness between a diplomatic secret and treacle?"

"Reggie, you are fatiguing."

"Do you give it up?"

His mother made no answer, but re-arranged the white chiffon streamers of her cap.

"Because neither of them can be committed to paper without fear of leakage," the young man informed her, imperturbably.

"Yes, that's rather good, Reggie," remarked his sister, turning from the window, where she had been standing listlessly looking out at the rain.

"Don't encourage him, Hilda."

"Oh, but I am encouraged! So little stimulates me! What is the difference between—"

"None! Absolutely none!" cried his sister.

"Between you and the silliest girl in the county? Right, my dear!"

"I do wish that you, as the head of the family, Reggie, would feel your responsibilities more."

"I feel them most acutely, mother."

He sat down opposite and beamed at her. "Buck up!" he advised her. "Nothing was ever so bad but it made it worse to look at its worst side. I express myself clumsily—"

"Yes, you do, Reggie," put in Hilda, from the window.

"But Hilda knows what I mean. That is why she never looks the curate in the face."

"Reggie!"

"A profile is both sides," snapped Hilda.

"Not his," Reggie affirmed.

"Speaking of the curate," their mother began, in her soft, calm voice, "reminds me of your uncle, the Canon."

"And the mention of your uncle, the Canon," her son continued, crossing one knee over the other, and wagging his foot in the air rather impatiently, "naturally brings us to the everlasting topic of his blamed money."

Hilda came slowly from the window and sat down.

"If he would only say to whom he intends to leave it!" she exclaimed.

"And then die. Painlessly, of course."

"Reggie!" his mother expostulated. "We are his nearest relatives," she added.

Their mother echoed Hilda's sigh. "He said 'to one of the family,'" she observed, "and of course that does include the Colstons and Archie Nugent. Mr. Colston is his first cousin—his only cousin, and Archie Nugent is his sister's son. Still, Archie inherits his mother's fortune—he is well provided for. And your dear father was Canon Hannay's only brother—and the Canon must know how badly off Philip left us!"

"No one better," responded Reggie, "considering he paid all the debts, and—"

"Yes, yes; he has acted very generously—so far. And one of the family," he said. He must have meant—"

"I think he has been uncommonly good to us, little Uncle Arthur; and I for one don't want to trouble him further. You and Hilda have got your annuity, mother, and I shall have my profession—"

"But you've also got a large appetite, and a discriminating taste in dress, and a love of expensive sport—"

"Quite true, Hilda. What is the difference between—"

"Expensive sport—you've already mentioned it."

"Of course he'll want to marry!" his mother cried. "Are the Hannays to die out?"

"A little premature, aren't you, mother?"

"If only you children could both marry in the family—it would almost settle the matter of the Canon's money."

Reggie and his sister exchanged quick glances, and their eyes rested on one another for a moment of half amused, half anxious calculation. Then both spoke at once.

"You'd have to marry Archie, Hilda! Alas, poor curate!"

And: "Of course, there is Polly Colston, Reggie!"

"What would be the difference between asking old Colston for his daughter's hand, and my marrying two wives at once?"

Jester Told Her She Did Not Have A Fist Of Good Blood In Her Body.

Mrs. Dosithe P. Cormier, Middle Sackville, N.B., says:

"In the spring of 1897 I was all run down, and the doctor told me I had not a pint of good blood in my body. I took different remedies from doctors, but they did not seem to do me any good. After having taken a lot of different other kinds of medicine, and they did not seem to benefit me, I was almost in despair and did not know what to do until my husband met a lady and told her about my sickness and she told him to try Burdock Blood Bitters as she had received the greatest benefit from using it. My husband went and bought me a bottle, and after having taken it I felt better, so I kept on using one bottle after another until I had taken six in all and then I was strong and well. I am positive that my being alive to-day is due to the use of Burdock Blood Bitters. One spring since then I was not feeling very well and had a lot of work to do. I thought I would procure a bottle of Burdock Blood Bitters and after I had taken two I was able to do a lot of hard work all the summer, and I never felt better in my life. In the winter of 1905 I had Pneumonia, and it left me with a severe pain in the left side. Every morning when I would get out of bed I had to sit down for a while it was so painful. After I had used Burdock Blood Bitters the pain disappeared completely. It has also cured me of bleeding piles. I have received so much benefit from Burdock Blood Bitters that you may publish this as it may help others as it has me."

"Reggie—remember your sister is present!"

"Well, he did not say he was going to do either, mother."

"The one would be a case of 'Gie me Polly,' and the other would be a case of 'polly-gie-me.'"

The door was opened and the maid announced—

"Mr. Nugent!"

"We were talking of Uncle Arthur," said Reggie, mischievously, when the greetings were over.

Mrs. Hannay and Hilda grew a little pink and confused, and shot reproachful glances at the incorrigible Reginald.

"How is your Uncle, Archie?" asked Mrs. Hannay quickly, and with an air of deep concern. "You have seen him since we did, I think?"

The young man, who was of rather a stolid build, with a grave and self-important air, and small eyes set rather too near together, slowly took the seat that Reggie pushed carelessly towards him, placed it deliberately, sat down, and answered with an air of deep concern:

"Uncle Arthur seems particularly well."

"I am so glad!" Mrs. Hannay assured him, the least shade too fervently.

Reggie took his seat on a corner of the table behind the group, and tried to catch his sister's eye and make her laugh; but she studiously averted it.

"I was just saying to Hilda and Reggie, before you came in, that he has been so wonderfully kind to us," remarked the widow, again readjusting her chiffon streamers.

The young man eyed her gravely. Then his eye sought Hilda, whose clear-cut little profile and colorless hair looked well against a wall of pale amber.

"Indeed," he said, meditatively.

"He has about adopted you, hasn't he?" Reggie asked, with the careless directness of an easy conscience. His mother and sister, after hasty glances of consternation at the bold questioner, both hung on the reply.

Archie Nugent fidgetted. "Not exactly," he admitted.

"But you are his nearest kin, and a homeless orphan—he really ought to," insisted Reggie.

"Well, if I were you Archie, I'd play up to him a bit," Reggie said, slipping down from the table and patting his cousin on the back. "He has lots of shekels to dispose of, you know."

"Reginald! How can you say such things—even in joke? It is the worst taste! Your dear father's only brother! Your own uncle!"

Her cousin looked thoughtfully at her. Then he turned to the mother.

"Uncle Arthur told me last night," he said, with immense gravity, "that he contemplated making a new will."

The others ceased all pretence at unconcern. Even Reggie looked interested.

"Did he say—" Mrs. Hannay gasped.

"He said—he intended to leave the main bulk of his property—"

"Yes!"

"To his nearest relative."

"Oh!"

"Yes! And then?"

"And then—he laughed softly to himself!"

"How very strange!"

"It must be one of us—we are his only relatives," Archie added, slowly.

"Except the Colstons."

"Oh—the Colstons! They are only cousins. And he does not like the daughter."

Again the young man's eyes sought Hilda. She dropped her demurely. She was the Canon's only niece, and was at that moment at work on a piece of red embroidery for Whit Sunday.

"Doesn't he like Polly?" asked Mrs. Hannay; and as she said it she looked at her son.

"Now that is odd," he said instantly, as he caught her look. "Because Polly Colston has an indescribable charm. By the way—he hates me! I asked him how we know that Ruth was impolite to Boaz."

"And how do we know?" inquired Archie, with a gleam in his eyes, which were certainly too near his nose.

"You did not ask him that?" Mrs. Hannay stood upright in her wrath.

"I did! Fact! And he said it was irreverent."

Archie stood up to go.

"Will you walk with me as far as the gate, Hilda?" he inquired.

As Archie followed her out of the door and shut it after them, Reggie turned to his mother and whistled. There was a sort of amused sadness in his eyes.

"Young people are changed since my day!" he murmured.

Sickness is usually caused by the accumulation of waste matter and impurities within the body.

"Do you think he means to propose?" the mother cried.

"Well—he made his intentions very evident," the brother answered.

His cheek reddened suddenly, and he made a step as if to follow them, and then as suddenly stopped. "After all, it is Hilda's affair," he said.

"It would be an excellent thing—anyway," Mrs. Hannay answered.

* * * * * *

The Colstons were present, looking moody, all except Polly, who acted as bridesmaid, and flirted alternately with Reggie and the by no means inconsolable curate.

Mrs. Hannay could scarcely control her pride; it all seemed so propitious; and when the little celibate Canon found the ring in the piece of bridecake he was nervously crumbling whilst he tried to propose the health of the bride, Mrs. Hannay laughed merrily with the rest at his confusion and collapse.

The church had been crowded to overflowing for the ceremony; but, perhaps out of consideration for the widow's small income, only the family and immediate friends had been bidden to the breakfast. While the bride was upstairs changing her frock the others sauntered into the drawing-room to admire her presents. A pearl necklace, with a heavy pendant set with diamonds, lay in its open case against an ivory Prayer Book.

"Both his gifts," murmured the mother to Mrs. Colston.

"Archie's?" she asked.

"No—no! Her uncle's!"

"Really?" Mrs. Colston took up the case and looked closely at the pendant, and her lips tightened.

"And the dear child values the one as much as the other!" Mrs. Hannay added, impressively, laying the tips of her fingers on the Prayer Book.

Reggie, standing by, shook his head solemnly.

"Very wrong!" he said, "but very human. The day will come when she will be called upon to make her choice. A man cannot serve two masters. What makes us know, Aunt Colston, that a bride—"

But both ladies had turned away, and were examining a silver punch bowl.

Later on in the day, when the hall was strewn with rice and rose leaves, and the bride had long since driven off, with a white satin shoe dangling to the back of the carriage, and Mrs. Hannay was all tears and tiredness, and had said good-bye to the last of her guests, she drew Reggie into her own room.

"I am sorry for you, my boy!" she said. "You must naturally be feeling, as if fate were not so kind to you."

Reggie's honest eyes grew wistful for a moment, and he bent them on her.

"You mean, mother—"

"But he may—especially as dear Archie has already so much—he may divide it between you."

"Your uncle, of course. He may divide his property between you."

"Oh, hang his property! I beg your pardon, mater; but I don't want his property. I've failed in my exam., by the way; I heard it this morning, but didn't want to bother you, and I'm going to chuck the whole thing and go to the Colonies and—"

"Oh, Reggie! And leave me?"

"You have Hilda and the blameless Archie. Do you really want me, mater?"

His eyes softened.

"Indeed I do, my own boy—my big son!"

He drew himself up—six feet of manhood, and laughed a deep, good-humoured laugh. "I've no brains, you know," he said. "I'll never do the family any credit."

"I have another riddle for you to solve, mater," he told her. He bent his head a little over hers, as it rested on his shoulder. "You know Emmie—Miss Winthorp?"

There was a pause. Then she raised her head, as that the arm round her head had sufficient to risk loose her, and she looked up at him.

"Reggie—you have never been so mad!" she exclaimed.

"In church this morning?" he answered, gleefully.

"When?" she cried.

"Just as we all came out of the vestry, and the 'Wedding March' struck up. Everyone had eyes only for the happy pair, and my part in the ceremony was over—I'd given her away. 'Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do,' you know, mater, and I just leant over the edge of her pew as I passed and whispered to her, 'Shall we be the next?'"

"And she answered you?"

"Not she! She said 'hush!'—but as we came out— Well, anyway, it's all settled."

"She hasn't a penny."

"Neither have I."

"Exactly! And you've not passed your examination! It was dishonourable!"

Reggie suddenly grew rigid.

"Look here, mater, seriously, I see your point of view, but it isn't mine. Emmie and I have known one another since we were babies, and we have always—I mean—I have failed in my exam., but I haven't failed all along the line. And isn't it dishonourable to—to—oh, hang it all! You know what I mean. We both cared, and we both knew it. But, if I had not failed in that [illegible] exam., then I should not have [illegible] for the profession of law in [illegible] means waiting, waiting, till your head is grey or as bald as Uncle Arthur's. But now—now I'm free! I went on studying dusty law, as you wished me to, and had spent so much on sending me to college. But now I'm free, and I'm pretty strong and big, so it will be a wonder if I can't work hard enough at something—anything, so long as it is in the open air and the country, and needs muscles and not brains—to support Emmie."

"Oh, Reggie, you are mad! Quite mad! I think I ought, as he is really virtually head of the family, to tell your uncle the [illegible]"

"Oh—I've told him!" her graceless son answered lightly. "I didn't want him to think I was cringing after his pennies, so I told him frankly that I was no go, and should probably adopt the stage as a profession. I thought that would choke him off; but in case it did not, just to make sure, I asked him how we knew for certain that Moses wore a wig!"

"Then you've thrown away all your chances!"

"Well, you cannot deny that he was sometimes seen with Aaron and sometimes without!"

Mrs. Hannay raised her handkerchief to her eyes and left him.

It was a fortnight after the wedding that Canon Hannay called on his sister-in-law. She received him with effusion, and pushed forward her own chair for him, contenting herself with a low wicker seat at his side. The Canon took her chair in unseeing nervousness, and sat folding and unfolding his soft clerical hat. A silence fell upon them, unbroken even by Reggie, who, for once in his life, appeared out of spirits and asked no riddle whatsoever. The truth is that he had that morning realised the possibility that open air work, even for a robust giant of six-and-twenty, might perhaps not be had for asking. But seeing that the Canon was distrait and uncomfortable, he roused himself, threw a log of wood on the fire, turned round with a face that had resumed its habitual cheerfulness, and suggested tea.

"Not for me—not for me!" said the Canon hastily. "The fact is—I came to try and tell you—but, knowing my utterance might fail me, I—I have written it down, and I—I will leave it with you!"

He laid an envelope, directed in his neat, precise little handwriting, on the table, and literally bolted out of the room.

When Reggie returned from opening the front door, he found his mother standing with the torn envelope on the table in front of her, unfolding the letter. She had been unable to restrain her curiosity for a moment.

"Reggie! Reggie!" she cried, "this may be the announcement! Oh, my son!"

"All right—shall I fetch the smelling salts?"

There was a moment's pause whilst Mrs. Hannay's eyes ran rapidly down the first page, and Reggie watched her with the look of amused sadness on his young face that it so often wore. Then Mrs. Hannay, with an inarticulate exclamation, dropped the letter.

"He is going to be married to Miss Jamieson!" she cried out, in a terrible voice.

"You don't say so! Uncle Arthur going to be married to Miss Jamieson? Well done the little Canon! And—by Jove, mater! Of course! I have it—'to his nearest relative!' I suppose a wife counts as one's nearest relative?" Reggie broke into uncontrolled laughter.

Mrs. Hannay stood speechless, staring at him. "If you see anything to laugh at in the downfall of all our hopes!" she gasped.

"Well, if it comes to that, mater—you have a comfortable annuity, Hilda is well off now, and I—never hoped."

Mrs. Hannay vouchsafed no answer. She spread out the fatal letter on the table, and went on reading it.

"After fifty-seven years of bachelorhood," she read.

"Poor devil!" interpolated Reggie.

"But he was a Celibate, my dear! He approved of celibacy for the clergy! I have heard him say so a thousand times!"

Reggie only laughed the more; and Mrs. Hannay, with an indignant look at him, went on reading to herself. Suddenly she gave a little cry.

"Reggie," she exclaimed.

"Well?"

"Listen to this! 'My dear niece Hilda, I was the glad instrument of helping at the time of her marriage to my poor sister Annie's son, a union which caused me inexpressible content. You, too, my dear sister-in-law, have been good enough to allow me to express my respect for the memory of my dear departed brother Philip by assisting you materially in the distressing circumstances in which you found yourself. These things were my duty as well as my privilege. But my nephew Reginald has never allowed me to approach the subject to him, and I deeply respect and appreciate the manly pride he has often evinced, although at times he hides it under a seeming levity that I cannot but deplore. Yet I trust that now, when he contemplates having another to provide for besides himself (on which auspicious event I have already offered my heart-felt felicitations) he will no longer withhold from me the joy of apportioning these worldly possessions of which I regard myself as merely the steward. I have therefore purchased the farm of Sunnylands. It is very small, and at present in neglected condition, and needs energetic supervision. Would Reginald care to undertake it?'"

Reggie seized the wicker chair by one leg and waved it round his head.

"God bless the little man," he cried. "The wind in one's eyes and the rain teeth, and the mud of the long hill-furrow on one's both, and within doors the fireside glow and—and I must off and tell Emmie!"

He ran as quickly to the door as the Canon had done, but after he had shut it he re-opened it and thrust his head in.

"Why do we know that Miss Jamieson has martial blood in her veins?" he inquired.

"But she hasn't, Reggie; her father was an Archdeacon."

"Ay, but she was not afraid to face the Canon's mouth!"

"Reginald!"

The door was shut hastily.

ADVERTISE IN THE EXAMINER

ROOTED IN DISHONOUR

A Short Story.

The Rectory garden ends in a low moss-grown wall, and on this wall sits Beryl Hawthorne, the Rector's only child, idly enjoying the sweet June morning.

She is so absorbed in the tiny cloudlets drifting across the deep blue of the sky, that she starts violently when a voice behind her cries abruptly "Good morning, Beryl!"

A young fellow of about three and twenty has come up behind her and is leaning his arms on the wall by her side.

Beryl turns carefully round.

"Is it you, Jack? I thought you were in town."

"Came back last night. Have got my chance at last, Beryl, and I'm off as soon as I can get my outfit."

Beryl is silent.

"Don't you care, Beryl?" he asks anxiously.

"I suppose you have got a good appointment," says Beryl slowly, "and so I'm glad. And you'll come back again soon, I daresay."

"Not for five years," Jack Egerton replies, somewhat gloomily. "I'm going to Australia. There's a line to be—constructed out there. The contract is for five years. It's a good thing and may be the making of me, but I don't like leaving you, Beryl."

Beryl is still silent, but Jack raises the downcast head, and gently forces her to look at him. Tears are standing in the big blue eyes, and the soft peach bloom has faded.

"Beryl, you are sorry I'm going!" he cries joyously. "Aren't you now?"

"Of course," she returns in a small unsteady voice. "You are a sort of cousin, and we have seen so much of each other. Besides, this is such a quiet little place that one would miss almost anyone."

"Almost anyone!" he echoes. "Oh, Beryl, is that all? And I hoped you cared for me."

"I—I do like you," falters Beryl, trying to draw away from him, but he holds her fast.

"I don't want you to like me—I want you to love me. You do, don't you, darling. I am sure you do. Say yes, Beryl."

She is confused and flurried. She does not know if she loves him, but her swift imagination pictures to her life without Jack, the slow empty days creeping on, unbrightened by even a hope of his return, and she yields passively to his caresses. He is satisfied for a moment, but soon begins to press her for a confession of her love, till she falters out the words he desires to hear.

"My own Beryl!" cries Jack, with a shower of kisses. "You belong to me now. Will you be mine and mine alone, sweetest? Can you be true to me through all the long years I must be away?"

"I can be true," she answered simply. "I think I am constant by nature."

"But can you be true to a secret engagement?"

"Secret!" she exclaims, starting from his arms. "Oh, no, Jack!"

"Beryl, be a sensible little girl and listen to me. I can't marry for the next five years. You know, I have been dependent on my father. If I told him that I was engaged he'd think I must be mad. No, darling, our engagement must be secret. You see that, don't you?"

"A secret engagement sounds wrong," she observes. "It need not be a declared engagement, but I think it my duty to tell my father."

"And he will think it his duty to tell my father," returns Jack morosely; "and my father will think it his duty to tell me what an ass I am to think of such things before I've got on a bit in my profession. And he'll point out to me that he's spent a pot of money on me, and that he expects me to give him a helping hand with the young ones. No, Beryl, it must be a secret engagement."

"But I do hate anything underhand."

"I promise you it shan't be kept secret very long—" goes on Jack ignoring her murmured protest. "Once safe in Australia, I don't mind writing home and telling my father. At the most he can only write me a nasty letter, which I needn't read. But you must leave all that to me, darling. You'll trust all to me, won't you?"

"Yes, Jack, I'll leave it all to you," she answers.

"My loyal little sweetheart!" cries Jack, clasping her closer in his arms. "My own true little girl. See here, dearest," he goes on, drawing something from his pocket, "I have brought you a ring. It was presumptuous of me, I know, but I felt pretty sure you cared for me." And he slips a diamond hoop on her finger.

She contemplates it for a moment in silence.

"My father won't notice it," she says. "He never notices anything. But the girls will—your sisters, I mean—and they'll ask questions."

"Let them," returns Jack, taking possession of the little hand and pressing it to his lips. "You needn't answer, you know. Do you like it, darling?"

"Nonsense! And now, little woman, I must be off. I've dozens of things to see to, for I sail next week."

"So soon?" sighs Beryl, but Jack is not satisfied.

"You take it very coolly," he says in a tone of wounded feeling. "I'm going away for five years at least—perhaps for ever, for it's a wretched climate, and I'm not so strong as I look," he adds with touching pathos.

Beryl turns, and hides her face against his arm in a sudden shy caress:

"Dear Jack, I do care," she whispers, and he presses his lips passionately on the fair head.

"Good-bye, for just now, my own and only treasure," he murmurs, "my own for ever."

"For ever," she responds earnestly, and then slips from his arms and is gone.

* * * * * * *

It is a hot July day. Jack Egerton has been gone three weeks now, but it seems to Beryl as if months had passed since that morning very early, when they met by the old garden wall to say good-bye for five long years.

She is walking languidly home from her usual Saturday visits to some bedridden old women. When she nears the Rectory, a young man suddenly turns round from the wall against which he has been leaning, and comes towards her.

For one mad moment Beryl fancies it is Jack who had returned to her, but an instant more dispels the delusion.

This man is of middle height, fair, distinctly plain; Jack Egerton has dark hair and eyes, a handsome, eager face, and is six feet two in height. Just as she is passing the stranger, he stops and raises his hat.

"It is Miss Hawthorne, isn't it?" he asks eagerly.

"Yes, but I don't remember ever having met you."

"I daresay not," he rejoins, smiling, "for we left Ashton ten years ago. Don't you remember the Hildesleys?"

"I remember Madge Hildesley," says Beryl, musing. "She was just my age, and I remember, but not quite so distinctly, her twin-brothers. Are you Geoffrey?"

"Geoffrey was the dark twin. No, I'm Grant, the one that broke your Paris doll, don't you recollect?"

"Oh, I'm so glad to see you!" she exclaims frankly. "Won't you come and see my father?"

"Thank you," he answers, turning and walking along with her. "Do you remember that Geoff and I used to come every morning to study with him? It seems like yesterday."

"Yes," assents Beryl eagerly, as her early childhood seems to come back to her. "And how kind your mother was to poor little motherless me. She let me call her 'Auntie,' I remember now. But where have you been all this time?"

"My mother married again soon after we left Ashton, and my stepfather packed Geoff and myself off to school. Then I was taken into my step-father's house of business, and Geoff went in for the law. I've just been sent down to a branch office here."

"How nice!" exclaims Beryl. "You must come and see us often."

"Thank you so much," he answers warmly. "I shall be glad to do so."

* * * * * * *

It is a chill November day. All night the rain has fallen steadily; now it has stopped, but the clouds hang sullenly overhead, the air is full of a thick mist, the trees and bushes are laden with raindrops which drip slowly to the soaked muddy ground. It is a dreary day; a day on which, to the sorrowful, "the gild sorrow wakes and cries"; on which the lightest-hearted long for the hour when they may shut out the dreary landscape, light the lamps, and draw round the cheerful hearth.

Beryl's face is sad as is the day; the sunshine has fled from her eyes, the little mouth has lost its smile, and droops in a wistful sorrowful curve. She look a very different Beryl from the bright merry girl of five years ago.

For five years have gone by, and still Beryl's engagement is a secret, and still Jack Egerton is in Australia.

When the fifth year was half over, Jack wrote that the line could not be completed within contract time, and consequently his return would be delayed for some months. He intended to travel with his friends, the Churchills, and was to be their guest in Germany for the summer. Jack dwelt much on the wealth of Mr. Churchill, the kindness of his wife, and the beauty of his only child and heiress, and Beryl, though not given to jealousy, suffered a very sharp pang as she read his letter.

Her answer was short and sharp. She told him that if he could postpone their reunion for an indefinite time without adequate reason, he did not truly love her. She would not hold him to an engagement of which he had evidently grown weary, and he might marry the beautiful Florence Churchill. It was a foolish letter, but a loving one, and plainly showed that she had no idea of being taken at her word, but was certain he had only to realise how his project distressed her to instantly renounce it.

It is not this trouble that is weighing on her now, however. It is that her father—the kind old man, without whom she cannot imagine her life, is going to leave her, and on this dull November day Beryl stands by the old trysting place trying to realise what the doctor has just told her. She has stood there motionless for a long time, when through the fog she descries someone coming in at the garden gate, and Grant Hildesley's voice says doubtfully:

"Beryl, is this you? You should not be out on such a day."

"It does not matter," she replies listlessly.

"How is your father? Better, I hope."

"Poor child!" murmurs Grant, taking her hand in his. "How cold you are! Come into the house, dear? Can I see your father?"

"Oh, yes," she answers with the same dreary composure. "But he will not know you. He knows nobody now." She leads the way into the dining-room, and kneels down before the fire.

"Will you take any—any lunch?" she asks. She has so little idea how time goes in these dreary days, that she hesitates and glances at the clock before she finds the appropriate term for the hospitality she offers.

"No thanks," Grant returns, struggling with a great longing to take the fragile, crouching figure in his arms. "I have only just lunched. Can I see your father now?"

Beryl assents, and in a few minutes they are standing by the Rector's pillow looking down at the quiet, unconscious face. The nurse goes softly away, and Beryl kneels down and kisses her father very gently.

"Oh, where are you, father, that you cannot hear your little girl?"

"Father," she whispers "it is Beryl. But he does hear her; as yet, at any rate, he is not so far away from earth as not to hear and be recalled by the fond voice he loves so well. His eyes meet hers in perfect comprehension.

"My little girl," he falters, and then his gaze falls on Grant. "Be good to her, will you not?"

"I will," answered the young man, solemnly.

"Little daughter," the Rector goes on, "I leave you all alone in the world, but there is one ready to take you to his heart and care for you in my stead. Is not this so, my child?"

And she, thinking of Jack Egerton, answers softly, "Yes, dear father."

Grant's heart leaps with joy, and involuntarily he lays his hand on the fair head in a caress which she scarcely feels, and does not heed.

"Then may I close my eyes in peace and know that you are safe?" asks the dying man.

She lifts her head for a moment, and raises her streaming eyes to heaven. Grief, sleeplessness, and long fasting have so confused her that she but dimly understands her father's meaning, and does not even think of Grant Hildesley.

"Oh yes, father," she says, "Oh, do not think of me—I shall be quite safe."

"I will take care of her," chimes in Grant's deep, earnest voice. "Trust her to me."

"I do. And now, dear children, do not leave me. The end is very near."

It is nearer than anyone has thought, for almost immediately he falls into a deep sleep, and, in that sleep, the gentle spirit passes.

All that is mortal of the old Rector has rested beneath the turf for more than a week now. Beryl sits by the fire, a very woe-begone little figure. Grant Hildesley stands leaning against the mantel shelf, looking down at her in deep concern.

"Yes, I know I can't stay here," she answers simply.

"Have you any plans?" asks Grant. "You must not mind my questioning you, for you know your father left you to my care."

"I haven't made any plans yet. I haven't much money, have I?"

"Not very much, dear. Not enough to live on among strangers; but I want you to come to the Grange—my stepfather's place you know. Here is a letter my mother sent me to give you. You see she wants you to make your home with her."

This invitation is very tempting, for Beryl does not know where to go until Jack Egerton returns to claim her, but it is clear to her now that Grant loves her, and she doubts whether it would be honourable to go to his home while he is in ignorance of her engagement. Mrs. Sutherland writes very lovingly. She reminds Beryl of the old days and of the constant kindness which the Rector showed to the poor young widow, and bids the girl make he home with the "Auntie" of he childhood. Beryl knows that her father has done enough for Mrs. Sutherland to justify his daughter in accepting this offer, and then Grant has never actually spoken of love to her, and in any case the concealment of her engagement will not last longer than the next three or four months, for then Jack will come for her. And so it is settled.

Beryl very soon feels at home in the Grange. Mr. Sutherland and his wife make a pet of her. Madge Hildesley treats her as a sister, and soon confides to her all about her engagement to Horace Denison, and all her other girlish secrets.

Grant comes very frequently to see her, but he never speaks a word of love to her, and so she is quite at ease.

Every week her Australian letter is forwarded from Ashton, and at last comes the time when the answer is due to the letter in which she bade Jack, as she believed her love, refuse the Churchill invitation and come to her in the spring.

She is so sure of his love and loyalty, that she feels no anxiety on the subject, and on the morning when the letter is due she is up betimes, and sets off before breakfast to meet the postman at the park gates. It is a cold January morning and Beryl trips lightly down the avenue, her small face rosy with the keen air and joyous expectancy. Her letter in her hand, she runs back to the house and up to her room, where she eagerly breaks open the envelope. As she reads her smiles vanish—the roses fade, and the germander blue eyes grow wide with horror. For the letter runs thus—

"Dear Beryl.

You tell me that if I accept the invitation of Mr. Churchill, (which may prove of great use to me in my career) you will break off our engagement. So be it. Your affection for me is evidently dead. I have decided to go with the Churchills to Europe in March. I beg you will not pain me by returning my letters, engagement ring—or gifts, but keep or destroy them as you choose.

John East Egerton."

"John East Egerton—" she repeats bewildered, "that cannot be Jack!—her Jack, whose signature has been so familiar to her all these years, as her "adoring Jack," her "own loving Jack." "Ever and always her faithful lover, Jack." But it is Jack, though her Jack no longer. All is over, and she realises at last that her engagement is at an end.

It is an April day, and Beryl white-gowned, her fair hair rippling loosely round her face, is wandering idly through the park, a copy of her favourite Tennyson in her hand. She is reading how Elaine nursed the wounded knight, and she murmurs half aloud.

"The shackles of an old love straitened him—

His honour rooted in dishonor, stood,

And faith unfaithful kept him falsely true—"

Beryl knows it is so with her. Had she met Grant Hildesley first, her life had been very different, but now she feels her fate is fixed. The "shackles of an old love" hold her still.

It is hard to get over the habit of five years—and she still often finds herself thinking that "the Australian mail is due to-day," or that "to-morrow she must post her letter" or she awakens in the night with Jack's dark tender face before her, and his voice in her ears. Thinking of these things she turns into another path, and comes upon Grant walking towards her.

"Beryl, I was looking for you—" he begins hastily. "I want to tell you something. Sit down and let me talk to you."

She lets him draw her to a rustic seat, and he goes on—

"Beryl, I have been taken into partnership with my step-father, and am, now in a position to marry. You know, dear, that I love you, I have loved you for years. Can you care for me, Beryl? Will you be my wife?"

Beryl sits silent, she would so gladly rest in the love that has been offered her, but yet she doubts whether she really loves Grant. And if she accepts him, must she tell him of her former love? Surely not—for that is all over. She raises her blue eyes to Grant's anxious face, and thrills him with keen delight as she murmurs "Yes."

It is one week before Beryl's wedding day. Her maid has brought in her morning cup of tea, and on the tray lies a letter bearing a German postmark. It has been wrongly addressed, and bears on it many a "Try this—try that, or the other place," but Beryl only notices that the address is in Jack Egerton's handwriting. She tears open the envelope and reads the following,—

"My own dear Beryl,

Have I wounded that tender heart past forgiveness? Can you forgive my cruel letter? I wrote it in a moment of irritation, and the next day I met with a serious accident. When I began to recover Mr. Churchill took possession of me, and we are now here—Hotel Bellevue, Lichtenthaler Allee, Baden—Baden, and I am still very shaky. How I long for my darling Beryl! how I want her to-night! Oh, if you could only come to me! Write and say you forgive and are still my own—

Always your loving Jack."

Beryl stares helplessly at the letter. Jack claim her and her wedding-day with another man is but a week off.

What is she to do? To which man is she bound in honour? "Oh, if you could only come to me!" She reads the words again and again, and an idea flashes into her disturbed brain. She will go to Jack—and end this misery by a decided step. She will go at once before any of the family are stirring and write her explanation when she is Jack's wife.

* * *

Dazed with fatigue and excitement, Beryl stands before the door at which her guide has stopped.

"You need not announce me," she falters. "I am expected."

And she pushes open the door and enters. Two men sit smoking by the open window, and one, bronzed and bearded, but otherwise unchanged, is Jack Egerton.

"Jack!" cries the sweet tremulous voice. Jack springs to his feet, every drop of blood forsaking his face.

"Good Heavens! Beryl!" he exclaims—The other man has jumped up too, and is staring at the visitor—at the pale, pretty face—the quivering mouth—the tearful blue eyes.

There is a short silence. Then Beryl takes a step forward.

"Jack, I have come," she says. "Won't you say you are glad to see me?"

But this is obviously beyond Jack. He stands silent for a moment longer and then seeing to his infinite relief, that his friend has had the good sense to disappear, he places a chair for his unwelcome visitor.

"What has sent you here?" he asks, and with the very life dying within her, Beryl draws out the letter to her and lays it before him. Under the bronze she sees the blood rise to his face.

"This letter is two months old," he says with an effort. "If this sent you here, why not till now?"

"It only reached me yesterday morning—I did not notice the date—I only saw that you were ill and wanted me, so I came at once. Nobody knew. Nobody knows now."

"Nobody knows," he repeats, with sudden relief — "Then there's not much harm done. You can explain your absence somehow when you get home."

"But Jack—" she falters, "You will not send me back— may stay with you, mayn't I?"

WAS TERRIBLY AFFLICTED WITH LAME BACK.

COULD NOT SWEEP FLOOR.

Three Boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills Cured Her.

But they can't help it. If more work is put on them than they can stand it is not to be wondered they get out of order.

Weak back is simply a warning from the kidneys and should be attended to immediately, so as to avoid years of terrible suffering from kidney trouble.

Mrs. N. Larmour, Smith's Falls, Ont., writes:—"I take pleasure in writing you, stating the benefit I have received by using Doan's Kidney Pills. About a year ago I was terribly afflicted with lame back and was so bad I could not even sweep my own floor. I was advised to try Doan's Kidney Pills, which I did, and with the greatest benefit. I only used three boxes and I am as well as ever. I highly recommend these pills to any sufferer from lame back or kidney trouble."

Price 50 cents per box, or 3 for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

If ordering direct specify "Doan's".

ROYAL Baking Powder Economy

Royal Baking Powder is made from pure grape cream of tartar, and is the embodiment of all the excellence possible to be attained in the highest class baking powder.

Royal Baking Powder costs only a fair price, and is more economical at its price than any other leavening agent, because of the superlative quality and absolute wholesomeness of the food it makes.

Mixtures made in imitation of baking powders, but containing alum, are frequently distributed from door to door, or given away in grocery stores. Such mixtures are dangerous to use in food. In England, France, Germany and some sections of the United States their sale is prohibited by law. Alum is a dangerous mineral acid, and all physicians condemn baking powders containing it.

READ THE LABEL

"Impossible," he says curtly.

"But why, Jack?" she asks innocently. "Can't we be married here?"

"Good Heavens! Beryl," he cries in desperation, "I am to be married to Florence Churchill to-morrow morning."

There is a long silence. Then Beryl says in a hoarse voice, out of which all the charm and sweetness have fled,—

"Then what did your letter mean?"

Jack flushes more deeply still.

"I grew to love Florence—" he returns hurriedly. "And you know you broke off our engagement. Florence and I quarrelled here about another fellow and parted. My heart returned to you and I wrote that letter. You didn't answer, and I thought you wouldn't forgive me, so I made up the quarrel with Florence and we are to be married at once."

"And my father is dead," she says. "My father is dead."

She does not in the least know what she means. She has only a vague longing for the kind old father who would have sheltered and comforted her. She does not mean that, he being gone, she has henceforth no help nor home, and is alone in the world. Jack does not hear her piteous little murmur.

"What are you going to do?" he asks.

"I—I must go away, I suppose," she says in a dying voice.

"No, I will go. I will go at once to another hotel, and you can have these rooms. I'll arrange it all for you. Don't think me unkind. It can do no good for me to remain here and might ruin us both. You see—"

"Yes, I see," she says in the same weak swooning voice. She staggers to her feet and take a few uncertain steps forward.

"There is nothing I can say," goes on Jack, without looking at her, and with that shamed flush still on his handsome downcast face. "I have behaved badly to you, but it can't make things better for me to behave badly to Florence. It seems brutal to leave you like this, but its the only thing to be done. Can I do anything for you? Telegraph for anybody?"

Jack resolutely averts his face from the trembling little figure with the heart-broken look on the pale pretty face, and the bewildered pain in the wide blue eyes. He waits a moment for the answer which does not come, and then with a muttered "good-bye," he goes.

Beryl stands alone with her breaking heart. She is incapable of forming any plan. She can but stand helplessly there until a merciful oblivion comes over her and she sinks unconscious to the ground.

* * *

"Auntie," says Beryl, looking up into the face bent over her "What is the matter?"

"Nothing, darling," replies Mrs. Sutherland, tenderly. "You have been ill you know."

The past comes back to Beryl in a flash.

"How did you come to me, Auntie?" she asks, anxiously. "Who sent for you?"

"The people of the hotel found a letter on you with your name and address on it, and telegraphed to the Grange, and I came off at once with Grant. Here is the letter."

"Oh, Auntie, what must you think of me?" she cries. "And how good you are to come to me! Read that letter and let me tell you about it all."

And she tells the whole story of the past five years, with trembling voice and tearful eyes, and Mrs. Sutherland listens sympathetically, and kisses her in token of full forgiveness.

Next day Beryl is much stronger, and after she has risen and dressed, Mrs. Sutherland goes to order a carriage for a drive. She has not been gone five minutes when there comes a knock at the door, and Grant enters. He looks pale and worn, but he approaches her with calm friendliness, and taking her offered hand, says quietly, "I am glad to see you looking better."

Beryl knows her fate. She has lost his love. And indeed a man must be more than mortal who could still love her after the affront she had put on him. She summons up all her courage.

"Grant," she says in a trembling voice, "I want to tell you why—I—went away."

"Do not," he says hastily. "Do not—I—cannot bear it. My mother has told me all."

Her head sinks on her breast.

"I understand," she murmurs.

"But let me say how sorry I am—"

"There is no need," he breaks in. "Your position was terrible. On one side, the summons from the man you loved; on the other, pressure from an unloved suitor. Let me entreat you to return home with my mother. I will never torture you with unwelcome love again, though I shall love you to the end of my life. I must take you both safely home, but I will spare you the pain of seeing me by keeping out of your sight as much as possible. That will do, won't it, Beryl?"

Beryl raises her sweet, shamed face, and a smile of renewed hope begins to creep round her mouth.

"No, that will not do, Grant," she says.

"But what then?" he asks distressed. "Do not ask me to leave you at once."

"I ask you to stay," she whispers.

"Beryl, be careful," he cries. "Do you know what you are doing? You are raising a mad hope within me that some day some blessed far-off day, Beryl may love me."

She moves a step nearer to him, and raises eyes full of a light which even he cannot mistake to Grant's face.

"Do you not see? Must I tell you," she falters, "that Beryl loves you now?"

PALE, ANAEMIC GIRLS

The languid, semi-invalid girl is no longer popular. Firm flesh, rounded form and a healthy glow to the complexion are the results of using Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food. Mrs. Goodson, 126 Sebastopol St., Montreal, Que., writes: "My daughter's appetite was bad and she was pale and bloodless. Since using Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food there is a marked change in her condition. She is stronger and healthier in every way."

HALL'S GLEN

HALL'S GLEN, May 2.—The farmers around here are all very busy with their spring seeding. They are taking advantage of the favorable weather.

Mr. D. H. Little, our stage driver, reports that his spring trade is on in full blast again this season.

Wm. Careth & Son have recently moved out from their sugar bush on the ninth line. They report a favorable season in the maple syrup business.

The Bell Telephone Co. are extending their line from Hall's Glen to Belvidere, Stony Lake. Quite a number of men are employed, and they are rushing the project with all haste, as a number of the leading farmers are impatiently awaiting the great opportunity it affords.

The N. D. D. factory is in full swing this season, and the outlook is prosperous.

Our famous Massey agent is doing credit to himself by the numerous sales he is making this season.

TRENT BRIDGE

TRENT BRIDGE, May 1.—The shipment of cement from Hastings down the Trent River to Healey Falls for construction work there has commenced.

The new steel swing pier at Trent Bridge is being put up, and it is only a matter of a couple of weeks until navigation will be open right down the river as far as the falls for large boats. The construction work on the erection of the new part of the bridge has been going on since the early part of last summer. The old channel for boats was in the centre of the river, but the canal survey placed it along the right bank so that the old swing had to be torn down, another section of the bridge erected, and a new swing installed. While this was going on a temporary bridge was erected to the west of the regular one. The channel of the watercourse surveyed down the right bank of the river will necessitate a good deal of excavating for a run of about 100 yards along the river, which will be now continued.

While as yet the summer resorts around Trent Bridge have not shown much life, still the prospects are bright for a good year. Last season was a very successful one at this point, a number of new cottages having been erected and the number of tourists who visited it comparing most favorably with other years. A new innovation last year was a regatta, which was a very successful event, and which will likely be turned into an annual affair. A number of new cottages will be erected during the summer.

THE LOGANS OF WHYANELLA CREEK

A Short Story.

If I wanted to know the day of the month, or how many "I's" there are in parallel, I should never ask Howard Kerr. But, if I wanted to know what had become of any man who had dropped out of the world known to most of us; what sea-serpents and bunyips really look like; whether hypnotism is practised in the West African oil rivers; how it feels to be swimming alone in the open sea, south of Cape Horn, or what was the true story of anything that ever happened in the Bush; then, if he were within a few days' journey of me, I think I should ask Howard Kerr.

Kerr and I were locked out of the old "Europa" in Lisbon, during the small hours of a certain summer's morning, and we sat down together in the little garden at the end of Rua d'Aura, and Kerr told me about Mark Riddell and the Logans.

It appears that Mark Riddell was engaged in London by the agents of the company which started the "Sydney Times," to come out to Australia as editor of that paper. When Riddell was in the Boer, the company failed, and by the time he arrived in New South Wales, the "Times" had stopped issue.

Then came to him a desire to make a living out of the soil. The lush productiveness of the South fascinated him, and it was delightful to hear him orate on the text of "Nature's neglected gifts to humanity." Habitually reserved, and inclined to take a cynical view of things, he budded, half timidly, under the influence of his early courting of Nature, and, to a friendly listener, would dilate in language redolent of fruit and flowers, rather than a corn and oil, on his mistress' wealth of beauty.

He journeyed to the north, and the luxuriant greenness of the great Clarence and Stephens waterbeds, laid hold upon the man. The juicy vines that tangle in and out the stately bis heart, and the tall grass to have twined their clinging tendrils round his heart, and the tall grass to have checked his unwilling feet, when he turned his face towards towns and civilisation. But that to which he bared his head with the admiration of a devotee, was the wattle.

The waving, golden, fragrance-bearing wattle, with its sensuous rustle in afternoon sunlight, and its glove-fitting bark, which peels in dripping slices, like the skin of mango; the wattle was the finishing touch to his fanaticism, and he took up land with the avowed intention of making a living out of the Bush, generally, and, in particular, by the cultivation of wattle-bark for the use of tanners.

It was part of his phase that he should regard the Logans of Whyanella Creek, as Arcadians of pre-historic honesty of purpose, and accept their overtures, as being inspired by the guileless generosity of simple children of the soil. He lodged at their slab and weather-board homestead, took up his tract of land through old Vincent Logan, bought his horses from the married son, and his stores through the old woman; and he employed the three single sons, on Sydney wages, to build his house, and help him with the wattles. One may take up: "Church and School land," in that locality, on a twenty-one years lease, and at about the rental one would expect to pay for a bathing machine. It was a corner of old Logan's run that Riddell rented, but he paid that child of the soil, considerably more for this unfenced, unfeared, patch of bush, than Logan paid the Government for the entire Whyanella run.

For years the Logans had jogged comfortably through life; doing a little cattle dumping, horse-breeding and timber getting; and an enormous amount of real loafing. Now they rested on their oars, and prepared to end their days comfortably, on the little income which, with care, could be extracted from the supply of Riddell's stores, the rent of his pretty, but practically useless patch of their land; his wages, and incidental profits to be made from horse deals, and other friendly offices.

Mark Riddell did not see Fanny Logan's elder daughter, when he first arrived at Whyanella Creek. Mrs. Logan said her daughter was away in the paddock across the creek; and therefore, of course, Fanny could not have been putting on her best frock, in the little room built out by the side of the kitchen. In any case, when at last, Fanny did step across the little verandah, into the room where there were almanacs and antimacassars, then Riddell decided that Mrs. Logan's daughter was a Bush beauty, well worthy of the Arcadian surroundings in which she lived. She really was beautiful in a verse, this twenty year old brunette, born in the Bush of Irish parents. Her eyes were as blue, her lips as full, and crimson, and the curves of her figure, as rich and provocative. There was the grace of a panther in her movements, and the hot sunshine of Australian summers, running swiftly through all her veins, flooded her rounded cheek and sloping neck, when she shook hands with Mark Riddell. Anyone would have admired her beauty, and to the Englishman, in the full fanaticism of the phase through which he was passing, Fanny Logan seemed the physical embodiment of all the throbbing life of that green, and creeper-tangled country. So he bowed to her with even more enthusiasm than he had bared his head to the wattles.

On that first evening at Whyanella Creek, Riddell walked down to the slip rails of the home-paddock, to smoke his pipe and talk to old Logan. As the two men stood there, the Englishman was startled by the sound of a horse's feet, thundering down the little wooded hillside beyond the house. Then a pony, ridden by a young girl whose hair was flying loose in the cool breeze, came galloping across the little open patch of grass, and, clearing the three-rail fence with hardly a break in its stride scattered a little cloud of leaves and broken twigs over Riddell, as its rider with a final shout of childish laughter reined in sharply and sprang to the ground, near the two men. This was Norah, aged thirteen, and Logan's youngest child.

At six years of age, Norah had ridden almost every horse on the run, and, up till within a year of the evening on which Riddell first saw her, she had ridden more often without a saddle than with one, and had set her horses like a boy.

A picture of liberty, was this child, as she stood before Riddell one half-bared, brown arm through the bridle of her horse, her great, black eyes flashing, the fearless timidity of childhood, and the crumpled, silver curls of bark peel clinging to her wind-tossed hair, giving evidence of the recklessness of her gallop through the apple tree scrub, outside the paddocks. Then the picture vanished. Norah had taken one comprehensive look at the stranger, and with an abashed murmur of "I didn't know!" had sprung upon her pony again and galloped off to the homestead.

Very soon after this, Mark Riddell took up his patch of the run; but continued to live at the Logan's homestead whilst, he, with old Logan's three unmarried sons, worked at his little slab house, just as men wrecked on a desert island might work at something they had no particular desire to complete, but yet meant to carry out in strict accordance with their amateur theories, as to what such work should be. At intervals, the three Australians would sit down and fill their pipes, whilst Riddell discoursed in glowing language of the richness of Nature's gifts to dwellers in the country round about Whyanella. They smoked, as he raved of the neglected wealth of the place; and nodded acquiescence, as he told them, later on, he would establish schools of agriculture, and places for social intercourse.

He insisted that every inch of the land, was suited to wine-growing, and to clinch his argument, he sent down to Matter's vineyard on the Stephens River, and ordered casks of red wine, which accordingly became the staple beverage of the Logan household, vice tea condemned on hygienic grounds, by Riddell's authority.

Through all these days, little Norah with her wild look of freedom, and her streaming blue-black hair, lay on the grass, or sat on logs, near the half-built slab house, her chin resting on her little brown hands, and her great eyes following Riddell's every movement. That steady gaze of hers was purely untamed childhood of the Bush; but when she spoke to him, it was wonderful to note the soft inflection in her voice, the tender tone of which became all a woman's. Then one of her brothers would speak; and Norah would throw her head back like a wild colt, sniffing a pressure from another world. Her answer would be flung out in her own wild child's way, startling Riddell, like a sudden gust of wind from the bottom of some rocky gully, in which dead leaves are whirled about and grey wallabies sit, like figures hewn out of granite.

In the evenings, old Logan and his sons would hover for a while in deferential half-companionship about the verandah, where the Englishman sat smoking. Then Fanny, in her best attire, would sit down with her work in her lap, inside the open window behind Riddell; and the menfolk would drift away into the shadows that surrounded the kitchen and the built-out part of the house. She became the emblem of human beauty in the Englishman's phase of Nature-worship. A sentence in Fanny's melodious voice was enough to show Riddell, in the dim half-lights of the evenings in the Bush, that her brother Larry required a new saddle, or that old Logan wanted a little help in connection with the purchase of a team of bullocks. A breath from her crimson lips or a movement of the smoothly carving arm in the window sill was amply sufficient to prove to the Englishman, as he sat drinking in the night's wattle-scented fragrance, that it would be positively brutal on his part not to supply at once the needs of these children of the forest. So he supplied them.

After bidding Fanny good-night on one of these evenings, Riddell stood hesitating a moment at the door of his room, and listening to a curious series of sounds that seemed to come from the outhouse by the kitchen, on the other side of the big lemon tree. Riddell shivered, because the idea of physical pain was to him horrible, and these sounds he heard resembled, so it seemed to him, those that would be made by a whip-thong or leathern strap in falling heavily on some creature's body.

The Englishman turned and took two steps across the dark room, pausing again, as he heard a little human moan. Then, as he walked toward the outhouse, he heard in old Logan's gruff voice the muttered words, "And you'll tell him just what I tell you to, and nothing else—and that'll teach you to, you—what? Take—"

Then the sounds ceased, as Riddell's steps approached the outhouse, and when he pushed open the crazy door of the place, old Logan was saying: "Well, Norah child, if that oil o' cloves won't cure your toothache, I don't know what will! Poor child! Ye'd better go to your mother—and—what, Mr. Riddell? Sure, I thought you were in bed and asleep. Here's the child raving with the toothache. There, go to your mother, Norah, and see what she can do for you!"

And the old Irishman dropped something on the floor behind him, as Norah walked out past the Englishman, her little brown hands clenched and her black eyes blazing from between long, wet lashes, which glistened in the moonlight.

It was shortly after the evening of Mark Riddell's queer fancy about some animal being thrashed that his first parcel of wattle-bark was sent to market by steamer. The success of this first achievement was somewhat marred by the fact that, whilst the price obtained for the ton of wattle-bark was eighty pounds, Riddell's accounts showed that its placing upon the market in a finished state had cost just twelve pounds ten shillings per ton. As old Logan pointed out, however, it was "fine bark," and "sold as easy as shelling peas." Possibly this reflection, and possibly one or two others connected with Vincent Logan's eldest daughter, were what caused Riddell to retain still much of his enthusiasm, in the face of one or two warnings from disinterested sources, and the half-open ridicule of the settlers round about Whyanella.

Sometimes he wondered idly what might be the meaning of little Norah's curious way of following him about, and her strange looks. He came to the conclusion that this child was a beautiful, unaccountable product of the Bush; and he forget most other things, when he sat listening, in the dreamy evenings, to the murmur of her older sister's voice.

Coming unexpectedly to the Logan's homestead one afternoon, Riddell heard a sound of low moaning in the little outhouse behind the kitchen. He tried the door, but found it locked. And when that evening he asked Fanny who had made that moaning noise, she told him that her little sister had violent toothaches, and sometimes would lock herself up in the outhouse and refuse to be comforted. On the following day he spoke sympathetically to the child about this. She stared at him, with big tears standing in her black eyes, and laughed in her wild way, as she said: "Yes! Toothache's dreadful!"

Then came a day of disaster for the Logan family. It was strange that so much should have happened on one day. During the month that preceded it, Riddell had had one or two uncomfortable reminders that his capital was running short. But the bursting of the thundercloud was reserved for this one day. In the early morning he rode into the little post-town of Marulah and called for his letters. From one of these letters he learned that he had been paying double the rent of the whole Whyanella run for the use of one corner of it. In another, the commercial hopelessness of his position was candidly dwelt upon by a Sydney friend; and after he had read this, he was approached on the subject of his relations with the Logans, by the one storekeeper of Marulah, and by the one well-to-do farmer of the district.

In five minutes the Englishman's face was flushed in the beginning of an angry awakening to the facts. At the end of an hour he rode away from the little post office, sick with disgust and contemptuous anger, after hearing the truth of one or two little transactions with the Logan family, which, even in the early days of his fanaticism, had rather worried him. This, then, was the end of his little phase of Nature-worship—his life on the soil—and he knew it. What gave the situation its real sting, however, was his sudden recognition of the crude manner in which the whole family, taking advantage of his enthusiasm, had swindled him in all the details of his connection with them.

He thought over the past few months of his life, as he rode out to Whyanella; and realised that, with the single exception of Norah, every member of the family had, in some way, partaken of the feast. "And I suppose the very child, with her black hair and savage eyes, would have robbed me if she could," he muttered; as the roof of Logan's homestead came into view, on the far side of the little creek.

As he walked his horse quietly across the Whyanella home-paddock, the Englishman heard one or two sobbing cries of pain issuing from the kitchen, behind the lemon tree. "That child ought to have all her teeth taken out," said Riddell to himself, as he recognised Norah's voice. As he drew nearer to the house he heard the child scream: "I won't! I won't! And I'll tell him about the horses if you—" Then the sharp, half-hysterical notes died away into a muffled sound; and when Riddell dismounted outside the kitchen door, he saw no sign of little Norah.

Old Logan and his wife were both standing in the dark, old kitchen; the windows of which were like swing doors hung on leathern hinges.

Fanny, not expecting the Englishman's return at this early hour, was unprepared to meet him, and Riddell caught a flying glimpse of a not very pleasing dishabille, as the girl whisked herself into the little room opening out of the kitchen, and slammed its creaking door.

Standing there, in the sunlight which fell in quivering patches on the ground below the lemon tree, Mark Riddell told old Logan and his wife of all he had learned that morning. He was at pains to show them that their ends would have been better served had they not hurried the collapse of his little attempt to make a living out of the soil. The Irishman was abashed, but his wife waxed insolent, to cover her half-and master's shame.

Then without a word to any other member of the family, Riddell walked across the paddock to his own still uncompleted slab house, and, gathering together a few personal odds and ends to carry in his saddle-bag, he rode away from Whyanella, to arrange, in Marulah, for the removal of his horses and other effects. And as he walked his horse through the apple tree scrub, beyond the slip rails, he met Norah; her white face tear-stained, and her little body quivering with pain. He asked her what had caused the swollen weal he saw on one of her brown arms, and Norah said she had burned it.

"Poor child!" he muttered, thinking of the pain of her toothaches. Then he said: "Good-bye, little girl, in a tone made tender by the sight of the child's tear-stained face, and rode slowly on, never mentioning that he would not return that night, or ever. Norah stood there in the apple tree scrub, gazing after him, with a hungry look in her wild eyes.

* * * * *

Just four years after the finish of his Bush life, Riddell was sent up North to write descriptive article for the "Weekly Mail." He reached the town of Maitland at three o'clock one autumn afternoon, when the farmers were praying for the break-up of a five months' drought, and, immediately after his arrival, he hired a horse to ride out to the Show Ground, beyond East Maitland. As he rode Riddell gazed across the brown and scorched up meadow land to where the great bush of the Clarence River watershed loomed, dark and cool-looking against the glaring sky. He had not been in the Bush for four years. And for three years he had not thought of the curious little phase in his life during which he had lived in a slab-house.

"Thirty—no, thirty-five miles, over there is Whyanella Creek," he muttered, as he rode along the dusty road; "I wonder if the slab-house is still there! The vines I planted must have grown, and— H'm! No, she was part of the fraud. But the child—I wonder if she still has those awful pains! She is almost a woman now, quite! I wonder if I—what nonsense. But she was not part of the fraud; and—I'm not sure that it was toothache. It's rather absurd! What would the Weekly Mail say?"

As he approached the cross roads, near the Show Ground, Riddell pulled his horse into a walk, and let the reins fall on the animal's neck. The horse lowered its head, and, with a lazy indifference, chose the road turning northward from the Show Ground. Ten minutes afterwards Mark Riddell was riding at a smart canter along the main northern road, which runs through the watershed of the Clarence River.

At nine o'clock that evening, the Logan family had, with two exceptions, retired for the night. Old Vincent Logan sat smoking by the side of a dying fire in the kitchen; and Norah Logan was leaning idly over the slip-rails of the home-paddock, listening to the croaking of a big bull-frog, on the bank of the little creek. She was in her eighteenth year then, and such a beauty as one rarely sees, in or out of the Bush. As she stood there, dreaming and wondering, she heard a horse's feet crushing the dead twigs and fallen leaves in the apple tree scrub. Then a man rode across the clear patch, and up to the slip rails.

"Oh! Oh! He's come back!" Norah spoke in the hushed whisper of the confessional, but the very air she breathed quivered its answer to the emotion in her voice.

"Norah! Is this you? Child, you are a beautiful woman!"

"Oh, no! But—but why did you go away, and not tell me? I thought they would have killed me on that day; because—I would not—"

"Oh, Norah! What a brute I was! But I had not dreamed of it then, and I have only half dreamed of it since. Norah, forgive me!"

The moon sank behind a dark bank of cloud while they stood there, the three rail fence between them: and old Vincent Logan, sitting in the slab-walled kitchen, knocked the ashes out of his pipe upon the dead fire, and went to bed. And when the old man awoke at six o'clock next morning, he was obliged to ask his wife to make his early cup of tea—for there was no Norah in the homestead by Whyanella Creek. It was strange, too, because none of the horses were missing, and the old side-saddle still hung in the outhouse behind the kitchen.

The horse from Maitland had carried a double burden through the Bush the night before; because Mark Riddell had told beautiful, black-eyed Norah that she must take away no single thing—not even a recollection—from the run by Whyanella Creek.

* * * * *

It was nearly daylight, and the market women were walking past with huge baskets on their heads, when Howard Kerr rose from my side in the garden at the end of Rua d'Aura. He shivered as we turned to walk back to our hotel, for the morning air was fresh.

"And what became of them, Kerr?" I asked, just as we reached the door of the Europa.

"Ah! Riddell had left Sydney, when you first went out," replied Kerr. "His uncle, or somebody, died, and they live in Ireland now. Somewhere in the south. I believe I must send his wife a few wattle-leaves one of these days, to remind her of the Clarence River Bush!"

Then Kerr and I went up to bed.

BOARD OF EDUCATION DISCUSSES THE MATTER OF BEAUTIFYING CENTRAL PARK

Question Taken Up at Last Night's Meeting and a Committee is Appointed to Act in Conjunction With Other Bodies—Participation of School Children in Chimes Inauguration Celebration is Invited and is Under Discussion.

The Board of Education held their monthly meeting last night in the Board room. Those present were Messrs. John Crane, chairman; R. Fair, Ellwood, Dr. Burnham, Col. Miller, Adams, Hill and Hayes, K. C.

The first part of the proceedings consisted of the reading of the reports and recommendations. One of the most important items to come up for discussion, related to the advisability of taking some definite action, as regards the beautifying and improvement of the grounds surrounding the Collegiate and the Armouries. It was pointed out that about $3,000 would be required for the work, considerable discussion arose as to who should be responsible for the expense of the work.

Mr. Hayes drew attention to the fact that the question had been before the Board on numerous occasions and he contended that some definite action should be taken at this opportune time. He suggested that a committee be formed for the purpose of conferring with the City Council, military authorities, Horticultural Society and other parties that are interested in the matter.

Mr. Eastwood added an amendment to the above resolution, to the effect that a delegate be appointed to consult the Minister of Public Works on the matter, if necessary, and that the expenses of such action be paid by the Board.

Col. Miller advanced the information to the effect that prior to the erection of the Collegiate and Armouries, the military authorities had been given first choice of a site for the Armouries and in making the selection it was agreed to let the Collegiate Institute have the better site of the two. Therefore the Board of Education should not raise too strenuous an objection to meeting a portion of the expense in levelling the ground, should it be found necessary.

Col. Miller also suggested that the matter be put in the hands of Hon. J. R. Stratton, with a view to securing Government aid, also that the co-operation of the officers of the Regiment and the City be secured.

Mr. Hayes moved a resolution appointing the chairman, Mr. John Crane, and Mr. Eastwood as a committee to present the matter to the above mentioned parties. This was seconded by Mr. Hill.

From Rev. Canon Davidson, offering a suggestion from the Chimes Committee that the children of the Public Schools take part in the celebration of Coronation Day, when the inauguration of the chimes will take place.

Mr. Hill thought that the above idea might interfere with the primary and departmental examinations, which would be in progress about the above-mentioned time. He suggested, however, that the matter be referred to the Supervision Committee, which was seconded by Mr. Fair.

From J. E. Hodgson, Science Master at the Collegiate, stating that the Carborundum Company of Niagara Falls, N.Y., has presented the Science department of the Collegiate Institute with their college display, illustrating the various stages in the manufacture of carborundum.

Moved by Mr. Hayes, seconded by Mr. Eastwood, that a letter be forwarded to the proper parties, expressing approval of above action.

From W. G. Johnston, informing the Board that his daughter attended the Institute, and was charged non-resident fees, though he was a taxpayer in the city. He claimed a refund of $15.

Moved by Mr. Hill, seconded by Mr. Eastwood that the refund be granted.

From Miss Stella Bennett, accepting appointment on Public School teaching staff.

From A. Mowat, I.P.S., reporting Miss Effie McQuarrie and Miss Bennett having entered upon their duties on the Public School teaching staff.

From Miss Lochhead, resigning position at Queen Alexandra School on account of illness. The above were adopted.

From J. Bicknell, offering to place Bird and Nature Study chart in the Public Schools at special offer of six for $100, or $16.66 2-3 each.—No action taken.

From H. P. Eastwood, secretary of Peterborough Collegiate Institute Athletic Association, asking that Riverside Park be rented for the carrying on of sports.—Adopted.

G. A. Thomson, Esq., Secretary Board of Education, Peterborough

Dear Sir,—Owing to the half-day Bird and Nature study charts in the Primary Forms, at the King Edward and South Central Schools, I have to report that the janitors of these schools will for the balance of this school year, have to prepare the Kindergarten rooms twice a day. They first have to prepare them for the Kindergarten classes and then, at noon, the seats have to be arranged for the primary classes. This entails considerable extra work on the part of the janitors and they would like it to receive the attention of the Board. I remain,

A. MOWATT, I.P.S.

Mr. Hill moved that no action be taken, which was seconded by Mr. R. T. Adams.

The following reports of the various committees were read and adopted:

HASN'T SHE LOVELY HAIR?

How often have you heard this remark? Very often indeed. Everyone admires well kept, luxuriant hair because it is a real beauty in itself; and as Balzac says in his famous work on beautiful women: "The soul of loveliness of a beautiful woman lies in the tresses of her hair."

Any woman can have beautiful hair if she will but give it proper care with a proper hair dressing. Sageine is such a dressing. It will bring life and beauty into dull faded hair and make it clean, fluffy and attractive.

Since the introduction of Sageine in America it has met with wonderful success and is the popular hair tonic with leading men and women everywhere.

SAGEINE is now obtainable in Peterborough at W. J. Kent's drug store. It is not sticky or greasy and is daintily perfumed. A large bottle costs only 50 c. That Sageine will please you is our liberal guarantee. W. J. Kent, Money back if it doesn't.

SALARIES INCREASE

Board of Education Decided Upon Bigger Stipends for the Lady Assistant Teachers of the Local Public School Staff

COMMENCES SEPT. 1

At last night's meeting of the Board of Education, the Board, after going into committee of the whole to discuss the matter, met again and passed the following important report, which increases the salaries of the lady assistant teachers in the local Public schools:

Gentlemen,—Owing to the great demand in the Western Provinces and in the rural sections of Ontario for teachers, your committee of Appointments find it impossible to maintain the present high efficiency of the Public school staff on the present salary schedule governing the salaries paid to lady assistant teachers.

After having examined the salary schedule of the greater number of cities in Ontario, and having ascertained from the principal of the Normal College in Toronto, the salaries offered the lady teachers training for First Class certificates, our committee would recommend that the present salary schedule of the lady assistants of the Peterborough Public school staff be amended as follows; and that the salary schedule as amended take effect from September 1st, 1911.

A. That lady assistant teachers holding Professional First Class certificates be paid the initial salary of $600 per annum, with one annual increase of $50 and thereafter annual increases of $25 until the maximum of $750 is reached.

B. That lady assistant teachers holding Professional Second Class certificates be paid the initial salary of $600 per annum, with two annual increases of $50 each, and thereafter annual increases of $25 until the maximum of $700 is reached.

C. That the salary schedule for Kindergarten directresses having two sessions per day be the same as for Professional Second Class teachers; this schedule also to govern the salary of the directress of the Kindergarten in connection with the Normal Training School.

Respectfully submitted.

TWO YEARS IN CENTRAL ON CHARGE OF THEFT

Joseph Shearer Sentenced by Magistrate Dunbie This Morning for Stealing Chop from the Quaker Oats Company—Prisoner Had Already Spent Some Time in the Reformatory—Mother Pleaded in Vain.

Joe Shearer was sentenced to two years, less one day, in the Central Prison, Toronto, by His Worship, Magistrate Dunbie, in the police court this morning. Shearer pleaded guilty in court a week ago to the charge of selling a number of bags of chop, etc., property of the Quaker Oats Company, from Housedry's mill near the C.P.R. station, and was remanded for sentence. Shearer admitted to His Worship that he had spent two years in the Reformatory. His Worship expressed his regret at not being able, under the circumstances, to make the sentence light, as he had received entreaties from the boy's mother to deal leniently with him, as he was a firm supporter of his home.

Addressing the prisoner, His Worship said: "I would like to be able to help a young man, if there would be a change in his life, but from a very early age, you have been incorrigible, and finally you were sent to the reformatory, where you remained for three years. You cost this city, while there, several hundred dollars, and while there you got an education and received all the chances to do better, but you fell back into your evil ways. You stole from your master, a large quantity of chop several hundred bags, representing several hundred dollars. Your family is poor, and your mother makes a pitiful appeal to me, which I would like to respond to, if I saw I was doing anything to make you a better boy. I think the only course is to send you to the Central Prison, and if you behave yourself there, the authorities can deal with you accordingly. Therefore, the judgment of the court is, that you be confined in the Central Prison, Toronto, for two years, less one day."

UNITED STATES SENATE TO DEAL WITH BILL TO-MORROW

Special Wire to The Examiner.

WASHINGTON, May 3.—Canada and her trade relations with the United States, held the attention of the legislators in both Houses of Congress to-day. The House of Representatives had a long discussion of the farmers' free list, but prospects of the bill passing are very meagre. While the Senate itself is not in actual session, most of the members of the House are present at the committee, where numerous deputations for and against the bill are being heard. The Committee may report to-night and the Senate proper take it up to-morrow. Many people think the Senate will reject the reciprocity bill or return it for amendment.

LABOURITES WANT HOUSE OF LORDS ABOLISHED

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, MAY 3.—When the preamble of the veto bill was brought up in the House of Commons to-day, there was a serious defection from the government support by the Labourites. Geo. Nicoll Barnes, their leader, said that here was where the Labourites and Liberals parted company. He and his followers would stand for no reformation of the House of Lords. Complete abolishment was the only method. This may prove a serious block to the Liberal party.

WILL NOT USE McMANIGAL CONFESSION AGAINST McNAMARA

LOS ANGELES, CAL., MAY 3.—It was asserted by District Attorney Fredericks this morning that the 9 tate would not use the confession of Ortie McManigal, in the trial cases against the alleged dynamiters of the Times Office. He said McManigal would stand trial with the McNamara boys and no immunity from punishment would be suggested for him. They had evidence sufficient without McManigal's.

THE RESIGNING FIREMEN.

In demanding the resignation of two members of the Fire Brigade, the city council was within its rights. But the only justification of the exercise of this right depends upon the point whether the resignation was demanded in the public interests, as implied in the interests of the efficiency of the fire service, or for other reasons, unconnected with civic service. Have the firemen themselves not some rights in this matter? Has any investigation been made that would permit the case of the firemen, who must, to merit dismissal, have done something, to be heard, and all the facts brought out, and the specific charges of misconduct, if any, brought home or disproved? Was the principle of British fair-play — hearing both sides—observed, or was it a case of "Jedburg justice—hanging first and trial afterwards? The public are interested in matters like these. Some feeling is abroad that the efficiency of the brigade is weakened by the dismissal of two good men, against whom, so far as public knowledge is concerned, no neglect of, or incapacity for, duty, has been charged or proved. Many persons seem to think that the reasons for dismissal are a concern of the ratepayers. Efficiency for service and fitness for the position, should be, and are the only proper grounds of appointment to civic office, and lack of these qualities, or neglect or failure to give the expected service, should be the only grounds of dismissal. Any other reason, personal, partizan or otherwise, cannot reasonably justify an action that affects the efficiency of the public service, or does not make that the first and sole consideration.

THE ISOLATION HOSPITAL.

If the Mayor and City Council want any justification for the expenditure of about $12,000 in the erection and equipment of an isolation hospital, they have it in the present sanitary condition of the city in relation to infectious and contagious diseases. There are at present in the Hilliard Farm Isolation Hospital eleven cases of these kinds of disease. And there is not a single placard proclaiming the presence of disease displayed, anywhere in the city. This means that the existing cases of these diseases are concentrated, segregated, isolated, in the hospital, and that several good ends are served. There is no danger of increase or spread of disease. There is no prolonged and rigid quarantine, no disturbance of domestic routine, no inconvenience to inmates, no compulsion to close the home, evict the bread winner and force him to seek lodgings elsewhere, no expensive employment of nurses, in cases of infectious diseases, no big bill of expense. Before the hospital was opened, infectious diseases cases, involving the practical disruption of the home and six weeks' expensive employment of nurses have been known to cost, the home thus affected, as much as $300. With the hospital, all this expense is saved, the disturbance and breaking up of the home avoided, and the inmates can come and go and attend to their ordinary avocation and duties like other citizens. A few hours spent in fumigation after the removal of the patient to the hospital, and the machinery of the home goes on as usual. The Isolation Hospital fully justifies itself, on the grounds of economy, the convenience of citizens, the protection of citizens, and in the interests of the public health.

LIBRARY IMPROVEMENTS.

We have in Peterborough an excellent Public Library building, admirably adapted to the purposes of such a public convenience, with a first-rate staff and a fairly good collection of books. But it may be inquired if the Library is equipped to its fullest measure of usefulness.

Brantford boasts of possessing a progressive Library Board, which, it is stated,

> Has recently inaugurated improvements that will make the library a most valuable educational factor in the community—indeed, for the first time in its history it has become the citizens' college."

Commenting on this point the Brantford Expositor says:

> The opening of the reading rooms for a few hours on Sunday afternoons is a wise step, and has already won favourable comment from the press of the Dominion. The men who toil in factories and offices during the week have now an opportunity to study the progress of events in the best magazines and journals, a thing which was denied them in the past. Indeed, only the leisure class and the unemployed, of whom there are fortunately not many in this city, have, for the most part, frequented the library reading rooms.

While the latter part of the above may not apply, altogether to the Peterborough public library, that is not to say the widened area of usefulness of the reading rooms, by a few hours of opening on Sunday afternoons, may not be considered. Such a proposal will doubtless meet the objection of those who insist upon the letter of the law of the Sabbath day. The Scribes and Pharisees of old, were the most rigid Sabbatarians, and withal, the most conspicuous hypocrites, whose books were lashed with the scorn of the Lord of the Sabbath, for their punctilious insistence upon the letter of the law to the neglect of the spirit. And we have His divine authority for apparent disregard of the letter of the law, in the interest of works of charity and mercy. We may not "do evil that good may come; but our Saviour teaches us that we may do good without doing evil in respect to too rigid and pharisacial insistence upon the letter of Sabbath day observance. We may be doing good by opening the library on Sunday afternoons for the benefit of those otherwise debarred from its use. A public library is for the whole public, and the whole public might well be admitted to the enjoyment of its privileges. But, in doing this, we must not violate the spirit of the Sabbath day—the day of rest. It would be sinful to ask the officials, who are busy with Library work all the week up to ten o'clock Saturday night, to open and work in the reading rooms on Sunday. We do not know how Brantford manages the matter, but this could be soon found out if it is considered desirable to imitate Brantford's example. In regard to another improvement the Brantford Expositor says:

> Libraries are often censured as institutions that cater to the novel-reading propensities of the public. The Board of the Public Library recognizes that the true purpose of the library is education in the highest sense of the word. To make the library fulfill its mission, several radical changes have recently been made. First in importance is the children's department. The children of Brantford for the future will have means of education which will form a splendid supplement to their school work. The room devoted to the young people will be equipped with books of interest to children, and with pictures and magazines that will appeal to their imaginations. The whole will be in charge of a competent person, who will endeavour to direct their reading and instil in them a love for the best literature. If the young are only properly directed as they grow older, and begin to use the general circulating library, the light and ephemeral in literature will appeal to them less than the masterpieces that at present too often lie with the pages uncut on the shelves.

Brantford also boasts of a thoroughly modern and sufficient reference library. Can Peterborough make the same boast? If an occupant of our reading room comes upon a foreign word or phrase in the course of his reading, can he turn to a Latin, Greek, French, Italian, German, or Spanish dictionary? Can a scholar who wishes to refresh his knowledge of any of these languages do the same? Certainly not, because it is said these fundamental reference books are not there. If a reader interested in Biblical literature wishes to find some specific information, is a Scripture concordance available?

The Board of our Library might well consider these things. We have splendidly housed our Public Library. We should get the limit of usefulness out of it. We should make its advantages available to the fullest reasonable extent for the busy artisan, for the school children, for those seeking amplified knowledge and elements of culture. These purposes will be served by providing for the opening of the library for a few hours on Sunday, as Brantford has done, by making it available, in the way Brantford has done, for the benefit of the children. We should, as Brantford has done, provide "the best dictionaries, encyclopaedias; the most recent works on technical subjects; the great ancient classics; the world's best histories", so that the lawyer, the clergyman, the teacher, the engineer the journalist, the factory workers, the merchant, may have access to works that will provide for their wants in the way of entertainment, instruction and profitable knowledge for use in their several callings. Our library should be made of all-round efficiency to serve the requirements of all classes of the community, for it is supported by the contributions of everybody who is a citizen.

Good New Legislation Governing Purchase of Firearms And Weapons

(Ottawa Citizen)

The provincial government of Ontario leads the continent in being the first legislature to put in force a thoroughly comprehensive law for restriction of the purchase, sale, or carrying of revolvers, knives and similar weapons susceptible of concealment on the person. The act is now in force, and it is desirable that the public, as well as the vendors of such weapons, should be thoroughly acquainted with its provisions and the punishment which can be awarded under it. It may be mentioned as a compliment to the local government that two days ago one of the members for New York city introduced in the Albany legislature a bill almost identical in its provisions and wording.

From now on it is illegal for any person to expose for sale any bowie knife, dagger, metal knuckles, slung shot, or similar weapon, or to sell a revolver, pistol or air gun to any private individual unless the purchaser produces a permit from the chief of police, and such permits must not be given to any one under eighteen years of age. The penalty is a fine not exceeding $200 or less than $25 or imprisonment not exceeding six months. The person selling the revolver, pistol or airgun must keep on file the permit produced by the customer as evidence of his right to make the sale.

In addition to this the person selling the revolver, pistol or airgun must keep a record of the date of the sale, name of the maker, serial number of the weapon, and the name, address and occupation of the purchaser. Under no circumstances shall a weapon be sold which does not bear a serial number and the maker's name. A contravention of either of these regulations shall be punishable by the same penalties as are provided for the other offences. The value of these latter clauses can be well understood as affording a great advantage to the police in tracing up the man who commits a crime with either of the three weapons. If after a murder had been committed it had been possible in the past to positively identify the owner of the weapon with which the crime was committed the securing of a conviction would have been simplified in hundreds of cases. In future the man who commits a crime with a weapon that has been registered will of necessity need to make desperate efforts to either conceal or destroy it, and in doing so may give himself away. On the other hand, if an individual suspected of a crime is shown to have been the possessor of a registered weapon, and is unable to produce it, the fact will at least add one link to a chain of circumstantial evidence; while his efforts to explain away its disappearance may involve him in contradictions that will make further evidence.

The new law will also go far to frustrate crimes, so common in the past, where semi-deranged people or persons acting on impulse of passion, have gone into stores, purchased revolvers and proceeded to take their own or other people's lives. Nine-tenths of the crimes of that ecription in this province would have been prevented in the past if the individuals had had to appear before a chief of police and apply for a permit and explain their reasons for requiring the use of a pistol. It is surprising to think that such a state of affairs should have continued so long. Up to a few days ago, any person who did not by his demeanour afford ample evidence that he was either crazed or labouring under intense excitement, could go into a store and purchase a weapon with which to kill himself or somebody else, without the slightest restriction. In fact every vendor of revolvers could scarcely be expected to make a lightning diagnosis of a case of insanity, or to be a Sherlock Holmes who could read a criminal's thoughts. But, in addition to this, in every case there are numerous places for the sale of second hand weapons, where it is safe to say the purchaser would have the benefit of the doubt rather than spoil a sale.

In the course of a few years, if the new law is well enforced, nearly all the small arms in Ontario will be brought and registered at some place or other, though in the meantime there will necessarily exist a large number of revolvers that were in the possession of people before the act came into force. These will gradually disappear or be registered, because under the act any second hand store keeper who buys a revolver will have to keep a record of it, and such weapons as do not bear a serial number cannot be sold even second hand.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Instead of the United States annexing Canada, Canada is annexing the United States—by degrees and not very slow degrees, either. Canada is annexing the United States by individuals, by families, by squads, by companies, by regiments. At the rate immigration is now going into the Canadian west, from the United States, it will not be long before we shall have annexed the flower of the United States' farmers.

Westminster Confession Keeps Ministers From Church?

St. Catharines, May 3.—Yesterday afternoon Hamilton presbytery gave an attentive ear to the motion by Rev. John Young, to recommend to the general assembly the entire removal or radical moderation of the question, "Do you believe in the Westminster Confession of Faith?" now put to applicants for ordination. It was argued that the demand for an affirmative answer is driving men from the ministry. The question was forwarded to the general assembly without local discussion.

The calls of Rev. R. Young of Packenham, and Rev. R. M. Fee of Dunnville, to Pettypiece, Man., were sustained, but that of St. Andrew's Church, Toronto, to Rev. Dr. Gray of Dundas, was deferred until a special meeting in Hamilton on the 16th. The presbytery recommended that in future the minimum stipend be $1,200.

Six Months For Manslaughter.

Toronto, May 3.—Norman Henry, better known upon the streets which he frequented as "Moon-Eye," pleaded guilty before Chief Justice Sir William Meredith in the criminal assizes yesterday morning to the crime of manslaughter. He was sent to the Central Prison for six months. He had killed Nicola Saramana, an Italian, by striking him in a brawl in West Queen street. The Italian fell and was later arrested as a drunk. Later it was found that his skull was fractured, and he was taken to St. Michael's Hospital from police court, where he died.

The chief justice, in pronouncing sentence, told the young man that had it not been patent that there was no intention to inflict serious injury, he would have made the sentence much more severe.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

"YES, it is too bad she should have had to miss the luncheon, but really I can't help thinking she is apt to be a hypochondriac; so think too much about herself and give in to her nerves too much."

The criticised was an unfortunate little woman born with a delicate, sickly body which she had never been able to take proper care of. A message had just come from her that she had been suddenly taken with one of the terrible sick headaches to which she was subject, and would not be able to attend the luncheon at which we were gathered.

The critic was a large robust young woman who has scarcely ever known a sick day.

She was born of healthy parents, was a perfectly healthy child and has been healthy ever since.

She says she hasn't had the doctor for fifteen years, and hasn't laid abed a day since she had the measles.

She is a splendid specimen of perfectly healthy womanhood.

She is also, I think, a splendid object lesson of the value of being ill occasionally.

For the brilliant, healthy quality of her is like nothing so much as a diamond, beautiful and sparkling but hard—oh, so hard.

Her criticism of the little woman is a sample of her instinctive attitude towards all pain and sickness and suffering.

She simply doesn't understand.

Well, how should she?

Anymore than a man born blind should understand light?

No, I happen to know that this woman often wonders why men do not like her better, and why she has almost no close friends among women. She is rather fine looking and has had much admiration, but I doubt if she has ever had a lover.

It seems strange to her.

It doesn't to me.

Why should she?

Would one seek to warm one's hands with a diamond.

Sometimes I wonder—suppose this woman should be quite ill for a month or so, really suffer, really know the torture of unendurable pain, the blessedly exquisite sensation of the cessation of pain, (I have often felt like parodying the vulgar but clever, "Only a king should have the itch; it's such a luxury to scratch," with "only a king should suffer pain; it's such a luxury to have it cease"), could undergo the agony of utter weakness and the heart's springtime of gradually returning strength, might she not come back to us a different woman, and who could awaken love, where formerly she could command only admiration.

Perhaps several of her.

And aren't you convinced whenever you get close enough to her to feel the hardness underneath the brilliance, the lack of warmth despite the sparkle, that much as we dread and fear and hate it, perhaps we all do need pain occasionally to make us understand ,to make us lovable; in short, to make us human?

Ruth Cameron

T. P. Conneff had apparently finished with athletics twice during his wonderful career, yet the first time he made a re-appearance he improved his mile record from 4 min. 21 3-5 secs. to 4 mins. 17 4-5 secs. After going into retirement, he was again resurrected for the 1906 International games, and during the season he improved the mile record to 4 min. 15 3-5 secs., only surpassed by his fellow countryman, G. B. Tinclar (4 min 15 1-5 secs.) and the Wiltshire runner, W. G. George (4 min. 12 3-4 secs.) Besides Guy Haskins, Australasia has two wonders in W. A. Woodger (sprinter) and Harold Hardwick (swimmer.) Patching, of South Africa, and McMillan, the Cambridge University crack, are the only other Britishers, who apear to be on a par with Woodger, all three having run the 100 yards in 10 secs. As to Hardwick, his remarkable swimming ability lately makes it evident that the cracks of the Motherland will be well tested. T. E. Battersby was not himself all through last season, but if he can recover his 1909 form, he might beat the world at one mile.

Marathon Runners.

One reason English Marathon men failed so badly at the Olympic games of 1908, was due to their want of experience. The writer was alone in efforts to induce the cracks to accustom themselves to going the distance, but was assailed on all sides for giving advice likely to make the cracks break down or go stale. It ought to be obvious that if a man cannot run 26 miles slowly without breaking down, he is of little use for a Marathon race. Further, runs over the full course enable a competitor to find out useful points, such as where to expect a bad time, how to take hills, the best form of shoes, and above all the folly of taking solid foods during the race.

English runners are still inclined to "coddle" themselves, and seem to think one big race a season is enough. This was shown by the absence of cracks in the Southend Marathon race on Bank holiday. This would have been a fine opportunity for the crack training for the Polytechnic Harriers Marathon race at the end of May, but they refrained. The race served to show that the local crack, Thorogood, is a very useful runner, for he again carried off the honour and ran the 26 miles, 385 yards in the fair time of 2 hours, 46 mins. 51 secs.

Holiday Sports.

The Salford Harriers sports at Manchester, and the ten miles Midland championship at Birmingham, were the chief events at the Easter holiday fixtures. E. Owen, the 1909 7 mile champion, and W. Scott, the Northern 10 miles champion, had a good race in the two miles level event at Salford. Scott was suffering from a bad toe and failed to do himself justice, Owen outsprinting him at the finish and winning in 9 mins. 59 1-5 secs., which hardly compares with the 9 mins. 46 secs. for the first two miles in the ten miles championship Scott won the previous Saturday.

The Midland race demonstrated that F. N. Hibbins is coming back to form, as he easily beat all his rivals, though the time was rather slow. If he is as well as when he defeated Scott for National cross country honours, he will make the Northerner go in the 10 miles flat championship on April 29th.

Marine Motoring.

England had the fastest boat at the Monte Carlo motor boat regatta, but Germany showed up best in regard to reliability. In the all-important Coupe des des Nations race (62 1-2 miles, Maple Leaf III was an absentee, Britain's hope being Ursula. The latter did splendidly for half the journey, time 45 mins 17 sec., but something went wrong later and she stopped. Victory went to Herr Fr. Lurssen's Lurssen-Daimler in 2 hours, 4 min. 20 secs. France and Spain being second and third. The event, therefore, shows that the race is not always to the swift.

England got some satisfaction for the defeat when Ursula showed the best speed in the marine mile sprint for the Prince of Monaco's Cup, the Duke of Westminster's boat covering the course in 2 min. 34 secs.

A French Phenomenon.

English sportsmen were very anxious to see W. H. Laurents, the conqueror of A. F. Wilding, compete in the All-England lawn tennis championship, and overtures will be made to the young Frenchman to journey to Wimbledon. Frenchmen have been making steady progress in the lawn tennis world of late and the success of Laurents will encourage others. His victory over Wilding at the French open championship at Paris was no fluke. The New Zealander led off by winning the first and second games at 7-5 and 6-4. Laurents secured the next at 6-1 and the fourth and fifth, after splendid struggles, at 13-11 and 9-6. Wilding has been doing a lot of playing lately, and is possibly a bit stale; all the same it is a wonderful performance for a boy of 16 years of age to lower the colours of England's champion. The winner shows a splendid all-round knowledge of the game, and his service is particularly good. Always providing, he does not overdo it, he ought to acquire world's championship honours in due course.

Jockeyship.

Many of us are prone to place great store on the cracks of the past, and this loyalty to champions of other times is a nice trait. Some critics, however, rather overdo it, and see no merit in new ideas. That well known turf writer "Augur" of the Sporting Life recently compared the late Fred Archer with modern jockeys, whom he terms "monkey crouchers." Archer was the greatest jockey of his time, and had his days been 20 years later he would still probably have headed the winning jockeys' list for thirteen successive years. This, however, would only have been possible by the adoption of the modern forward set. It is only rank prejudice which prevents a man recognizing that horses feel the weight less when it is over the withers, than when in the old position. It ought to be also plain to all that a forward and crouching position behind a horse's neck means less wind resistance than the "seat" adopted in the days of Buckham and Archer. That the modern style gives jockeys less command over the mounts, is accepted, but if the advantages did not outweigh the disadvantages, jockeys, trainers and owners would not be converts.

It would be rather interesting to take two reliable horses of equal merit and let them race, with jockeys riding in the old and new style, reversing the jockeys for a second trial.

Two Modern Jockeys.

The Epsom meeting this week has served to show two young jockeys to great advantage. In the race for the Great Metropolitan, Kilkroney was left about 100 yards at the start. Instead of "belting" after his field, Little Winter remembered the race was 2 1-4 miles, and gradually made up his ground, and coming with a rush in the last 300 yards, won by half a length.

W. Huxley was the other jockey to distinguish himself, as besides handling Mushroom with fine judgment in the city and suburban, he rode three other winners (counting a dead heat as a win) on Wednesday. No apprentice has ever previously won four events in one day at Epsom and the young Australian should have a big future. Mushroom, by the way, was bought by Butters for 65 guineas and if "the son of Common were entered for the Derby, he would certainly find support. Touching on the chief race of the year, the wagering indicates how very open it is considered, and the prospects of a foreign victory are thought to be good.

In General.

Stevenson will have to do big things to prevent Inman wresting the billiard championship from him. The challenger gained a lead of over a 1000 early in the game, and though Stevenson got within 300 yesterday, Inman drew away again last evening and a rare struggle to the end may be expected.

The King's Coronation Cup Polo Tournament at Ranelagh promises to be one of the events of the season.

The arrival of E. W. Schneider from Sydney will help make the big cycling races of great interest. He is credited with riding one mile (flying start and unpaced) in 2 mins. 1 3-5 secs, so that he ought to push the best of the home cracks.

The Derby and County Harriers easily defeated the Racing Club de France in a cross country race at St. Cloud on Sunday, H. Baldwin of the visiting team being first man home.

C. J. Wilson won the English professional one mile roller skating championship at Brixton on Wednesday, his time being 3 mins. 7 secs.

Glasgow Rangers finished well in the Scottish League championship, the victory over 3rd Lanark yesterday, making the honour theirs.

Sportsmen are hopeful that the efforts being made to arrange an athletic contest between a team from Yale and Harvard and a team from Oxford and Cambridge will bear fruit.

Ian Hague has been training more seriously than usual for his match against Bomb Wells on Monday, and he is expected to take the ring at less than 14 st. (196 lbs.)

Some Notes Concerning The Olympic Games Changes In The Rules

The publication of the events and conditions for the 1912 Olympic games has given rise to considerable discussion. The dropping of wrestling in the catch-as-catch-can style does not please Englishmen and one can well imagine the United States' athletic officials will not view this matter with pleasure.

The proposed alteration in the conditions governing the tug of war also comes in for much criticism. Stipulating that the boots of competitors shall have no metal or other substance to help towards a better footing on the grass, is perfectly right. Nor is there any objection to the new rule doing away with the captain or coach outside the actual pulling team. The decision that the competitors must face each other, and not turn on the rope, meets with big opposition here, however. Really, there seems no good reason for this alteration, and it might well be left to the competitors to pull as they think best. As well tell the men they must not place the right hand before the left. It is open to doubt whether turning is any real advantage. It naturally brings another set of muscles into play, but the weight must be off the rope at the moment of turning, and when the word to turn is given, the rival team should heave, which might upset calculations.

Other Events.

From the published list of events, it appears that there is only one walking race, instead of two as last time. Other missing events as compared to 1908 are: 400 metres hurdles, steeple chase, 3 miles team race, and relay race. Against this, however, the programme includes a 4 1- 2miles cross-country team race, and flat races of 5,000 and 10,000 metres.

Relay racing is now so general, that it seems a pity to drop the event, and it is to be hoped this will be brought home to the Swedish officials, and a relay race added to the proposed events.

Cracks from Australasia.

The records of the athletes selected to represent Australasia at the festival of Empire sports (to be held in June at the Crystal Palace) indicate that the other teams will have a hard task. Perhaps the greatest interest centres in the selection of Guy Gaskins for the half mile and one mile. Since he ran one mile in 4 mins. 20 3-5 secs. at Cambridge (U.S.A.) on June 1, 1907. English sportsmen have been keen to see him run. Many were sorry he did not compete at the 1908 Olympiad, and it will be pleasing should he run at the eEstival and Empire meeting. We have not heard of him since 1907, but he cannot be too old to do big things.

RICHARD HALL & SON

THE VALUE OF ALFALFA

Some of the best stands of alfalfa have been secured from sowing it alone without a nurse crop after the regular spring seeding has been put in. If sown on well prepared land that is fairly rich and sown some time in May or early in June alfalfa is reasonably certain to give a pretty fair return of hay the first season. Alfalfa that sown under proper conditions this month will give a yield of hay in late August or early September approximating all the way up to two tons to the acre, depending upon the favourable condition of the season, the soil preparation and the other circumstances that may influence the crop.

More Certain of a Crop.

It is probable that one is more certain of securing a satisfactory crop of alfalfa when it is sown without a nurse crop. In fact, in several climates such as they have in Manitoba and the Northwest, it is claimed it is the only means of securing a permanent stand of alfalfa and that to sow it with a nurse crop is to court certain failure. Many of the leading alfalfa growers in the alfalfa growing states of the American Union sow their alfalfa seed alone and they give substantial reasons for doing so. Among other things one distinct advantage of sowing the crop without other grain to "protect" it is that one gets a much earlier return than is otherwise the case, and hence he soon realizes on the rather large investment he has had to make for the alfalfa seed.

Eligible For Competition.

Any of the farmers of Peterborough county when it is sown without a nurse crop any time this spring or summer may enter the same in the alfalfa competition which has been arranged especially for the farmers of this county. They may profit from all of the advantages to which any of the other competitors are entitled, and, judging from the experience of other farmers elsewhere who have sown alfalfa without a nurse crop they stand to win out in the competition over plots that have been sown with the ordinary grain crops in the usual way of sowing clover and grass seeds.

Conditions of Contest.

A field of alfalfa to be entered in the competition must be of this season's sowing and be at least three acres in extent. Competitors may sow the crop in any way they choose, but are advised by Farm and Dairy to sow 20 lbs. of the best seed obtainable to the acre and to be sure to provide inoculation (bacteria) either in the form of nitro-culture from the O. A. College, Guelph, which may be had at a cost of 25 cents for enough to inoculate three acres, or inoculation may be provided by sowing 200 lbs. (per acre) of soil from an old successful alfalfa field where the alfalfa roots have plenty of nodules. Prepare the land well; manure the land if possible so as to induce rapid growth and the crop should be a certainty.

Other Reminders.

Our readers are again reminded that there is no entry fee whatever required of those who enter this alfalfa competition and there are many advantages to be derived aside from the splendid trophies that will be awarded. The fields will be judged this year on or about the first of October and again next year on or about the first of June, at which times all competitors will be visited by an alfalfa expert who will act as judge.

Intending competitors should send in their entries at once to the Secretary, Chas. C. Nixon, care of Farm and Dairy, Peterborough, Ont.

Funeral Of Late Walter Head To Be Held To-morrow

The community was shocked to learn of the Examiner last night of the tragically sudden death of Mr. Walter Head, who was killed at the Golf Links yesterday by being crushed by a heavy stone.

The late Mr. Head, who was born in Cheshire, England, came out to Peterborough in 1883, and had been a resident ever since. He was well known and highly respected in the community.

Yesterday Mr. Head decided to get out of a big stone on the links by levying it, the rock being too big to be easily removed. Accordingly he dug a hole close to the stone with the intention of rolling it in and covering it up with earth. However, while he was working at the bottom of the hole the earth around the piece of rock gave way, allowing the stone to drop upon Mr. Head, crushing in his chest and undoubtedly killing him almost at once. Just when the accident occurred is not known. Mr. Robt. Neill discovered the body shortly after 3 o'clock, happening to pass close to the hole. The excavation was in plain view of the Club House, but from this latter it was not possible to see whether anyone was working in the hole or not and it was not until Mr. Neill approached the place that he found the unfortunate man. He at once notified Mr. Head's relatives and the body was removed.

The late Mr. Head was about thirty-three years of age, was married, and is survived by his wife and two sons. Four brothers, Messrs. Arthur and Frank of Peterborough, Fred of Toronto, John in the Northwest, and one sister, Miss Mary Head, of Toronto, are left. The deceased was a member of Court Stanley, A. O. F. This was his third year as caretaker of the Peterborough Golf and Country Club.

The funeral will take place on Thursday afternoon, at 2.30 o'clock from the residence of his brother, Mr. Arthur Head, 257 Bethune street, to Little Lake cemetery.

TWENTY SIX-FOOTERS

A Startling Example of How Oats Create Height

Archdeacon Sinclair, in advising boys to eat much oatmeal, said this: "Among my brothers and my father's brothers and sisters there were 20 six-footers, all brought up on oatmeal."

Oats contain more body-building food, more brain-building food, more nerve-building food than any other grain that grows. No other item in all human diet compares in importance with oats. Nothing else creates so much energy.

But thousands of people buy this food carelessly. They accept oatmeal made from oats as they run—the plump and the small, the rich and the worthless.

Quaker Oats is made from the cream of the oats, selected by 62 siftings. Only two pounds in a bushel are good enough for use in this food. The result is a richness and flavor that all enjoy, and the maximum value as food.

Yet Quaker Oats, despite its quality, costs but one-half cent per dish. Does it pay to take something inferior?

Presentation Was Made

In Recognition of Long and Faithful Service of Bro. Wm. Taylor

At the last meeting of Lapsdowne Lodge, S.O.E., Bro. Wm. Taylor was made the recipient of a handsome chair as a small token of the appreciation and esteem in which he was held by his fellow brethren. Bro. Taylor has been a member of the first committee for 27 years.

The presentation was made by Bro. Bennett, assisted by Bro. Dr. Young.

Bro. C. S. Kitney and others, in a short address, took occasion to express their appreciation of Bro. Taylor's long service.

MAKING A SUCCESS

Mr Geo. H. Williamson's Efforts in Fort William Meets With Results

The many friends of Mr. George H. Williamson, formerly the General Secretary of the Peterborough Y. M. C. A. will be pleased to learn that his work in the West has been more than successful. The Association at Fort William, where he is now Secretary, has just finished a campaign for the magnificent sum of $100,000, and has been successful in raising that amount. The intention is to build a new Y.M.C.A. there which will meet the growing needs of that progressive city.

If your hands could talk, they would ask for Tiger Hand Cleaner.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES

In spite of the most unfavorable weather of yesterday over twenty members of the Boys' Department of the local Y.M.C.A. journeyed over to the Riverside Athletic Park and enjoyed a game of baseball. This field will be open to all members of the Boys' Department every Tuesday and Thursday afternoons throughout the summer. All outdoor sports will be indulged in there — baseball, athletics, etc. As a special inducement for beginners the athletic events will be graded. Everybody has a chance. Individual prizes may be given. If you want to know what's doing, be on the job. Tuesdays and Thursdays each week.

The Summer ticket at the Y.M.C.A. entitles any young man, who purchases it to all the privileges of the Association, for four months for $3. With the beautiful Riverside Park in the hands of the Physical Department this season and with all the other privileges which the Association offers there will doubtless be a large influx of members this month. To get your money's worth the sooner you get in your application the better.

THE WEATHER

—Though this is the third of May, snow was to be seen on the ground this morning, and the air was quite cold. The thermometer registered six degrees of frost last night. This is a great change from less than a week ago. The spring, however, is not particularly late, as compared with other years. On May 4, 1907, we had a snow storm, with six inches of snow, and the snow plows were sent their rounds. Maples did not begin to leaf until May 17, and were not in full leaf until June 4. The Maples usually begin to leaf May 10, and come out in full leaf by May 22 to May 25. —W. P.

THE TWENTIETH ANNUAL MEETING OF THE Y.W.C.A.

Encouraging Reports on the Year's Work Were Presented Last Night—Miss MacDonald, National Secretary of the Y.W.C.A., of Japan, Delivered an Inspiring Address on Work in That Country—A Splendid Meeting.

The twentieth annual meeting of the Y.W.C.A. was held last night in the Gymnasium of the 'Y'. Mrs. Rogers very acceptably occupying the chair. A fairly large gathering of ladies was present. Revs. Keith, Rollins and Webb were also in attendance. A very enjoyable and interesting programme was given, a feature of which was an address by Miss McDonald, secretary of the National Y.W.C.A. of Japan, on the advance of the missionary work of that country, and the reading of the annual reports.

The following were the items on the programme:

Song—Miss Pringle.

The minutes of last meeting were read and confirmed.

Violin solo—Miss Logan.

Address—Miss McDonald.

The business transacted, consisted of the reading of reports, etc. The Superintendents' report read as follows:

It affords me much pleasure to present to you my second annual report. We have had a prosperous year and many have testified to their enjoyment of their sojourn with us.

Our whole building has been renovated and presents a pleasing appearance.

Every department has been replenished and is in a good condition.

Our hot water system has been very satisfactory all winter. Now, we have the kitchen tank for general purposes.

We present a clean sheet, as regards our bills. Our cellar is well stored with fruit and canned vegetables. Our meals give satisfaction and we have many outsiders coming.

During July and August we almost paid our expenses, which shows that we are better known and we hope every holiday season to be well filled, also to keep up our reputation for a comfortable home.

We have had several times 60 boarders during June, September, October and March.

My financial report shows $1,087.75 more received than last year, which I submit to you.

Yours faithfully,

Florence Read, Supt.

EXTERMINATION OF THE HOUSE FLY

From Farm and Dairy.

"As we realize more clearly the specific disease-spreading power of the house fly, I think we must surely solve the problem of their extermination, tremendously difficult though it seems. Naturally, cooperative destruction of breeding places is the first step in eradication. Until we have a more widely awakened public sentiment and united efforts of all health agencies, and perhaps better scientific knowledge of fly habits, each housekeeper's problem must be how, single-handed, to keep her home free from their contamination. The right beginning is making our habitation as nearly fly-proof as possible.

"For years I have thought there is nothing so effective as sticky fly paper in getting rid of these flies that will come inside, in spite of all precautions. I still use it in the kitchen where they are necessarily more numerous than in other parts of the house," says Mrs. Belle Case Lafollette, quoted in the Ottawa Valley Journal; "but I want to tell of my personal experience last year in keeping other rooms clear of them. I bought a "fly killer" for each room of the house, and hung it in a convenient place. Then I tried to instill each member of the household with the feeling that a fly is dangerous, unclean, and should be killed instantly. I was very much surprised at the result.

Heretofore it had been my experience that the most persistent use of fly paper did not get rid of all the flies in the dining-room. A few will escape to destroy the family peace at meal time. But the systematic use of the "fly killer" once or twice a day made the dining-room free of every one. Other rooms in the house can be attended to more easily just by killing each fly as discovered. But it is very important to have the "fly killer" handy, or it will be neglected. My confidence in this method is confirmed by the experience of a very efficient housekeeper who has succeeded in keeping a large boarding house clear of flies last summer by this method.

The "killers" should not be put away in cold weather, but should be kept handy to destroy those flies that remain. Though unobtrusive and apparently harmless, they are not as innocent as they appear. They help to make the start for next year.

One other personal "discovery" may have value. I once had great trouble, as the cool weather came on, with flies gathering in the morning in the dining-room. It was at wits' end to know where they came from. One morning, as I took the screen from the fireplace, I observed that the flies swarmed out into the room. The blazing fire we enjoyed in the evenings warmed the chimney and attracted the flies to our hearth and home. We tacked a wire netting over the top of the chimney and have never had trouble with their unwelcome visitations since.

THE LAWN

From Farm and Dairy.

Which, after sweeping broadly round the house,

Went trickling through the shrubberies in a stream

Of tender turf, and wore and lost itself.

Among the Acacias.

Mrs Browning here paints such a picture as all love to dwell upon. Who among us Farm and Dairy readers has not some pleasing memory of just such a grass set scene? Such surroundings bespeak the peace, the calm, the restfulness so welcome to the weary soul, so kind to the tired eye. Not one of us but admires a well kept lawn, and better still, not a man or woman among us but may have one at small outlay of time and money.

THE SOIL

The best grass growing land is a good loam. Any well drained, well prepared area of any other sort of soil may, however, be so handled as to insure a pleasing result. Where building operations have recently been going on, such residues as bricks, stone chippings, etc., should be buried at least six inches below the surface. The surface should be graded with a slight fall away from buildings and any depressions or hollows should be filled in even somewhat higher than the surrounding land to allow for settling. Manure should then be applied, about one pound per square foot of lawn surface. After scattering the manure evenly over the surface, the whole area should be well plowed or spaded. If time presses, or labor is too expensive, as will be the case in many homes into which Farm and Dairy goes, plowing or spading may be done only the once, and that to a moderate depth. If it is desired to insure the very best results possible, the land should be plowed, burying the manure to a moderate depth (four or five inches), then later, after harrowing and rolling several times, or when in a good state of tilth plowed again about half an inch deeper than before. Harrowing and rolling will be again in order and any new unevenness due to settling should now be corrected. After harrowing, levelling and rolling till in good shape, it should be left untouched for a week or ten days.

SEEDING

After the surface has lain fallow for 10 days or so, it should be again levelled and well harrowed. If not very firm underfoot it will be advisable to roll with a heavy roller once or twice before seeding. The seed should be divided into two equal portions and the first part scattered as evenly as possible over the whole lawn, walking from east to west while sowing. Each and every square foot of the whole lawn having received its fair share of the first half of the seed, the sower should then proceed to sow the second half of the seed as evenly as possible over the lawn, walking from north to south during the process, and again being careful to give every square foot of land its fair share of this the second part or other half of the seed as well as a fair proportion of the first part.

Carelessness in seed scattering is responsible for many patchy looking lawns, and is, in fact, the cause of not a few failures. The seed once sown, the whole surface should be lightly and evenly raked or harrowed. On most soils a rake will give better results than a harrow. The main point is to cover the seed, although at the same time one must guard against burying it too deep. After raking or lightly harrowing, the land should be rolled again, unless very damp, in which case the rolling operation should be postponed till a later date.

THE SEED

Many lawn grass mixtures are to be had at seed stores. Not infrequently these ready prepared mixtures contain a rather too large portion of weed seeds. It is important to bury grass seed free from weed seeds, since if preparation has been made as above outlined, the chances are very strongly in favor of a lawn free from weeds other than such as spring from seeds sown by wind or mixed with grass seed subsequent to proper preparation.

Taken all in all, probably the best grass to sow is Canadian Blue Grass, or failing that, Kentucky Blue Grass. Pains should be taken to secure a good sample of this grass, and it should then be sown liberally at the rate of about 50 lbs. an acre, or one pound to the 100 square yards.

AFTER TREATMENT

After the seed is sown the lawn should be well rolled, care being taken to pack as evenly as possible and retain a smooth surface. No rolling should be done, however, if the surface is at all damp when the seeding is performed. It would be much better to postpone the rolling for a day or two, or if the soil continues moist it might be advisable to postpone the rolling for two or three weeks.

After the grass is well up, should a drought occur or a heavy rain come and the surface dry up, it would be found advantageous to roll again, using a light roller. This will break the surface crust, create a mulch, and so encourage growth and insure a better stand. Care should be taken not to use the lawn mower upon the young grass, since this machine is almost certain to pull the grass out by the roots rather than clip it at this stage of growth. If weeds spring up or the grass becomes unsightly, the whole area should be carefully gone over with a sharp scythe rather than with the lawn mower.

SOWING A LAWN

The process of getting a lawn by sowing in, of course, rather slow. The seeding down method may be very often improved upon, at least so far as speed is concerned, by sod laying. For laying sod, practically the same preparation should be made as for seeding. The lawn maker should see that the sod supplied is thick enough to include a fair proportion of growing roots, and so insure the grass getting a good start in its new seeding ground.

Presentation To Mrs. Mowat

On Friday evening the choir of Trinity Methodist church and a few friends were entertained by Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Clement in honour of Mrs. T. J. Mowat, the organist of the church, who has resigned owing to removal from Berlin. The home of the host proved to be extremely well adapted for such a function and the guests deeply appreciated the warmth of the reception given. After a short practice, Mr. J. B. Weaver on behalf of the choir in a neat speech of appreciation presented to Mrs. Mowat a beautiful cut glass vase.

He was closely followed by Mr. Clement, who, acting for the Quarterly Official Board, presented Mrs. Mowat with a magnificent leather club-bag. Mr. Clement expressed the Board's thankfulness for the capable manner in which the position of organist in which the position of organist had been filled during the past two years, adding that the present was a token of both her official and personal worth in the church. Several solos and other musical selections were rendered and a delightful luncheon was served.

FOR ECZEMA

A Treatment That is Guaranteed to Give Relief

Eczema is parasitic in nature. It is said to be a contagious disease. Until the parasite or germ hidden in the skin is completely destroyed and removed, eczema cannot be cured. Fully one-third of all skin disease is in the form of eczema. It affects persons of all ages and classes. It is very prevalent among people between the ages of 20 and 40.

We unhesitatingly guarantee to return every cent paid us for Rexall Eczema Ointment in every case where it fails to give entire satisfaction. It possesses remarkable cleansing, antiseptic, healing and curative power. Its great value is very pronounced in the treatment of eczema, whether of the dry, scaley sort or of the weeping type, where there is a constant flow of ill-smelling excretion, or of the other intermediary forms, such as ring worm, acne, pimples, blotches and discolourations.

Rexall Eczema Ointment is very useful in treating ulcers, sores, wounds, insect bites, nettle rash and hives. $60,000 IN PRIZES

Canadian National Exhibition Prize List for 1911 is Out

The prize list of the Canadian National Exhibition, August 25th to September 11th, which is being distributed, shows that the prizes have been increased in nearly every department, till the grand total reaches $60,000.

As no prizes are given for manufacturers, the whole of this amount goes to live stock, dairy products, horticulture, woman's work, educational exhibits, and similar lines of Canadian Industry.

The increase in the amount given to live stock is particularly noticeable. Nearly $5,000, has been added to the horses alone, with special prizes of $500, each for the best animal in the Holstein and Shorthorn classes, show that the cattle have not been neglected. Poultry also gets an additional $1,600.

In women's and children's work and educational exhibits new classes have been added, and in short every department shows the exhibition is keeping pace with its wonderful increase in attendance.

That the management fully expect to reach the million mark this year is evidenced by the announcement that the spectacular attraction will be The Festival of Empire, a reproduction of the glories of the coronation ceremonies, in which 1,500 performers will take part, while the famous Coldstream Guards Band, musicians to the Royal Household, will be the musical feature.

SHORTAGE OF APPLE TREES

From Farm and Dairy.

There seems to be a marked shortage of apple trees this spring and I cannot obtain them from the nursery. Would it be a practical proposition for me to take scions from apples in my cellar and grow a limited number in my garden. How should I proceed to get satisfactory results?—S. H., Bruce Co., Ont.

There are two ways of getting around the shortage of desirable varieties of nursery stock. The first, and probably the easier, would be to purchase from the nurseryman stock of hardy varieties suitable for top-working to commercial sorts. These would be planted in the ordinary way and top-worked either by budding during the second or third season, or by top-grafting at the age of six or eight years. This method would obviate delay in planting, and if properly carried out would give satisfactory results.

With regard to the practicability of growing nursery stock at home, in the first place it is rather a slow process, in that three or four years will necessarily elapse before the trees could be grown to planting size. It is not a difficult matter to grow trees at home, but considerable care and attention are required. Seeds may be taken from any hardy variety of apple and the seedlings grown for one season in the garden. They should be thoroughly cultivated in order to encourage strong growth. They may be taken up at the end of one season and root-grafted during the winter or held over until the succeeding spring and planted out again to be budded in the summer. The latter is probably the easier method. It will be two or three years from the time the grafting or budding is done until the trees are of sufficient size to be planted into the permanent orchard.

AN ADVANTAGE WITH HOME STOCK

The principal advantage to be derived from growing one's own nursery stock is that buds or grafts, as the case may be, may be taken from the best bearing trees. It is said that certain trees bear better fruit, and more of it than others, and these, of course, are the best specimens from which to propagate. This advantage can be secured by either of the methods outlined above. If trees of such varieties as Tolman Sweet, Hibernal, McMahon White, or Pewaukee are purchased from a nursery, they may be budded or grafted, using for the purpose buds or grafts from the best trees available of the commercial variety desired.—Prof. J. W. Crow, O.A.C., Guelph, Ont.

GOOD FOR HENS

From Farm and Dairy.

"Alfalfa is great stuff for the hens," said Mr. John Elliott, of Peterboro Co., Ont., who called on the editors of Farm and Dairy last week. "Mr. Marsh is quite right in what he says about alfalfa and poultry. I had an acre of alfalfa near my barn, and my 150 hens, which were allowed to run upon it,—kept the alfalfa cropped closely to the ground.

"In fact, the hens like alfalfa so well that there is danger of them ruining a crop of it. I had a splendid catch on that piece near my barn, and I just took the first cutting from it, and after that the hens took the rest, leaving nothing more to cut. There was nothing else pastured on that piece save the hens.

"While the hens were running upon the alfalfa they got but little else. They gave a splendid egg yield, and we considered that they laid well. They ate the alfalfa most too much, and I am sure that they helped to kill it."

A single setting of eggs costing $2 or $3 (often less) will start any of us out with a high class stock of poultry. In many parts of Ontario, there are farmers who never sell eggs in a breeding season at less than $1 for 13, while their neighbors, with common stock, are selling theirs at about 20 cents a dozen. Many more could profit from the better trade.

In the western provinces in the hatching season eggs from pure bred stock are demanded in carloads. The prices offered, while not fancy, are several times greater than the prices obtainable for eggs from common breeding stock for commercial use.

The main essential in catering to the western market is that all farmers in one section have not only pure bred stock, but stock of one breed only, so that carload lots of eggs from hens of uniform breeding can be secured readily. In one section of Huron Co., Ont., this industry is regarded as one of the most profitable in connection with the farm. There is no reason why many other sections in Ontario should not cater to the same trade with greatly increased returns from their poultry.

At any rate, any man ought to keep pure bred poultry if he has hens about at all. There is a distinct satisfaction in having a uniform flock, not to mention the extra profits.

Among the hard-wooded vines adapted to culture where shade is an important feature our native ampelopsis deserves special attention. It is of extremely rapid growth, has ample and beautiful foliage, and requires very little attention. When used about verandas it should be trained over coarse wire netting. After it reaches the roof of the veranda allow it to attach itself to the house walls and go to the eaves of the dwelling if it wants to. This vine is most ornamental in autumn, when its leaves take on rich colors of crimson and maroon.

THE DETAILS OF THE CORONATION DAY CELEBRATION IN PETERBORO' OUTLINED

Matter is Taken Up at Meeting of the Reception Committee—57th Regiment Will Take Part in the Observance of the Day.

INAUGURATION OF CHIMES

A programme for the celebration of Coronation day in Peterborough on a large scale was laid before the Reception committee of the City Council last night and was received with approval. Committees from other bodies will also take up the matter and it is expected that the day will be observed in a manner befitting the importance of the occasion, a big feature being the inauguration of the People's Chimes. Ald. Graham presided at the meeting and the following were present: Mayor Morrow, Ald. Anderson, Ald. Edgar, Mr. A. H Stratton, Mr. Vincent Eastwood and Rev. Canon Davidson.

The committee requested Rev. Canon Davidson to speak first. He outlined the programme for the celebration on Coronation day that had been thought out by himself and some of those present, and it seemed to meet with the approval of the committee.

It was moved by the Mayor, that Ald. Bradburn and Ald. Anderson be the committee to co-operate with the other committees, taking action as they saw fit. This was carried with the name of Mayor Morrow added to the committee. The programme, in part, outlined by Rev. Canon Davidson, was as follows:

June 22nd at 11 a.m., ordinary Coronation services will be held in the different churches. A platform for the speakers will have been erected in front of St. John's church, and at the close of the services, the 57th Regiment will line up in front of the church on the bank, and the people of the city will be invited to congregate here for the Coronation ceremonies.

Speeches will be made, and there will be an impressive ceremony at 12 o'clock, when His Worship Mayor Morrow will hand over the chimes to the Bishop, who will dedicate them. The regiment will then present arms and the chimes will ring out the Doxology, God Save the King, and Oh, Canada. A half hour concert will be given by the chimes while the people are going home. It was also suggested that luncheon be served in the Market Hall and that the citizens participate in it, the price of the luncheon to the citizens being 50 cents, and the visitors being entertained gratis. After the luncheon, speeches will be made by the distinguished visitors expected here for the occasion.

After this there will be a children's demonstration. The school children will be taken to Central Park and will sing patriotic songs, etc., and a few addresses will also be given. There will be a concert in the evening by the 57th Regimental Band, and the Salvation Army Band will also participate. The bells will ring a few evening selections.

Mr. Eastwood stated that he had been authorized to say on behalf of the commanding officer of the 57th that he would be pleased to co-operate with the Council in anything they wish.

CHIEF HOWARD HAS WRITTEN DEP. GRANGE AND CAPT. THOMAS ASKING FOR THEIR RESIGNATIONS

Are Given a Month in Which to Decide as to What Course They Will Take—In Event of Their Not Complying with the Chief's Request They Will Be Discharged —Regret is Expressed.

Following is a copy of the two letters that were received by Deputy Chief Grange and Capt. Thomas of the Peterborough Fire Department, respectively:

Dear Sir,—I am directed, by resolution of the Municipal Council to ask for your resignation.

While I regret the action the Council has taken in this matter, you will understand I am subordinate to the wishes of the Council, and if you do not place your resignation in my hands, to take effect on or before one month from this date, I shall discharge you from the service.

Yours truly,
Chief Fire Department.

When Chief Howard was seen by an Examiner representative this morning, he declined to discuss the matter.

SHOULD SUPPORT PRISONERS UNTIL PROVEN GUILTY

Important Statement Made at St. Catharines by President of Dominion Trades and Labour Council—He Would'nt Accept Verdict on Private Detective's Evidence.

ST. CATHARINES, ONT., MAY 4.—Speaking at a smoker here last night President Glocking, of the Dominion Trade and Labour Congress, stated that if McNamara and company are proven guilty of the crime of blowing up the LosAngeles Times, they should all be hanged; but he wouldn't trust or accept the verdict of the United States courts and private detectives' evidence, as both are rotten to the core. In the meantime all Canadian Unionists should rally to support the accused. In any event the affair was a great setback to trades unionism.

Toronto Leaders Pleased.

Among the labour leaders here this morning general satisfaction was expressed with the tenor of the remarks by President Glocking at St. Catharines on the McNamara case at Los Angeles. They say Canadian Labour men are not so ignorantly biased as to defend a man after the courts have brought him in guilty, but in the meantime they will rally to the support of McNamara.

SIR WILFRID TO ATTEND CORONATION AND CONFERENCE

Understanding Has Been Reached Between the Two Parties Which Practically Makes the Premier's Attendance a Certainty—No Decision Yet on Reciprocity Debate.

Ottawa, May 4.—As a result of a conference this morning between Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. R. L. Borden an understanding was reached, which makes it practically certain that the Prime Minister, with probably Sir Frederick Borden and Hon. L. P. Brodeur, will leave next week on the Virginian, sailing from Quebec on the 18th, to attend the Imperial Conference and the Coronation. The assurance was given by the Opposition leader that there would be no obstruction of supply in the Commons to carry on the administration for at least three or four months during the Premier's absence, and that the political crisis, threatened through the obstruction of supply and the forcing of an appeal to the country on the reciprocity issue, would not eventuate, at any rate during the Premier's absence, if, indeed, it eventuates at all. Thus far the two leaders have reached an understanding which will admit of Canada being represented at the two Imperial functions. This understanding is not coupled with any condition that the Government will in any way abandon its reciprocity proposals, as was the previous ultimatum of the Opposition as to the terms on which Sir Wilfrid could go to the Conference.

The decision is in line with urgent requests which have come from Great Britain, and with a general sentiment among the members on both sides of the House here that from every standpoint it was desirable that Canada should be represented by its First Minister at both the Conference and the Coronation.

The question as to what will happen to the reciprocity agreement in Parliament meanwhile, however, is still somewhat problematical, and there is no definite agreement yet on this. There is no question of the Government abandoning its position with regard to using every effort to put the agreement through the House this session. Two suggestions are under consideration. The House may remain in session during the Premier's absence, the rest of the sessional agenda, including considerably more than half of the work originally mapped out for the session put through with Mr. Fielding in charge, and the reciprocity debate when gone on with as would be done if the Premier was here. It is understood that outside of the reciprocity issue there will be no very strenuous objection made by the Opposition to the finishing up of the other work of the session. But if after the United States has ratified the agreement the Opposition still adheres to its policy of uncompromising hostility to the agreement and still refuses to allow the measure to come to a vote without an appeal to the country, then there may be an adjournment until September, when the Premier will be back and the fight again renewed in the House, with reciprocity as the sole issue.

The indications are that there will be an adjournment next month until September, if it is understood that when the House meets again the Government can have the assurance that the Opposition will allow the agreement to come to a vote. Failing this, the majority of the Liberals now seem to favour keeping the House in session right along until the Opposition gives up the fight.

The Conservatives will meet in caucus to-morrow to further reconsider their attitude on the question, and it would not be surprising, in view of the fact that a very considerable number of them are opposed to the present policy of keeping up the fight indefinitely, if their decision is to give the desired assurance that if an adjournment is agreed to by the Government the remaining business of the session will be expedited, and the reciprocity measure passed before the session is finally prorogued.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Borden had another conference in the Premier's room to-night, but it is said that no understanding was reached in regard to the business of Parliament during the Premier's absence beyond that noted above. The question as to continuing the House in session during the Premier's absence with important matters of public policy, exclusive of reciprocity, or of adjourning the session probably at the end of the month until his return in July or early August, will be considered by the Cabinet Council to-morrow. The latter course will be adopted only on the ground that it would be in the best interests of the country to temporarily postpone the proceedings of Parliament until the man chiefly responsible to the people for the conduct of public business should have returned from representing Canada's interests in Britain. It would not mean any weakening in the Government's unswerving determination to press the agreement through the House before this session finally closes.

FRICTION VS. SMOOTHNESS.

Whether or not Chevalier Bayard's dictum, "like master like man," applies in the case of municipal relations, there seems to be a great contrast between the School Board and the City Council in the smoothness and friction of the machinery controlled by the two bodies, respectively. The Board of Education has about seventy educational servants under its authority—teachers, janitors, etc., and so far as the public knows, the machinery runs without a hitch or jar. But the relations of the City Council to a dozen firemen is productive of as many jars as there are in the battery room of the fire hall. Upon what grounds is this great difference of smoothness of operation of administrative machinery to be explained? If the tel maitre, tel valet, theory does not suffice, another explanation would be welcomed.

VOGUE OF THE AUTO.

Automobile making has been the phenomenon of modern history. The United States census shows that the total value of automobiles made in the country in 1909 was $165,115,100. Michigan's output was $70,519,600. The average value of each machine is indicated by the census figures to have been $1,207. These figures are factory prices. For the entire country the value of the automobile parts produced in 1909 was $26,807,500 in 1909. Touring cars in 1909 numbered 76,453 and runabouts 36,408. Less than 5,000 were for public conveyances and business purposes. In this respect the United States is beind European countries. Gasoline cars are far in the lead. The number made in 1909 was 121,274 with a value of $155,068,100; in 1904, 19,837 with a value of $20,440,100. Electrics numbered 3,639 in 1909, valued at $6,583,500, compared with 1,425 in 1904, valued aat $2,496,300.

The growth of the industry has been no doubt relatively as great in Canada. Economists are discussing the effect of the diversion of so much money into a luxury. The discussion would have some point if the majority of well-to-do people were not already spending a very large proportion of their incomes in luxuries, some of which yield less return in physical benefit that the automobile. A large portion of the outlay for automobiles is money merely diverted to one luxury trade from a number of others.

THE DEADLOCK EASED.

The policy of obstruction to the reciprocity agreement, inaugurated by the Conservative Opposition in Parliament, had a rather short life of activity, and is now in a state of suspended animation. An agreement has been reached in a conference between Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Borden, the latter giving the assurance that there would be no obstruction to supply, and that the denial of supply would not be used to force an appeal to the country upon the reciprocity issue, during the three or four months of the Premier's absence in England, where he will worthily represent Canada at the Coronation and at the Imperial Conference. This understanding or agreement is not coupled with any condition that the Liberal Government, will abandon its reciprocity proposals, which was the ultimatum presented a few days ago by the Opposition, as the only condition upon which Sir Wilfrid could attend the Imperial Conference. It will be noted that the Opposition, not the Government, has given ground in relation to the matter of the reciprocity agreement. One thing is plain, the government will not abandon the position on this subject. The [illegible] arrived, as it said to be in line with urgent requests that have come from Great Britain and with the general sentiment on both sides of the House that, from every point of regard it was desirable that Canada should be represented by its First Minister, both at the Coronation and the Conference. The agreement, however, has not raised the deadlock but merely eased it, and the conflict of will power and endurance, as between the government and opposition ranks, postponed, till after the Premier returns.

GOVERNMENT ANNUITIES.

The system of government annuities, established by the Dominion government, is one of the most beneficent and important provisions for the maternal welfare, comfort, and ease of the people, that can possibly be devised; and the Examiner takes great pleasure in promoting a knowledge of the system and creating a desire on the part of the public to avail themselves of its provisions. It does not seem possible that an understanding of the advantages, should not practically appeal to everybody who looks forward to an old age of comparative ease and comfort. The government has not only established the system, but is taking means to educate the public. Dr. James Samson has been appointed lecturer-in-chief of Government Annuities, and the public will be, or should be, greatly interested in knowing that Dr. Samson will address a public meeting in the Assembly Hall of the Collegiate Institute on Tuesday evening, May 9th. It is hoped that there will be a numerous attendance to listen to the address on a subject of such vital importance, by a gentleman who will present the facts in relation to a subject of personal interest and national importance.

The government annuities system is one of so much merit and appeal to the common sense and provident features of the individual character that its splendid features, have only to be known to be appreciated.

The Government Annuities System is not a pension system. The Government does not pay an allowance out of the treasury to old people. But the Government contracts to take deposits from any person at any age, and convert them into annuities, payable at such an age as the applicants desire. The same thing is done by insurance companies, but there are the following advantages of the Government plan for persons with moderate means:

All the cost of securing subscribers, of administering the funds, and carrying on business, is borne by the Government, and the investor escapes this charge.

The Government pays four per cent. compound interest on the principal payments or investments, fixing the annuities on that basis, and, in case of death before the annuity period, returns the amounts paid with three per cent. compound interest.

There is the largest conceivable liberty allowed as to the amounts, methods and intervals of payment, and as to the time when annuities are due. There are no forfeiters, no penalties, no lapses. An annuity cannot be attached for debt and is positively assured to the annuitant for life. Whether payments are large or small, regular or variable, the final adjustment is made on the basis of the agreement, the returns, of course, corresponding to the actual amount paid.

The investment is free from all claims, creditors and incumbrances. It is an actual and certain net income.

To give the above advantages the system involves a considerable Government outlay, in the cost of management and promotion, and in an interest charge rather larger than the Government pays on its other borrowings. This represents the Government contribution towards a scheme for the general benefit. If the scheme were made general and open to capitalists to purchase annuities of any amount, it would attract large investors and interfere seriously with insurance corporations. These cannot do business on terms giving them nothing for salaries and expenses, no dividends for stockholders, and no prospect of gain. But the Government of Canada is not going into competition with companies in the sale of large or speculative annuities. The idea is not investment but protection. These annuities are intended for those of moderate means, and do not provide more than a sum required to provide the annuitant with the necessaries of life. The largest annuity that can be bought is $600 a year. He who wishes to provide for a larger income must go elsewhere and pay for the accommodation given him. Those who wish to be sure of an income of from $50 to $600 a year can make their arrangements with the Government, which is looking for no profit, and is taking no pay for transacting the business. The prospective annuitant reaps the full benefit of his investment without cost to himself or herself.

While the Act was a Government measure, as all Bills involving public expenditure must be, Sir Richard Cartwright invited the co-operation of Senators from both parties and the system as it stands is the result of a careful, non-partisan examination and revision of the original scheme. It is a system which family men of moderate incomes, all young men and women wage earners, and working people of all classes should consider.

A large attendance at Dr. Samson's explanatory address in the Collegiate Assembly Hall, on Tuesday evening, May 9th, is strongly urged.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Canada's trade now amounts to $750,000,000, which, says the Toronto Star, is nearly six times the trade of the first year of confederation, and three times the trade of 1897. It is estimated that the immigration into Canada this year will be 450,000. That will make an increase of more than two million by immigration since 1896-7. These are hard times for the pessimists.

A PRINCE OF HUMBUGS.

(London Advertiser)

"Mr. Prince, Republican, says annexation is the inevitable consequence of reciprocity. It is not so much because Mr. Prince says it that it seems to be so."

The saner and cooler heads in the Conservative party have advised taking the annexation bogey off the stage but the foregoing paragraph in a local contemporary shows a reluctance to part with a contrivance which is an easy substitute for argument.

Why summon Congressman Prince in this instance? He is a bad witness for the Canadian case against reciprocity. He is savagely opposed to it on the ground that it is wholly favourable to Canada. He calls the agreement "the worst bargain ever driven by one nation with another," meaning, of course, from the point of view of the United States. The United States farmers are to be sacrificed to this country. To quote him:

"If this bill does not reduce the prices for the farmer why are we seeking to pass it? What is the purpose of this extra session if this measure gives no relief? Does it leave the price of the farmers' products exactly as it is under the other legislation? It does not. The Canadian commissioners know it did not. They declined to let in manufactured products on the free list because it was not in their interest to do so. We have given to Canada the free market of the United States with its $20,000,000,000 of trade."

It is Congressman Prince's theory that the United States' market is to sag under the weight of Canadian farm produce thrown on it. His fellow-opponents of reciprocity on this side of the line say that Canadian prices are to break under the weight of surplus American farm products, thrown on the Canadian market. There is no common ground for the opponents of the agreement in both countries, but Mr. Prince is so anxious to defeat it that he appeals to its enemies in Canada by a pretence that it is the wedge of annexation. If he believed what he said, he would favour the pact as a patriotic American. His exhibition of humbug is only exceeded by that of Canadians who affect to attach importance to his remarks.

CONSERVATIVE OPINION OF MR. BORDEN.

(Brantford Expositor)

The Winnipeg Tribune, which until recently was not unsympathetic with the Conservative party, is now a most determined supporter of reciprocity, and has this to say about the "fight to a finish" policy announced by Mr. Borden:

Mr. Borden is at perfect liberty to put up a fight. It will be refreshing to have something that even looks like a battle on a real issue. Every day that Mr. Borden continues the fight against freedom in trade means loss of strength for Mr. Borden. If he thinks he is paving the path to the government benches, so much the worse for his judgment. Mr. Borden has evidently been "loaded" by some of his followers and advisers.

So far as the West is concerned, Mr. Borden is taking the step that will absolutely convince the people, all the people, that he is not the man for the premiership of Canada. He offers nothing. He is just against freedom in trade. He is for restraint in trade. Restraint in trade means combines—we have scores of them already. Mr. Borden by his attitude becomes the champion of the combines. He says reciprocity "involves the national existence of the country," and the man with even the commonest intellect knows that Mr. Borden is simply talking rot. Mr. Borden does not enlarge upon the subject. To enlarge would only further betray his littleness of grasp or make more clear the attempted deception by the combine interests. Mr. Borden is against opening a market of 90,000,000 people where Canadian farmers may freely sell their cattle, grain, fruit, in fact all the natural products of a country in which 60 per cent. of our people make their living out of the farming industry, and a goodly proportion of the remaining 40 per cent. are dependent upon the farmers for the wherewithal to make both ends meet.

Mr. Borden's declaration calls for fresh declarations from the farmers and consumers of Canada. The declaration is against the interests of the people, and the people should show to Mr. Borden that he is entirely out of touch with Canadian opinion on the tariff. Protection has been one of the curses of Canada, demoralizing, materially and morally. The people are not going to lose the present opportunity of striking a blow for freedom. Little difficulty will be experienced in brushing Mr. Borden's opposition to one side.

The Tribune believes that Mr. Borden utterly fails to properly estimate the strength and determination of the western feeling on the subject of more extended trade relations with the United States, and calls for a renewal of the demonstration in favour of the measure, including, we presume, another grain-growers' deputation to the Dominion capital. Mr. Borden may yet be made to realize that it would have been the path of wisdom on his part to "let sleeping dogs lie."

NEW TRAIN SERVICE TO "LAKE OF BAYS"

An important feature that will be inaugurated during the coming season will be a new train service to the "Lake of Bays" district. A standard Grand Trunk passenger train will leave Toronto with through coaches, parlour cars and dining car at 10.15 o'clock in the morning, daily, except Sunday, for Huntsville, reaching the latter point at about 3 o'clock in the afternoon, connecting with the steamers for points in the "Lake of Bays" district, and affording passengers the opportunity of reaching their destination in time for dinner.

The Sunday evening boat service from the Wawa hotel, Britannia, Point Ideal, Portage, Deerhurst, and other important calling ports on "Lake of Bays" to Huntsville, will be run on same schedule as for season 1910, during the months of July and August, and which will be a boon to week-enders desiring to return to the city for business on Mondays.

Infinite Possibilities Of House Fly In Way Of Dissemination Of Disease

With the indisputable evidence we have of this insect being a frequent source of infection and spread of communicable diseases, the housefly problem demands the awakening of the people to the exigencies of the case, and the prompt adoption of vigorous preventive measures.

The best field for investigation and demonstration of the spreading of disease by the housefly has been afforded by soldiers' camps in the late South African war and Spanish-American war. In the latter, less than 300 Americans were killed in battle, while nearly 5,000 died of typhoid, the dissemination of which could be largely accounted for through the housefly. One single fly has been known to carry as many as 6,000,000 bacteria. The infected matter in the pits and trenches outside the tents were swarming with flies, from which they passed to the food prepared for the soldiers in the mess tents. This was well proven by the lime on the legs of the flies as they crawled over the food, lime having been sprinkled over the pits and trenches. The opinion of Dr. Steinburg, Surgeon-General of the United States army, and other surgeons, was "That in this case the fever was not traceable to water, but for the most part to the housefly." The same is true of the observations in the South African war. It was a universally observed fact that the destruction of the fly by the onset of the cold nights was quickly followed by a marked diminution in fresh fever cases.

What has been demonstrated in soldiers' camps has been demonstrated in city homes and hospitals, only in a lesser degree. The very birthplace of the fly makes it more than likely that it emerges into space with legs and body covered with filth and bacteria, for the fly always deposits its eggs in some substance affording both heat and moisture, horse manure, refuse of garbage, rotten fruit, decomposed animal and vegetable matter all affording the most ideal breeding ground. These eggs hatch out in from eighteen to thirty hours, constituting the larva, which develops in the course of several days into a full-grown fly. Every female fly lays from 120 to 150 eggs at a time, and this may be repeated from six to twelve times during the summer. The progeny of one wintered fly has been calculated to reach the incredibly large number of 14,067,792,000,000,000.

Couple with this fact of its uncleanly birthplace, the habits of the fly, one moment perhaps in the sick room of a typhoid patient or in the expectoration of a tubercular person, the next crawling over our food in the dining-room or swimming round in a pitcher of milk. This latter is, indirectly, the most dangerous medium through which disease is spread by the fly. Contact with the milk rids it of thousands of bacteria which, at the temperature of a living room, will, in such a favourable culture medium, mean millions inside of twenty-four hours.

The ideal solution of the problem is prevention. The fly can be prevented from depositing her eggs by the removal of all breeding-places such as kitchen refuse, etc., the screening of all garbage and the abolishing of outside closets. Manure should be kept in fly-proof bins, and all garbage in tightly-covered, water-tight tins. Different substances, such as kerosene and chloride of lime, may be mixed with garbage to destroy the maggots.

Try to remember the following suggestions: Keep flies away from the sick, especially those suffering from communicable diseases. Do not allow them to settle on the faces of sleeping infants. Do not permit them to light on food of any kind. Carefully screen all doors and windows in the hot summer months, especially those of all sick-rooms. Keep your yard and cellar free from waste of any kind, and if your neighbour does not, report him to the health department.

By the efficient destruction of all breeding-places for flies one may hope for a realization of the visionary picture presented by Sir James Crichton-Browne, of the aged parent showing the little child the only specimen in existence of the house-fly, in the British Museum.

"THE BLACK CROSS".

By OLIVE M. BRIGGS

The light died out of the boy's face innocence; the mouth was slightly puckered as if with concentrated effort; his eyes were open and frank; he was smiling a little triumphantly like a child that is sure of pleasing and waiting for praise.

"You play atrociously," said Petrokoff severely. "I shall keep you six months on finger exercises alone. You play false!"

The light died out of the boy's faice—"Barin," he said humbly, "In Moscow you will teach me to play like yourself. I am nothing but an ignorant bradjaha as you see."

Suddenly he put his hand to his mouth and began to cough: "The dust!" he said, "It has gone to my throat all at once. Eh what? Excuse me a moment, Barin."

Kaya's yellow curls were close to his ear and she whispered something. She was standing behind his chair, and, as she stooped to him, her hand rested on his shoulder and trembled slightly: "Velasco," she said, in a voice like a breath, "Come, I beseech you! You are playing with danger, with death! They will surely suspect; ah, come!"

The gypsey tossed his head, like a young horse when some one is trying to force the bit between his teeth; his chin stiffened and an obstinate look came into his eyes. He brushed her aside: "No," he murmured, "Go away, Kaya! He is a stupid fool, can't you see? I am not half through—it is heavenly to hear him! Go—go! I want to tease him some more; I tell you I will."

The younger gypsey sank back on the floor cross-legged, half hidden by the chair and the form of Velasco. Her hands were still trembling and she put them in the pockets of her jacket, trying to force her red lips to a whistle. She heard the voice of Velasco smooth, and wicked, and humble, just above her.

"There is a musician," he was saying "Perhaps you have heard of him? His name is Velasco."

"Bosh!" said Petrokoff in an angry tone, and then he blew his nose loudly. "Velasco — bosh! He is only a trickster! There is a fad nowadays among the ladies to run after him." He bowed to the three ladies in turn mockingly, "My friends here tried to get tickets last week in St. Petersburg, but the house was sold out. Bosh—I tell you! I wouldn't cross the street to hear a virtuoso like that!"

The gypsey gave a queer sound like a chuckle: "He does not play as you do, of course, Barin!"

"I!" cried Petrokoff. He swirled his moustache fiercely. "The Russians are like children, they run after every new plaything, a toy—bah! I have been before the public twenty-five years. I am an artist; I am one of the old school. I—"

"Go away, Kaya!" whispered Velasco, "This is grand! I haven't enjoyed myself so much for an age. Go away, little one; don't be frightened. It is all right, only don't cough too much, or the ladies will see you are laughing.

Nature's Cure For A Cough

Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine is the Most Largely Imitated Medicine in the Country

What to give the children for croup and colds is the problem mothers now have to solve. Most of them finally decide on Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, and make it a rule to always have some in the house.

In this medicine are linseed, turpentine and other well-known ingredients of unmistakable value in the cure of colds. It is pleasant to take, so much so that children delight to use it.

So generally is this great medicine used that several imitations have been put on the market. All alike in name only. They are not made from the same formula, nor do they bear the name of Dr. Chase.

You know what you can expect from the use of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, but you cannot put much faith in an imitation which sells on the reputation of the articles it imitates.

On every bottle of the genuine will be found the portrait and signature of A. W. Chase, M.D., the famous Receipt Book author. This is for your protection and for the protection of your children. Be sure to get the genuine, even if it costs a few cents more. 25 cents a bottle, family size, 60 cents, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

"Ah, Velasco, come—come!"

"Go away, child! He is opening his mouth again, the fat monster! Watch the 'I' leap out! If he plays again I shall die in a fit; he handles the bow like the fin of a shark. Be still, Kaya,—go!"

"Velasco—listen, won't you listen? The ladies—ah, don't turn your head away—the one with the grey bonnet is the Countess Galli. I have seen her often at my father's house, Velasco; and she stares first at me, then at you. She suspects."

"The fright, with the long nose?"

"Yes, and the pince-nez."

"She is staring now. Make up a face at her, Kaya; that will scare her away. She has never seen you in boy's clothes before, I warrant, with your hands in your pockets, and your curls clipped short, and a cap on the back of your head—ha ha!"

"Velasco, don't laugh. Don't you see she is whispering to Petrokoff, now and looking at us through her pince-nez?"

"So she is, the vixen, the miserable gossip! Slip out towards the door quietly, Kaya, while they are talking. I will follow directly. Wait at the back of the stable by the hay loft."

The gypsey stood up suddenly and approached the little group of ladies, bowing to them and to Petrokoff. He was wrapping the violin in its cover, and laying it away in its case as he moved. "Pardon, Barin," he said softly, "If you will wait for me here I shall return presently. My supper is waiting. Perhaps after an hour you will still like to purchase the violin See, it is really not a bad instrument—if you are in earnest about the two hundred roubles?"

Petrokoff stepped eagerly forward. "Now," he said, "Give it to me now. I will hand you the money at once in notes."

"Presently, Barin," said Velasco, still softly, "I will return directly. If your Excellency will permit—"

He slipped past the outstretched arm of the musician; bowed again to the lady in the grey bonnet, staring straight into the gold-rimmed lorgnette; and the door closed behind him. Running like a grey-hound, Velasco darted through the corridor and around by the side of the inn to the stable. It was dark there, deserted, and beyond, the snow glittered on the meadows.

"Kaya—are you there?"

"Here, Velasco."

"Have you the knapsack?"

"Yes—yes, here it is."

"Take my hand then and run—run, Kaya, for the Countess has told Petrokoff; she has told him by now. They'll be hot on our tracks! This way—to the left of the road! Hold fast to my hand and run, Kaya—run!"

"I will, Velasco, I will!"

"Don't fall—don't stumble!"

"Ahead, straight ahead! Hold me faster! Leap as I leap—and if you hear hoots, sink down in the shadow."

"Yes—yes, Velasco!"

"Ah, run, dearest — run, for the fiends are behind us! I hear hoots and bells. Run—run!"

CHAPTER XII

"Who is in the sleigh, Kaya, can you see? Keep low in the shadow and don't move your head."

"The Countess, Velasco, and Petrokoff and two other men."

"Gendarmes?"

"I think they are gendarmes, Velasco. They look from side to side of the road as they pass and urge the driver forward."

"Bonhe moi, little one! Keep close to me and hold your breath; in another moment they will be past."

"Now, Velasco! Now they are out of sight; the last tinkle of the bells sounds in the distance. Shall we lie here, or follow?"

The gypsey took a long breath, and rose to his feet, brushing the snow from his trousers and coat. The girl still sat crouching behind the drift, peering ahead into the dark windings of the road and listening.

"Come, little one!" said Velasco. "The fields are covered deep with the snow; there are no paths and we cannot go back. Give me your hand. You will freeze if you linger."

The girl put her hand in his, springing up and they darted into the dark windings together, making little rushes forward, hand in hand; then poising on one foot and listening.

"They might turn back you know, Velasco."

"Do you hear the bells?"

"Not yet."

Then they ran on.

The night grew darker and darker: the sky was heavy and black with clouds, and between them a faint light flitted occasionally like the ghost of a moon, but feeble and wan. It struggled with the clouds, piercing them for an instant; and then it was gone and the sky grew blacker, like a great inky surface, reflecting shadows on the snow-fields, gigantic and strange. The wind had died down, but the cold was intense, bitter, and the chill of the ice crept into the bones.

"What is that dark thing ahead on the road, can you see, Velasco?"

"Hist—Kaya, I see! It is big and black. It seems to be a house, or an inn, for look—there are lights like stars just appearing."

Velasco's grip tightened on the woolen glove of the girl and they halted together, half hesitating.

"Don't leave me; let me go with you!"

The woolen glove clung to him and they went forward again, a step at a time, with eyes straining through the snow.

"Is it the sleigh of the Countess, big and black, with three horses abreast?"

"Yes—it looks so."

"Is there some one inside?"

"The driver perhaps! No, there is no one. Velasco, they have gone into the inn to drink something warm and ask questions perhaps—'Have you seen two gypsies, one dark and one fair?' Ah, Velasco, what shall we do? Shall we creep past on tip-toe?"

The girl drew closer to him and looked up in his face. "What shall we do, Velasco—speak! You stand there with your eyes half shut, in a dream. Shall we run, Velasco? Shall we run on ahead?"

The gypsey put his finger to his lips and crept forward. "This is a God-forsaken hole, Kaya!" he whispered, "No telegraph—and, perhaps, no horses! they could only get oxen or mules. It will take several minutes to drink their hot tea—and the brutes are quite fresh!"

He moved cautiously, swiftly, to the hitching post, fumbling with the straps. The horses whinnied a little, nosing one another and pawing the snow.

"What are you doing, Velasco?"

"Jump in, Kaya, jump in—quick, or the driver will hear! Take the fiddle! Ah, the deuce with this knot!"

With a last tug the knot yielded. Velasco flashed to the step and sprang on it; then his knees gave beneath him, and he fell in the snow as the horses leaped forward.

"Ol—ol! Tyayaohs zhartei! A pest!"

With oaths and shrieks of rage the driver rushed from the kitchen of the inn, wiping the vodka from his beard with his sleeve. From the tea-room three other men rushed forward, also shouting and behind them the Countess.

"What is it?" she screamed, "Have the horses run away? Where is the sleigh and my buffalo robe? Are they stolen? Catch the thieves—catch them!"

Velasco still lay in the snow, stunned by his fall, a dark patch like a shadow. The sleigh had turned suddenly and veered around, not half a rod distant. She stood with the reins uplifted, dragging back on the bits; and the horses were rearing, plunging back on their haunches, slipping on the ice.

"Velasco!" she cried, "Velasco!"

Her voice rang out like a trumpet, echoing over the snow; and as she cried, she swept the horses about and lashed them with the whip, until they came leaping and trembling close to the patch on the snow, which had begun to stir slowly, awaking from the swoon.

"Ah, if I were a man!" she cried. "If I were only a man and could lift you!" She clinched her teeth, swinging the whip, reining back the struggling animals with her slim, white hands from which she had torn the gloves.

"Here they are—the gypsies! We have them! They were stealing the sleigh, the rascals!"

As they sprang at Velasco, surrounding him, there came suddenly a swift whizz through the air, a singing as of a hornet, and the heavy lash struck them, across the face, the eyes the shoulders, stinging and sharp, leaving cruel welts as it struck. The driver screamed out, half blinded. The gendarmes started back. Petrokoff fell on his knees and cowered behind a bush, his fat body trembling and his hands outstretched as if praying.

"For the love of the saints!" he cried, "Don't strike!"

The lash flashed through the air, blinding and terrible in its rapidity. The gypsey leaned over the dashboard, her face white, her eyes dark with rage, her cap on the back of her yellow curls; and the whip seemed to leap between her fingers like something alive.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

IN a little town in Massachusetts a suit has recently been instituted to compel the three sons of an old man who is now in the poorhouse to pay for his support, on the grounds that they are perfectly well able to do so.

This is old man's story: "A few years ago I owned my own farm, and it was a good one. After my wife died I made a trade whereby I should be kept for the rest of my life in return for my property.

"AS SOON AS PAPERS WERE SIGNED THINGS BEGAN TO BE HARD FOR ME. Frequently I was nearly starved and had to apply to the neighbors for food. I grew thin and was poor both in flesh and clothing."

Conditions finally became so unbearable that I went to whom he applied for food helped him to get admission to the poorhouse.

Incidentally he now declares with the pathetic insistence of evident terror that even if his sons are compelled to support him, he shall insist upon staying at the poorhouse and letting them do it through that institution.

And evidently the terrible lesson King Lear learned of the unwisdom of dividing his portion before his death has yet to be learned by many modern parents.

Perhaps you think the case I have just quoted is too extraordinary to be typical, and that I would have to go far to find any similar cases.

Then listen to a letter which, by the way, came to me the very day I clipped the other happening from the paper.

"I want to tell you, Miss Cameron, of a delicate little woman who came to our door a few days ago and asked if we could tell her where she could rent anywhere in the city one room, where she could live and do washings. She said she was sixty-five years old, and certainly looked every day of it. Her husband had been dead six months and had left her a house and two thousand dollars in money. She had four children, two sons and two daughters. They had kept after her until she had sold her home for two thousand dollars, giving her four thousand dollars in cash. This they had prevailed upon her to divide equally among them, giving each one a thousand dollars, they promising to give her a good home as long as she lived.

"Poor little woman! THEY TOOK HER MONEY AND SENT HER FROM ONE TO ANOTHER. ALL WERE MARRIED AND IN HOMES OF THEIR OWN. EACH ONE HAD SOME WONDERFUL REASON FOR NOT TAKING HER, AND SENT HER TO ONE OF THE OTHERS. SHE HAD NO PLACE TO STAY, and said she was not strong enough to go out to work, but if she could have a room she knew how to wash and iron nicely, and she was sure she could get a living. Think of it, a frail little woman of sixty-five starting out to do work like that!

"Well, Miss Cameron, my blood just boiled. I told her they had obtained money under false pretenses and could be compelled to take care of her, but, of course, the mother love came to the front, and she said, 'They are my children. I cannot do that.'

"Miss Cameron, won't you please take this case up in your column and give a strong warning to mothers and fathers to cling to what they absolutely need to carry them through, and at the same time won't you please deal out a good big slice of what you think such children deserve."

Now, as for that first request—well, it doesn't seem to me that these true stories need any additional word of mine to make them the strongest of strong warnings.

And as for the second, well, if I could dip my pen in vitriol and write upon their hearts, I might deal out to these children a fraction of what they deserve.

Otherwise, I fear I am quite incapable.

HIS FOOT UNDER AXE

Zam-Buk Proved Very Useful

Mrs. H. Sawyer, of Keene, Ont., says:—"I must write you in praise of Zam-Buk, a proof of the merits of which we have just had. My husband is engaged on a farm, and one day, while chopping wood, the top of the axe broke and fell upon his foot, cutting a nasty gash. The wound was so bad that we first thought we would have to get a doctor, but we finally decided to dress the cut with Zam-Buk. Well, the Zam-Buk treatment proved a success. It not only eased the pain, but it prevented any inflammation; and right from first aplying it, the cut began to heal. It is now completely healed, and my husband says he will never be without a box of Zam-Buk in the house, for we are sure it saved us a great deal of expense."

Over and over again Zam-Buk has been proved to be the worker's best remedy. As soon as applied to a cut, a burn, a scald, or any skin injury, it relieves the pain and it sets up healing. It also sterilizes the wound and prevents blood-poisoning or inflammation.

It is a sure cure, too, for eczema, piles, ulcers, old wounds, bad leg, ringworm, scalp sores, festering, running sores, boils, eruptions, chafings, insect stings, sore feet, etc. Its absolute purity also, makes it the ideal balm for babies. Zam-Buk Soap should be used along with the balm for washing all sore places. This soap will be found excellent for baby's bath, even where the balm is not being used.

All druggists and stores sell Zam-Buk at 50c. box, and Soap at 25c. tablet, or post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, upon receipt of price. Refuse substitutes and imitations.

DOCTOR ADVISED HOSPITAL

But Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Cured Her.

Upper Sandusky, Ohio.—"Three years ago I was married and went to live on a farm. I was not feeling well and could hardly drag myself along. I had such tired feelings, my back hurt, my side ached, I had terrible trouble with my bed, and I could not eat or sleep. I had headaches too, and became almost a nervous wreck. My doctor told me to go to a hospital. I did not like that idea very well, so, when I saw your advertisement in a paper, I wrote to you for advice. I have done as you told me.

"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Liver Pills, and now I have my health.

"If sick and ailing women would only know enough to take your medicine, they would get relief."—Mrs. JESS. H. STAPLEMAN, Route 6, Box 18, Upper Sandusky, Ohio.

If you have mysterious pains, feelings, backache, extreme nervousness, inflammation, ulceration or displacement, don't wait too late, but try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at once.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills, and such unquestionable testimony as the above proves the value of this famous remedy, and should give everyone confidence.

Reason Why Women Suffer More Than Men

Man Returns Home to Rest, While a Woman's Work is Never Done—The Kidneys Give Out and She is a Martyr to Backache—Booth's Kidney Pills Her Best Friend

What woman does not know what tired, nervous backache days mean? But how many realise that the kidneys are the chief cause? Yet this is so.

Many a wife endures patiently the daily misery of backache, pains, or blue nervous spells and urinary disorders, expecting no relief, because she doesn't know that Booth's Kidney Pills are guaranteed to give her relief.

It is not true that every pain in the region of the hips and lower abdomen is "female trouble." When the kidneys get congested and inflamed there is constant backache, headache, dizzy spells, bearing-down pain, urinary disorders and other pains which are easily mistaken for sex ailments, but which are due to the swollen, sick kidneys.

Such sufferers will find Booth's Kidney Pills a great boon. They strengthen sick kidneys, cure backache, drive uric acid out of the system and bring bright, happy days in place of a mere existence.

MISERABLE FEELING OF DEPRESSION DISPELLED.

Mrs. Martin Truax, of Marlborough Street, Leamington, Ont., says: "For a long time I suffered with a miserable feeling of depression across my chest. Pains would catch me in the sides and extend around the small of my back. I was weak and languid, and lost much of each night's sleep. My condition, through the inactive state of kidneys, had left me unable to get around. Several doctors had told me I had Bright's Disease, but none of them helped me. Booth's Kidney Pills were recommended and I procured a box. The relief was quick and continuing. Booth's Kidney Pills the depressive feeling had soon gone. My back has strengthened and I can now sleep right through the night and awake refreshed and strong. I feel grateful in recommending Booth's Kidney Pills."

Booth's Kidney Pills are guaranteed to relieve or your money refunded. Free trial sent on application to the E. T. Booth Co., Ltd., Fort Erie, Ont. All druggists sell at 50c. a box, or post-paid from the proprietors. Address as above.

BALANCE OF REPORT PRESENTED AT Y. W. C. A. ANNUAL MEETING

Following is the balance of the report presented at the annual meeting of the Y.W.C.A. on Tuesday for which space could not be found in yesterday's Examiner.

Board of Management.

During the year 1910-11 the Board has held 9 regular meetings with an average attendance of 14.

The past year is the first, in the twenty years of our existence in which the Board has not had to cope with a standing debt. The mortgage being paid off a year ago it has been our happy experience, with but one exception, that the monthly expenses have been met. These expenses are continually increasing with our work.

The Physical Culture Department has been practically self supporting this year. Miss Coventry' work has been most satisfactory and we hope to have her with us again next year.

It is the desire of the Board to bring this branch of our work within the reach of every member of the Association and we look for larger classes during the coming year. Instead of an enrollment of some 100 girls we should have at least 500 in this town of business women.

The Board feel much indebted to Miss Addison of Annesly Hall, Toronto, who came here to speak at our Educational Rally. Miss Addison's address was most practical and helpful and was thoroughly appreciated by the large number present.

During the month of January the Board secured the services of Miss Blodgett to conduct a series of Bible classes.

These classes proved most successful. Miss Blodgett was with us for two weeks. The first meetings were held in our own building, but it being impossible to accomodate the people adjournment was made first to the Murray St. Church and then to St. Paul's Church, where the attendance at the last three meetings reached 700.

In conjunction with a committee of Peterborough ladies the Board endeavored to open a creche.

The Association provided a heated room and food for the children for five days in the week. Owing to both a lack of patronage and lack of funds the Committee was obliged to close it after about a month's trial.

The World's Week of Prayer was observed by the Board. Two special meetings being held, one being a joint meeting with the Ladies Auxiliary of the Y.W.C.A.

Our General Secretary attended both the Summer Conference at Muskoka and the Dominion Council in Ottawa, bringing back with her valuable information to assist in our work in Peterborough. Under the supervision of Miss Weir the Educational Department has been particularly progressive during the past year. Through this medium a number of citizens have rendered the Association valuable service.

We would extend our hearty thanks to the following ladies and gentlemen for holding classes and delivering lectures for us: Miss Wood, Miss McKee, Rev. H. R. Trumpour, Judge Huycke, The Rev. Dr. Marsh, Dr. McCullough, Dr. McPherson.

Our General Secretary, Miss McCalla, will be with us during the coming year. Under her guidance we feel the influence of the Association to be extending in every way and we ask each member to render all the assistance possible to make our work a power for good.

MAUD STEVENSON,
Secretary of Board.

Educational Work.

The educational work of the Y.W.C.A. for the year 1910-11 was begun by the rally held on September the 23rd at which Miss Addison, of Toronto gave an exceedingly thoughtful and instructive address. As early, however, as June of 1910, the programme of the classes for the following year was drawn up.

1. On the 6th of October, Dr. J. Malcolm McCulloch organized the St. John Ambulance "First Aid" class. 23 registered for this class with an average attendance of 16. During the fall term Dr. McCulloch delivered 7 lectures and Dr. McPherson conducted the examinations. 13 took both the written and oral examinations and twelve obtained certificates.

2. On the 18th of October a literature class for the study of Dante was begun by the Rev. Mr. Trumpour of All Saints. 28 registered in this class in which 11 Purgatoria was discussed. There were 7 lectures with an average attendance of 12.

3. A cooking class, taught by Miss Steinhof was also carried on during the fall term, at the Central school. There were 18 in this class and 10 lessons were given.

4. A class in general Public school work was carried on by Miss Wood and Miss McKee. 15 lessons were given and there was an attendance of 6.

5. In the winter term Judge Huycke conducted the Literary class, giving 13 lectures on "In Memoriam." This class had an average attendance of 20.

6. The St. John's Association "Home Nursing" class during the winter term was conducted by Dr. McCulloch. 16 registered in this class, 9 lectures were given. The average attendance was 12. Dr. McPherson conducted the examinations.

The total number enrolled in the educational classes for 1910-11 was 121 and 61 classes were taught.

In the gymnasium work conducted by Miss Coventry there have been 5 classes, senior, Normal, intermediate and junior and junior boys.

126 were registered in the 5 classes. There were 80 class sessions and an aggregate attendance of 1323.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

ANNE WEIR,
Convener Educ. Com.

Report of the General Secretary.

In presenting this report, 1910-1911, the 20th annual, it is with a deep sense of gratitude to our Heavenly Father for permitting us in a small measure to be of service in His vineyard. Though our work has been so imperfectly done, and we must very often have disappointed our Leader, yet He has never failed us, but has ever been our wisdom and strength.

The foundation of the Y.W.C.A. and the highest phase of its work and that element which should permeate its every department, is the spirit of devotion to Christ and His ideals; therefore, that department which especially emphasizes the spiritual will be first considered.

The daily evening prayers bring help and inspiration to those of us who in the hurry of every day life take time to turn aside for these few moments of praise and worship. Occasionally we welcome one and another of the ministers. This brings them into closest touch and interest with our home life and has brought some, at least, of the girls into close touch with their own church.

The Sunday afternoon service is one of the bright spots in the week. The class is organized and one and another of the committees is responsible for each meeting. The average attendance has been 24.

The Bible Class tea and study each Friday evening continues to prove a helpful and attractive feature of the work; and some, at least, would never have been brought into touch with the Association but for this hour.

The fortnightly service at the Protestant Home has been carried on throughout the year and is enjoyed by the old people and the faithful singers who never fail us.

Bedside visiting is done at the Hospital, and we only hope that we have left in cheer what we have carried away in blessing.

In November the world's week of prayer was observed.

Aguest who will long be remembered was Miss Michi Kawai, a clever young Japanese woman, who charmed us all by her earnestness and originality, and our eyes were opened to the real work that our representative, Miss Macdonald, is doing in Japan. As a result of her address $65 was forwarded for our foreign work.

We acknowledge our gratitude to God in that He used us in bringing real blessing to so large a number through the two weeks' series of Bible studies given by Miss Blodgett in January, when the afternoon meetings grew from 250 to 700. We would again thank the pastors and the church officers and all who so heartily co-operated with us in making this possible.

It was again my privilege to attend the Summer Conference at Lake Joseph, Muskoka and the triennial convention in Ottawa. It means much to the Secretary and the work to meet with the strong leaders, those who have solved our problems; also it is most stimulating to meet with others engaged in the same work and to discuss with them ways and means for bringing our standard up to the highest.

Educational — That the Y.W.C.A. stands as an educational factor in the community is conclusively shown by the report just presented by Miss Weir. Two hundred and forty-three registered in class, with one hundred and fifty class sessions and an approximate aggregate attendance of two thousand and fifty-five, surely something has been accomplished. Looking backward over the year's class work many helpful hours are recalled, and I would add my word of appreciation and thanks to the lecturers and teachers who have been so generous and kind in giving their services, also to Miss Weir and the committee for sharing so largely the responsibility and work.

Social.—As the essence of Christianity is the spirit of joy and happiness, the social element is fostered in our Y.W.C.A. A continuous succession of happy evenings have been enjoyed by an ever-growing number of girls. In all, fourteen parties have been planned and participated in by some five hundred and fifty girls. In addition to these planned evenings, a number of very informal half hours after class sessions have been enjoyed. Our lawn is being prepared for tennis and croquet. The athletic ticket is again 25c. for members of the Association and 50c. for non-members. We shall be pleased to receive the names of those who wish to join this season. We should thank the Social and Musical committee and Miss Coventry for their assistance at all times; also those who have contributed to our programme.

Junior—Apart from the gymnasium work so satisfactorily conducted by Miss Coventry, our junior work has not been satisfactory. The children have enjoyed the Saturday afternoon's play and story hour and several little parties given them; but other than this, no organized work has been done. This has been for lack of workers. We need more volunteer workers, not only in this department, but in every department of our work.

One of the disappointments is that the membership does not grow in proportion to the interest taken in the Association. We are gratified, however, to state that 95 per cent. of our members are enrolled as class members.

No attempt at detail or summary could give any adequate conception of the general office work, including the information bureau, correspondence, interviews, clerical work, telephone calls and business of all kinds with innumerable and varied demands on time and sympathy. Much personal work has been done which cannot be reported.

We would thank the Educational Board for allowing us the use of the Domestic Science room in the Central school ;also we would express our indebtedness and thanks to the press for their courtesy at all times and kindness in donating to the Public reading room a copy of their respective papers.

We are grateful for the fine spirit of co-operation throughout the Association for the interest of the members, the increased interest of the churches and pastors, for the faithful work of our Board members. Each year opens up new work. There must be extension and development. We need more members and more money to overtake the work. Shall we, the women of Peterborough, young and old, use this building for the great purpose for which it was built, the upbuilding of Christ's kingdom in the hearts and lives of many young girls and women? In order to do this we must have a much larger membership, the co-operation of every member, the transfusion of the whole Association spirit into each so-called department of work.

The work at all times is difficult, but not too difficult if united, workers under the leadership of Him in whose name and for whose sake the Young Women's Christian Association has been instituted and is being promoted.

Faithfully submitted,
MARY D. McCALLA,
General Secretary.

Are Willing to Co-operate with City in Celebrating Coronation Day

As regards the attitude of the regiment concerning the question of taking part in the Coronation Day celebration, it was learned that the regiment would be perfectly willing to act in co-operation with the citizens. While the regiment has no intention of holding a celebration of their own, they would be perfectly willing to work in conjunction with whatever form of celebration the city might decide upon, subject to the discretion of the commanding officers.

This was decided upon last night. No committee has yet been formed to take definite action in the matter. It rests entirely with the civic authorities as to what form of celebration shall be adopted.

BOUGHT IRON MINES

Norwood, May 3.—A company composed of Toronto, Chicago and Cleveland capitalists have bought the old Blairton iron mines, in the township of Belmont, from the Pearce Company, Limited, of Marmora, of which company Mr. J. B. Pearce of Norwood is President. The transfer took place on Monday, when the full amount of the purchase money was paid into the Union Bank of Canada here to the credit of the Pearce Company, the price being $75,000.

The company acquiring the property have been incorporated under the name of the Blairton Iron Mines Co. of Toronto. The option of purchase has been held by the company for the past three years and for the past year they have had a royalty of twenty-five cents a ton on 25,000 tons, although doing no actual mining. During this time, however, they have tested the property thoroughly with diamond drills. The same interests have also acquired other valuable iron properties in North Hastings, and have also secured the old Gilmour property at Trenton, where they purpose locating their concentration plant. Trenton electors will vote at an early date on a by-law to give a fixed assessment. The Blairton mine was worked extensively a number of years ago, but was abandoned owing to the heavy cost of carrying the ore to the concentrators in the United States.

The Receipts Of Sheffield Choir Concerts Attached

St. Paul, May 2.—The box office receipts of the concerts given by the Sheffield choir were attached yesterday in a suit brought by Louis W. Gay, manager of the United States tour of the choir, against Dr. Charles Harris, of Ottawa, Ont., the financial backer and general manager. It is said that no more concerts will be given and that the choir will return to England.

By this attachment or "garnishment" suit the St. Paul Symphony Orchestra, which, through its agents, handles the receipts of the St. Paul concerts, is forbidden to pay over to the choir any share of the proceeds from the sale of tickets. Mr. Gay admits in his complaint that his salary as American manager and booking agent has been paid to date, but alleges that a certain percentage of the proceeds was guaranteed him, and that a reasonable and fair amount under the agreement is $4,000, or 10 per cent of the entire gross receipts, which, he says, have amounted to over $40,000.

STRUCK BY HEAVY CHAIN AND WAS PAINFULLY INJURED

Mr. Wm. Cruikshank, section man, of Fraserville, and brother of Mr. H. Cruikshank, local G.T.R. baggage agent, narrowly escaped being killed, while engaged in clearing the wreck, which occurred near Best's station. The accident occurred Tuesday afternoon, and the injured man was brought to this city on a handcar for medical attention. It appears that the order was given to swing the large auxiliary arm around to a certain position, and just as it was swinging around, Mr. Cruickshank stepped into the way and the long heavy chain, with the heavy hook at the end, struck him on the forehead, cutting a gash about three inches long and slightly facturing the skull. The injured man is now under the care of Dr. H. A. Turner, of Millbrook, and is rapidly recovering from the injury.

WHAT DO YOU SLEEP ON?

This becomes a very pertinent question when you consider that you spend one-third of your life in bed. A great many people do not know what they sleep on; they never saw the inside of a mattress in their lives and perhaps they sleep the better for that. Of late years cotton felt mattresses have come greatly into favour, as much for their purity and cleanliness as for their comfort and durability, and they fully deserve the preference that is being given to them by discriminating buyers. In order to show just how cotton felt mattresses are made and what they are made of, Messrs. E. B. Clegg & Co. have now in their window at 427 George street, a very interesting display. It shows the Kellaric Cotton Felt mattress in the process of manufacture, the materials that are used and the finished article. One of the features of the "Kellaric" mattress is that it has a laced opening at the end, so that the purchaser can see just what is inside, and after looking at the clean, pure cotton from which the mattress is made, it is refreshing to think of lying down to sleep on one.

WHO IS TO BLAME

For So Many Sickly Children?

We hear of so many children who are thin, delicate, ailing and tired all the time, we are led to ask what is the cause, and who is to blame?

It is the mothers of all such children who are to blame, for if they only realized what our delicious cod liver and iron tonic will do for their little ones, they wouldn't sleep at night until they had started them on Vinol.

Only a few days ago a case came to our attention.—Mrs. W. H. Gilmore of Durand, Mich., had a little daughter nine years of age. She was weak, pale, ailing and nothing seemed to do her any good. She gave her Vinol and she began to thrive at once and gained rapidly in weight, colour and strength.

We positively know Vinol will build up your little ones and make them healthy, strong and robust. Try a bottle and if you are not satisfied we will return your money. We make this offer to show you our confidence and belief in Vinol. McDermid and Jury, druggists, corner George and Charlotte streets; also Payne's drug store, corner George and Simcoe streets.

THE BOARD OF WORKS HOLDS BUSY MEETING

Matter of Water Main Across the New Auburn Dam is Settled, an Arrangement Being Arrived at Between City and Company—Tobacco Company Wants to Put Up Illuminated Signs.

The City Board of Works met last night and transacted a considerable amount of business. Ald Metheral presided, and the following were present: Mayor Morrow, Ald. Anderson, Ald. Brown, Ald. Duncan, Ald. Graham and City Engineer Hay.

Mr. Munro, of the Peterborough Light and Power Co., was present in the interests of the company regarding the agreement with the city in connection with putting in a main over their new dam at Auburn. The former offer made by the Company, though their representative, Mr. Munro, was entirely withdrawn and a new agreement was made. The unsatisfactory part of the former agreement was that the P. L. & P. Co. would only agree to put a six inch main in, while the city wanted a ten inch main. The Company offered to lay a six inch main in exchange for a narrow strip of land near the power house, which was at first thought to be the property of the Company, but, turned out to be city property. The city wanted the ten inch main, however, and agreed to pay the difference in the cost. This was agreed upon at last night's meeting, and the city will also pay $1.00 per year as a rental for the pipe to protect the Company's ownership, as Mr. Munro emphasized the fact that the Company did not want any person to have property rights on the dam. The matter was then settled in this manner, and it was decided that the notices of the closing of the street should be inserted in the papers at once. Contractors are now at work on the dam.

A communication was received from Wm. O'Brien, representing the Imperial Tobacco Co., of Canada, requesting that they be allowed to place six illuminated signs, 2 x 3 ft. on Peterborough Light & Power Co's poles. The request could not be granted as putting signs of that nature on poles, is contrary to the by-law. It was intimated that the request would be granted, if the Company would put the signs against the front of the buildings, according to the by-law. They will be notified to that effect.

Mr. Moore, a resident of Smith St., was present to request that the new sidewalk, which is being put in on that street, be put on the outside of the tree line. His request was not granted, but the matter will be looked into by a committee composed of Ald. Metheral, City Engineer Hay, Ald. Duncan. They will meet Mr. Moore at the place where the sidewalk is going to be put in, as a date not yet decided.

A petition was received from G. A. Ash, signed by eight property owners on George street, between Romaine and King Edward street, requesting that a concrete sidewalk be put in on George street between the streets named. A report must be made by Mr. Hay before any action can be taken, so the matter was left over.

A claim for $2.50 damages was received from Mr. F. E. Yokome. He claimed that Mr. Ennis, engaged by the city to run a snow plough last winter, damaged his fence by running the plough against it. The exact date of the accident can not be ascertained, and Mr. Ennis had no recollection of any such accident, though he admitted it might have happened in the dark, without his knowing it. No action was taken.

It was moved and seconded that Mr. Langford be paid for valuing the strip of land on the east side of Water street.

A petition was received requesting that a sewer be constructed on Downie street, between Hunter and Brock streets. The petition was insufficiently signed, so no action was taken. A similar request was made that a sewer be constructed on Bethune street, between Hunter and Brock streets. It was improperly signed, so it was left over.

The Board was recommended by the Board of Health to construct a sewer on Cambridge street from Cedar to McDonnel. The work will be gone ahead with at once, as Mr. Bonner notified the Board that the company would be ready to use the water and sewer in the course of six weeks.

Regarding the Septic tank, Ald. Graham thought that it would be time enough yet to put it in. The matter was laid over until next meeting.

The watering trough at the police station is leaking and in bad condition, and will be repaired at once. The matter was left with the chairman and Ald. Brown.

The matter of putting a curb along that section of the street was brought up, and it also was left in the hands of the same committee.

The chairman and Ald. Brown were authorized to purchase a horse to cart earth and etc., to the pitch holes in the streets at different suburban points. It was suggested that a good horse be purchased for the fire station and that one of the fire horses be taken for the purpose mentioned. The matter was settled as stated.

The City Engineer was asked to notify the C. P. R. authorities regarding the bad condition of their George street crossing. Loose cinders were put on the crossing and these became dug up, so that the crossing is full of holes.

The street sign question came up and some of the samples were produced, and some of the offers of the Peterborough Hardware were read, but just when the matter was being discussed, Mr. Chipman, the Engineer engaged in connection with the south city sewer, came in from Toronto, and the matter was dropped to be discussed at the next meeting.

Mr. Chipman was present regarding the south end sewage system. In regard to the transferring of the contract from Mr. Conroy to Mr. Bogue, Mr. Chipman wanted Mr. Bartlett transferred to some other branch of the work, as he felt there was some danger of conflict. He suggested that Mr. Bartlett be transferred and that a Toronto man or an outsider be placed in his position.

Ald. Duncan thought that it would be better not to make any change until the machinery was placed, so it was decided that Mr. Bartlett remain in his present position until the end of May, and then the suggested change be made if necessary.

SCARLET FEVER EPIDEMIC STRIKES CITY OF HAMILTON

It is of a Very Severe Type Baffling Some of the Leading Physicians---Hospitals Are Crowded---Fire Chief Is Among the Victims.

The Hamilton Herald of yesterday devoted a column and one-half to the sudden outbreak of scarlet fever in that city. It is considered to be a very severe type, in many cases baffling the skill of the leading physicians. The hospitals are crowded and many deaths have occurred.

Assistant Chief James of the Hamilton Fire Department, has communicated with Chief Howard, notifying him of the serious illness of Fire Chief Teneyck. He is at present under quarantine with scarlet fever. When Chief Howard received the news this morning he was deeply affected and views the situation with great concern.

Chief Teneyck had just resumed his duties prior to having been confined to his bed with pneumonia for two months, and this second serious illness following so quickly in the wake of the former one, gave rise to considerable alarm among the Chief's many friends. Chief Teneyck is President of the Canadian Fire Chiefs Association, and enjoys the reputation of being one of the leading Fire Chiefs in the Dominion of Canada.

RECEPTION COMMITTEE MET LAST EVENING

At the meeting of the Reception committee, held last night, the matter of giving a reception in honour of the visit on May 18th, of Hon. Wm. Jennings Bryan, who is going to lecture here, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A., came up. It was remarked that the officials of the Y.M.C.A. should congratulate themselves upon the fact that they have been so fortunate to secure such a prominent statesman and distinguished orator, as Mr. Bryan. They decided to give him a reception, and a committee, composed of Ald. Graham and Mayor Morrow was formed to make the necessary arrangements for same. It was rather difficult for the committee to decide upon what reception would be the most appreciated. It was suggested that it be arranged to have the Lift Lock demonstrated to the visitor, and also that be be taken around the city and shown the different points of interest. No action was taken however, it all being left in the hands of the committee named.

President Taft Says That the United States Has All the Territory It Can Handle—No Designs on Canada

PEACE CONFERENCE

Baltimore, Md., May 4.—President Taft, in his speech at the opening of the third national peace conference here yesterday, declared that the United States would keep hands off and not seek to extend its domain or to acquire foreign territory. The President made no mention specifically of Mexico, but to those who heard him, it was evident that the troubled situation there and the suspicion in the South American republics as to the intention of this nation, in regard to its southern neighbors, had inspired him. The President had been speaking of the recurrence of internal disturbances in countries not so well able as the United States to maintain order and peace, and had said that it was incumbent upon the great nations of "this hemisphere to exercise their kindly and peaceful influences as much as possible."

One of the difficulties that the United States finds is the natural suspicion that the countries engaged have of the motives which the U. S. has in tendering its good offices," continued the President. "Asseveration of good faith helps but little where the suspicion is real, and yet I like to avail myself of an opportunity in such presence as this to assert that there is not in the whole length and breadth of the United States among its people any desire for territorial aggrandizement and that its people, as a whole, will not permit its Government, if it would, to take any step in respect to foreign peoples, looking to a forcible extension of our political power.

"We have had wars and we know what they are. We know what responsibilities they entail, the burdens and losses and horrors, and we would have none of them. We have a magnificent domain of our own in which we are attempting to work out and show to the world success in popular government, and we need no more territory in which to show this. But we have attained great prosperity and great power. We have become a powerful member of the community of nations in which we live, and there is, therefore, thrown upon us necessarily, a care and responsibility for the peace of the world in our neighborhood, and a burden of helping those nations that cannot help themselves, if we may do that peacefully and effectively.

"An arbitration treaty between two great nations of the world," said the President, "would be a very important step in securing the peace of the world. I don't claim any patent for a new discovery in that suggestion, because I have no doubt that it has often been made before. If such an arbitration treaty can be concluded, I have no doubt that an important step will have been taken, but it will not bring an end of war. It is a step only; and we must not defeat our purposes by enlarging the expectation of the world as to what is to happen and by then disappointing it. I think we are likely to make more progress if we express our hope with moderation and realise the difficulties that are to be overcome, than if we proclaim that we have opened the gate to eternal peace with one key and within one year."

The President was particularly interested in a speech by Rev. Dr. J. A. Macdonald, editor of The Toronto Globe, a warm advocate of reciprocity. "If that arbitration treaty between your country and England is ratified," said Dr. Macdonald, "the name of William Howard Taft will be remembered in world history so long as man lives in peace.

"Above all other nations Canada has the greatest stake in the proposed treaty; she has the most to gain by peace; the most to lose by war.

"Canada desires the pact, not for herself alone, but for the sake of the whole world. The time to do it is at hand. The hour is trembling, ready to strike; the tide is swelling to the flood and if I ever had the right to speak for my country or for the Empire to which I belong, it is now, and I ask that the Parliament of Great Britain and the Congress of the United States join to insure the peace of the whole world."

DENIES THE CONNECTION

Minister of the Interior Objects to His Private Affairs Being Scattered Broadcast to the Public Curiosity

WANTS A PROBE

Ottawa, May 4.—Hon. Frank Oliver yesterday in the Commons demanded a full investigation into the insinuations of graft made in two Toronto papers, at the same time he objected to having his private accounts thrown open to public curiosity. Mr. Oliver declares that he can show there is no connection between his bank account and the Canadian Northern choice of lands, and that the House deemed it sufficient in a vote on Sir Wilfrid Laurier's motion yesterday.

The Government voted down yesterday the proposal of Mr. Borden that the inquiry should be into the charge issued by the Premier himself last week in the House, and the proposal of Mr. Lennox that there should be a royal commission.

R. L. Borden said that the motion, while different in form was to the same effect as the one to which he took exception on Tuesday. He remarked that this was very much of a family quarrel between the supporters of the Prime Minister.

In the opinion of Mr. Borden the matter to be inquired into was whether the money came from a tainted or untainted source. "Let us," he said, "be satisfied that Mr. Oliver is free from any suspicion of unworthy motives, but let it be an investigation that will satisfy Parliament and the country."

The matter could be settled by a committee in five minutes, if the Minister would state that the money was from private sources.

Mr. Borden then moved the following amendment, and in doing so said that his object was to make the scope of the enquiry just as wide as the Premier had made it when he spoke, "That a special committee of five members be appointed to enquire into and investigate the charges and allegations set forth and referred to in the statement of the Prime Minister, made in this House on Friday, April 21 last, and the charges and allegations set forth and referred to in the statements of Hon. Mr. Oliver, Minister of the Interior, and of the Prime Minister, made in this House on Tuesday, May 2, inst."

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in refusing to accept the amendment, said that Mr. Borden's proposal would not be fair to Mr. Oliver.

Mr. Borden had said there was a suspicion as to the source of the funds placed in the bank, but he would ask the House to judge whether it would be just to investigate the matter in the way he proposed. He admitted that it might possibly come from one hundred legitimate sources, and yet would enquire into the matter in the manner proposed. What Mr. Borden desired was authority to fix evidence. He would ask Mr. Oliver to prove a negative. He would ask the Minister of Justice to go into the box and prove his own innocence in the face of the well-known rule that a man was innocent until it was proved that he was guilty.

Hon. Mr. Foster said there was no authority for the statement that The Toronto World had made an insinuation. Two statements had been placed side by side, but that did not constitute a direct allegation. The charge which the Premier asked the House to investigate was therefore one which Mr. Oliver had framed himself. The only charge in which the country was really interested was that made by Mr. McGillicuddy to the Premier, in which he stated that Mr. Oliver was a boodler and a grafter. The charge had been made by a friend and a former beneficiary of the Government.

Mr. Foster asked the Premier to say if the committee of enquiry would be allowed to examine the evidence of McGillicuddy. The Premier made no comment, and Mr. Foster said he would take it that he refused.

Hon. Frank Oliver began his statement with the remark that the question of interest to the House and the country was the question as to how those who were charged with public responsibilities discharged those responsibilities.

He declared he was not trying to shirk investigation. The article in The Toronto Telegram did not allude to him specifically, therefore it was not for him to act. There had been an allusion to the Prime Minister, therefore it was the duty of the Prime Minister to take cognizance of it. But The Toronto World had specifically connected his name with an insinuation, a serious insinuation, which related to an important administrative act, for which he was primarily responsible, and he thought it was only right that the country should know, and have the earliest opportunity of knowing what foundation there was for that insinuation.

"Now, my honorable friend said that I might clear the whole matter up as to my bank account by a simple statement as to the source as to which this money came, and the direction in which it was diverted, I have no doubt that is a fact, that I could take action and clear this whole matter up. But I conceive my duty to be this: I do not think that it is in the interest of Canada, I do not think it is in the interest of public life of Canada that upon an insinuation, based upon theft and put forward as blackmail, a man in public or private life in Canada should be compelled to expose his private business. I do not think that it would add to the dignity of Parliament or the standard of public life in Canada to say that Parliament should be the assistant of thugs and blackmailers by the requiring of the exposure of a bank account on such a statement as has been placed before the public."

Omaha Vote being taken there voted for the Premier's motion 78 and for Mr. Borden's amendment 45, a Government majority of 33.

After recess Haughton Lennox moved for the appointment of a royal commission.

Mr. Lennox said they were not without experience of farcial investigations, and he mentioned the Hodgins and Lumsden investigations as instances.

The vote on Mr. Lennox's amendment was: Against 99 for 65. It was thus defeated by a Government majority of 34.

VETO BILL REPORTED.

British Measure Is Now Past Committee Stages.

London, May 4.—The Parliament bill, known also as the veto bill, for the curtailment of the powers of the House of Lords, passed yesterday the committee stage in the House of Commons practically without amendment, amidst scenes of great enthusiasm.

The refusal of A. J. Balfour, leader of the Opposition, to vote against the preamble to the veto bill, removed any danger that might have been apprehended from the revolt of the Laborites against the preamble, and this portion of the measure, the consideration of which was regarded as the most critical test for the Government, proved easiest to carry. The Unionist opposition to the bill almost vanished. In place of hundreds of amendments which threatened to delay proceedings in the committee stage, only a few important ones, mainly in the direction of urging joint sittings, or a conference of the two Houses in cases of disagreement will be moved in the report stage of the bill, which is expected to occupy only two or three days next week.

The consideration of the preamble was the most critical stage of the discussion from the Government viewpoint, because of the diversity of opinion between the factions making up the coalition majority.

The Labor party is composed of single chamber men, who have repeatedly declared their intention of opposing any plan to reform the House of Lords.

Barnes moved that the preamble be eliminated. He said that he would rather have voted with the Government to further the progress of the measure as a whole, but the Laborites had to part company with the Government at this point.

A. J. Balfour, leader of the Opposition, opposed the preamble on the ground that it would lead to the constitution of a wholly and directly representative second chamber. If the two chambers drew their authority from the electors, they would claim and possess equal authority, and he did not wish co-equal bodies. The second chamber, he said, should be empowered in case of controversy between the two Houses, to refer the question to the electorate.

After the application of closure and the rejection of another amendment without division, Mr. Balfour said that he regarded the preamble as "indefinite and illusory," but he wished to see the Government carry it out. He hated some of it, but liked another part of it, and therefore would not vote against it.

Amid loud Ministerial cheers, the preamble was then agreed to without division. On motion that the bill as amended be reported, division was challenged and the motion was carried 295 to 147. The House then adjourned, the Government supporters giving vent to the wildest enthusiasm.

To give awkwardly is churlishness. The most difficult part is to give. Then why not add a smile?—La Bruyere.

NEWARK, N.J., MARCH 3.—After meeting with four defeats in a row at Providence Manager Kelley's Leafs fluttered into the New Jersey metropolis to-day and just knocked the stuffing out of the Newark team, the lopsided score reading 22 to 2. Scoring 22 runs in six innings is a record that has never been equalled in the Eastern League as far as memory runs. Hits and runs! Why they came so fast that the Newark fans became dizzy trying to keep track of them. It was a drubbing that the Tigers will never forget. Wow!

The fans settled back in their seats serene in the thought that they were about to witness a close tug-of-war when the umpire announced Mueller and Lee as the opposing pitchers at the curtain-raiser. Before the battle had been under way a minute, however, it began to pour runs and hits for Toronto. A pass to O'Hara, singles by Shaw, Jordan and Bradley and a screeching triple off Mullen's bat produced four runs in the very first inning. Then followed six more in the third. Louden's errors gave Shaw and Jordan a life, and a safe bunt by Bradley filled the bases. Phelps hit to Louden, who got Shaw at the plate, but Mullen singled, sending Jordan and Bradley home. Vaughn dropped a single to right, scoring Phelps, Mullen and Vaughn pranced home on Mueller's triple, and the latter dented the pan himself on a single by Delahanty. By this time the Newark team were completely "up a tree," and the Leafs kept piling up runs almost at will. Jordan doubled at the start of the fourth after Cull had replaced Lee, and finished the trip on a hit by Bradley, and another single by Mueller admitted Bradley to the old homestead.

Hits by O'Hara, Joran and Bradley mixed with a couple of stolen bases, netted two more runs in the fifth. To "rub it in" all the harder, those merciless Canadians slammed in eight more runs in the sixth—yes, eight—hitting the ball until the Newark players' tongues were literally hanging out. The inning read thusly—Vaughn walked, Mueller singled and took second on Browne's error, Vaughn scoring. Delahanty hit to right, tallying Mueller. O'Hara forced Delahanty. Shaw's single scored O'Hara Then Jordan doubled, Bradley singled, Kocher drilled a safety to left. Mullen again tickled the pill for three bases and Vaugh boosted a long fly to the outfield, netting in all eight runs. That ended the scoring, probably because the Leafs were weary of circling the bases, but whether the fans believe it or not, those 22 runs were enough to win the game. Oh, yes, the Tigers also did some scoring—two runs in all—but they were like a drop in the bucket.

GOOD GAME

A great game was witnessed last evening by a crowd of interested spectators on the grounds of the Brinton Carpet Co. The opposing teams were St. John's and Coldsprings, and the game resulted in a decisive win for St. John's by 4 goals to 1. St. John's are certainly a fine team and display splendid form and Coldsprings will be sure to give a good showing in their future matches.

The other members of the orchestra are Mrs. Evans, piano, Ed. Cronk, bass; Jos. Minicolo, cornet, Fred Miller, clarionet and Arthur Hooper, trap-drummer. The new orchestra will be a valuable addition to Peterborough's musical organization and their playing will be one of the features at the Rex.

"THE MAN ON THE BOX."

"The Man on the Box," the laughable comedy-drama, introduced to Peterborough play-goers some years ago by Lee Jamieson Finney, was seen at the Grand last night and proved a very enjoyable interpretation. The production was notable in that Mr. John Meehan, who played the title role, with ease and ability, is an old Lindsay boy, who has many friends here. Mr. Meehan has developed into a very accomplished actor, and his work last night left nothing to be desired. In addition he was supported by a good company and the play was thoroughly enjoyed.

It is expected that the Sacred Heart Branch will have their representatives present at this meeting.

HASTINGS HAPPENINGS

Examiner Special:

HASTINGS, MAY 3.—The schools have re-opened with an increased attendance, and the teaching staff is busy grading and arranging the classes for the summer work.

Work in this section of the canal is being pushed forward with renewed energy, and everywhere you look you may see dredges, steamers, etc., at work, bringing it every day nearer completion.

The farmers in this vicinity are actively engaged in seeding operations, and it is generally felt that rain is much needed. The fall wheat in some localities is almost a total failure and some are re-seeding the fields.

Under the auspices of the Young People's Society of the Methodist church, the Rev. H. Armstrong of the Peace River District, gave an illustrated address on Friday evening, which was very pleasing as well as instructive. The reverend gentleman has spent several years in that part of Western Canada and knows whereof he speaks. While there he took a number of photographs, which, with the aid of a powerful stereoptican, he uses to make his lecture more interesting and effective.

After the lecture refreshments were served in the basement, and a sociable time enjoyed by those present. Proceeds were in aid of the Society.

About a week ago, while a young son of Mr. Tim. Walsh of Asphodel, was playing around the yard, he tripped and fell on a sharp stick, which entered his mouth, injuring the palate and tongue. Dr. Ford of Norwood was summoned and attended to the injuries, and the little fellow is doing nicely. As a sequel to the epidemic of mumps, which has visited our town, the measels have made their appearance, and several cases are already reported.

Mrs. Wm. Herminston and Miss Agnes visited in Campbellford at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. Greenley.

SITUATION AT OTTAWA TO-DAY

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, MAY 4.—The deadlock on Parliament Hill has "come back" this morning and the situation is just as uncertain to-day as it seemed certain of solution yesterday. One outstanding circumstance seems to be that the Premier will go to England whether he will go on the understanding that there shall be adjournment of session is a problem which is not yet solved. The difference seems to be this: The Liberals are willing to consent to a proposition for two months' recess. The Conservatives demand prorogation and abandonment of the reciprocity proposals for the present.

LLOYD GEORGE BACK AGAIN

Special to The Examiner.

LONDON, MAY 4.—For the first time since his long illness David Lloyd George, Chancellor of the Exchequer, appeared in the Commons to-day, introducing his long-promised state insurance against unemployment and invalidity plan.

CAUSED DELAY

The G.T.R. train leaving here at 1.50 o'clock for Belleville, was delayed for some time to-day on account of a twisted rail between George and Lock streets, which held up the train until repairs had been made. It is thought the damage to the rail was done by a heavy freight train which passed through some time before, fortunately the condition of the track was discovered before the passenger train arrived.

LLOYD GEORGE INTRODUCES HIS LONG PROMISED PLAN OF STATE INSURANCE

Against Unemployment, Sickness and Invalidity—Government Pays Four Cents and Each Employer Eight Cents a Week.

FIGHT TUBERCULOSIS

London, May 5.—David Lloyd-George, in the House of Commons yesterday, introduced the long-promised plan of state insurance against unemployment, sickness and invalidity.

Every worker whose annual earnings fall below the income tax level of £160 (approximately $800) will be compulsorily insured against illness, so as to assure him the receipt of five shillings per week during his incapacity. Toward this the worker would contribute about one-half, the same being deducted from his wages, while the balance would be paid jointly by his employers and the state.

The weekly assessment against the insured would be eights cents in the case of a man and six cents for a woman.

Every one in the class mentioned between the ages of 16 and 65 is included in the plan. The employers would pay six cents weekly for every employe and the Government contributes four cents for each of the insured.

Lloyd-George estimated that his plan would affect 14,700,000 men and women. Provision is made whereby women will receive 30 shillings in maternity cases on condition that they do not work for a month following child-birth, and for free medical attendance for every contributor.

The state would also help in the crusade against consumption providing $7,500,000 to aid local authorities in building sanitariums and $5,000,000 towards their maintenance.

Although in cases of permanent disability the sick allowance would be five shillings weekly, ten shillings would be allowed for the first three months in the case of men and seven shillings and sixpence in the case of women.

Those who can be shown to have invited incapacity would receive no insurance, though any necessary medical treatment would be provided.

Lloyd-George estimated that the expenditure incurred would be $35,000,000 in 1912-13, rising to $100,000,000 in 1915-16.

Dealing with the unemployed insurance, the Chancellor said that it would at first apply only to the engineering, shipbuilding and house-building trades, involving 2,500,000 workmen. Both the workers and the employers would pay five cents weekly each, the state contributing $3,750,000 a year, or about one-fourth of the total cost. The contributors, when unemployed, would receive a maximum of 15 shillings and a minimum of seven shillings weekly. No payments would be made in the case of strikes or lockouts.

J. Austen Chamberlain supported the bill, saying that the Opposition desired to co-operate in the legislation.

Doctor—"Why on earth didn't you send for me before?"
Patient's Wife—"Well sir, we thought as we'll wait a few days and give 'im a chance to recover!"

Reduced Fights Rates.

Duluth, Minn., May 5.—Passenger fares generally in Minnesota will be three cents a mile on and after July 1, this year, according to information obtained yesterday. On that date also, class freight rates will be restored to the basis existing before the order of the railroad and warehouse commission on Sept. 6, 1906, reduced them 20 to 30 per cent.

M.P.'s in Hospital.

Ottawa, May 5.—A. C. Boyce, Conservative member for West Algoma, and Dr. Cash, Liberal member for Mackenzie, are both confined to the hospital. Mr. Boyce has bronchitis, while Dr. Cash is also suffering from an illness brought on by a cold.

PROPOSES A NEW CHECK ON THE HOSTILE NATIONS

FINANCIAL NEUTRALITY

Baltimore, May 5.—"Financial neutrality" as a preventive of war between nations was the interesting suggestion offered at the third national peace congress here yesterday, by Jas. Speyer, of the New York and European banking house of Speyer & Co. Mr. Speyer spoke as a delegate from the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York. He followed Assistant Secretary of State Huntingdon Wilson, presiding officer of the forenoon session, who gave his interpretation of what has been called "dollar diplomacy," the newly coined phrase applied to the expansion of business interest. This term, according to Mr. Wilson, means the substitution of dollars for bullets; the creation of prosperity which will be preferred to predatory strife, and "a practical mode of pursuing the ideal of world peace."

Mr. Speyer, who spoke on "International Finance as a Power for Peace," dealt first with the influence of international investments in times of peace. Taking up the question of what should and could be done in time of war by first-class powers, he said we find to-day in Europe that in times of peace certain Governments will not allow their bankers to take and place foreign loans in the home market, unless the purposes for which the loan is to be used are known and approved, and at least part of the proceeds are used by the borrowing nation for expenditures in such home markets for the benefit of the loaning nation.

"Now," said Mr. Speyer, "if such supervision and control of the bankers already exists in time of peace, it does not seem a wide flight of imagination to suggest that the great powers might agree to exercise such control in times of war between third parties, and to maintain, in future, what for want of a better term, might be called 'financial neutrality.' In case two nations went to war without first submitting their grievances and differences to arbitration or judicial settlement at The Hague, why should the other neutral powers not bind themselves not to assist either of the belligerents financially, but to see to it that real neutrality was observed by their banks and bankers. There is little doubt that this could be done. If no financial assistance could be obtained from the outside neutral nations would, in the face of the almost effective neutrality of the other powers, incur the peril of bankruptcy. Some would certainly last a much shorter time."

Motorbike Goes to Ireland.

Toronto, May 5.—When Herbert McLetchie was arraigned in the assizes yesterday, the jury having disagreed as to his guilt of the killing of Edward Jacobs, by running him down on Bloor street, with his employer's automobile, he was remanded to jail. He will be admitted to bail in his own surety of $1,000, when the crown is assured that he is about to go back to his home in Ireland. There are still charges of wounding and furious driving standing against him in the Police Court.

Crossing Protection.

Newcastle, May 5.—The clerk of Hope Township has received word from the Board of Railway Commissioners that they have instructed the G.T.R. to install an electric bell on the gravel road crossing between Garden Hill and Millbrook. The Government is to pay 20 per cent. of the cost of installation, and the railway the balance. The bell is to be in operation within 20 days.

CARLING IS ILL.

Sir John Is Not Expected to Live Many Days.

London, May 5.—Sir John Carling, Minister of Agriculture in Sir John Macdonald's Government, and head of the big brewing firm of this city, was overcome by a sinking spell yesterday morning and is not expected to recover. The family have been summoned to the bedside. Sir John had been around as usual until a few days ago.

Last night Dr. Eccles, who has worked with the patient all day, announced that he is stronger. Yet neither the physician nor the members of the family are sanguine. "Sir John is over 85 years old, you know," said the doctor. "He is living on borrowed time. We hope he will rally, but we cannot feel any degree of certainty."

Attack Free List.

Washington, May 5.—Not since the Republican guns were unlimbered against the Democrat free list bill by Minority Leader Mann, over a week ago, has the debate in the House developed such an attack on the measure as was made yesterday by Representative Hill of Connecticut, a Republican member of the ways and means committee, one of the leading Republican advocates of the Canadian reciprocity bill. He declared that instead of $10,000,000 reduction in revenue, as the Democrats expected, the "farmers' free list" might make a reduction of $50,000,000, and that its effect upon business would be to transfer many flourishing industries to Europe.

"You intend to hit the trusts," said Mr. Hill to the Democrats; "you will make up to find that you have in fact helped the trusts."

Want Farmers to Protest.

Concord, N.H., May 5.—Farmers throughout the country are urged to send representatives to Washington to attend the hearings before the Senate committee on finance on the Canadian reciprocity, beginning week of May 8. Mr. Batcholder's communication says:

"The farmers are practically unanimous in opposing what they consider a most unfair discrimination against their interests and if they make their wishes known to their Senators, the reciprocity bill cannot become a law. Delegations of farmers from at least fifteen state granges will attend the hearings to present the views of their members on this important question.

Struck by a Train.

Hamilton, May 5.—Mrs. Nichols, 20 Summit street, was perhaps fatally injured about nine o'clock yesterday morning by being struck by a G.T.R. passenger train at the Wentworth street level crossing. It is supposed that Mrs. Nichol, who is an elderly woman, failed to hear the train as it approached the crossing. The unfortunate woman had both legs broken and two ribs fractured, besides sustaining numerous cuts and bruises. Her recovery is doubtful.

Sold Whisky In Hay Loft.

Galt, May 5.—George Grey, a porter in a local hotel, was fined $100 yesterday for selling liquor in a local option district. He bought supplies in Preston and hid them in a hayloft. He sold only to farmers and outsiders and was doing a good business. Chief Gorman found about one and a half gallons of Scotch whisky in the hayloft.

Strike In Kingston.

Kingston, May 5.—The strike of the mason helpers is not yet settled. Seventy-five men are out. The bosses declare they will not pay the increase. The masons and stonecutters have been unable to settle their trouble over who shall cut cornices and work is being delayed.

Liberal Caucus To-day Will Discuss Adjournment—The Railway Subsidy Comes Up in the House

SOME NEW CLAUSES

Ottawa, May 5.—The Liberals will meet in caucus to-day to consider the question of a short adjournment of Parliament at the end of the month, until the Premier's return in July from the Imperial Conference and the coronation. Although a considerable number of the party are in favour of continuing the session without any recess until all the business before Parliament is concluded, it is probable that the decision will be in favour of an adjournment during June and part of July, especially in view of the fact that this will allow the Parliamentary delegation of eighteen, who have been officially invited to attend the coronation ceremonies, to get away. Moreover, according to advices received here, it is regarded as improbable that the American Senate will finally ratify the agreement before July, and the adjournment therefore, under the circumstances, would probably not make any very material difference.

At 10.30 last night Sir Wilfrid Laurier visited R. L. Borden in his office in the Parliament Buildings.

He remained with the Opposition leader for about twenty minutes, and informed him that he had definitely accepted this one of the suggestions which Mr. Borden made in the House last week.

While it is true that there is great diversity of opinion as to the course which he should pursue, it is also certain that Sir Wilfrid Laurier has made up his mind definitely on the subject.

There are several details to be arranged, such as the passing of supply sufficient to carry on the work of the Government, [illegible] and the introduction of the Railway Act.

The most important amendment changes [illegible] in case which [illegible] railway becomes [illegible] and cannot be [illegible] the Government [illegible] shall [illegible] the road, assuming its [illegible] and [illegible] mortgage, and the Government [illegible] with such [illegible] necessary [illegible] [illegible] such [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

By OLIVE H. BRIGGS

"Velasco!" she screamed, "Get up. Come—oh, come, while I beat them, the fiends!"

The cry seemed to pierce the benumbed brain of her companion, as the lash the skin. The dark patch moved again and Velasco struggled to his feet; he ran towards the sleigh. The girl leaned forward once more and as the gendarmes sprang towards them again, swearing at her and shouting, she lashed them fiercely across the face and the eyes, mercilessly, with little cries of rage. Velasco tumbled in beside her on the seat.

"Are you there?" she cried, "Are you safe?"

Then she turned, and loosening the reins the lash fell on the horses, cutting them sharply; and they dashed forward, the foam dripping from their bits and their hoofs striking sparks from the ice as they fled, galloping madly, swiftly, through the snow.

In a moment the inn was left behind, the shouting and swearing died away in the distance, and there was silence, broken only by the panting of the horses, and the sound of their hoofs galloping. Kaya still urged them forward, shaking the reins in her left hand and lashing with the whip.

"You are safe!" she cried, "You are there, Velasco?"

And then as the silence continued a great fear came over her; her heart seemed to leap in her throat and her pulses stopped beating. She stooped over him, unheeding the horses. They were in the midst of the forest now, and the next town was several versts distant. It was dark and she put her face close to his, crying out: "Velasco! Velasco!"

Then she saw that he had fainted again; from his forehead a dark stream was gushing slowly; and when she touched it, it was warm and wet. She gave a little cry.

The horses galloped on, but the sleigh moved more smoothly and slid over the icy surface of the snow. Kaya wound the reins about the dash board. They were quiet now, let them gallop! She bent again over her companion and, taking the snow that lay on the side of the sleigh, she bathed the wound with it, staunching the flow with her handkerchief, holding his head against her breast.

"Velasco!" she whispered low, as if afraid he might waken and hear: "It is better now. The wound has stopped bleeding—only a drop or two comes on my handkerchief! You struck it on the runners as you fell; I will bind it now with my scarf. Velasco—dear Velasco! Open your eyes and look at me—smile at me! We are safe. We are alone in the forest and the horses are galloping. Soon we shall be at the station—in the train! A few hours from the frontier—only a few hours—Velasco!"

He stirred in her arms and moaned, and his eye-lids quivered as if trying to open. Kaya took the scarf from her waist and began to wind it slowly about the wound on his forehead. Her breath came in little gasps through her parted lips.

"Have I your blood too on my hands, Velasco? Ah, waken and look at me! We have only a few hours more together—a few hours! Then you will never see me again. Never—never!"

She clasped him closer to her breast and bent over him in terror. "Don't die, Velasco! The wound has stopped bleeding. Why dont you open your eyes? Don't die! If you die I shall die, too. I love you, Velasco! I love you—I love you!"

She laid her cheek to his cold one and tried to warm it. She covered him with her cloak. It grew darker and colder, and the horses galloped on. Presently he stirred again in her arms and opened his eyes, and they looked at one another.

"Kaya" he said, "I heard you—I heard you!"

She shrank back away from him: "You heard—me?" she stammered.

Then he fainted again.

The horses galloped on. The fields of snow stretched in the distance, the frost on the surface glittering like myriads of tiny dew-drops. Through the inky blackness of the clouds the moon shone out fitfully, streaking the road with flashes of light, pale and shadowy. Ahead gleamed the lamps of the station. The hoofs rang on the frozen snow.

Suddenly Velasco lifted his head from the breast of Kaya. He steadied himself and sat upright in the seat. The wound was bound about by the red scarf and his face looked white in the faint moon-beams. There was blood on his jacket and the folds of his vest, and the scarf was spotted with crimson blotches.

He stared straight ahead at the tossing manes of the horses, their galloping bodies, three abreast, plunging and straining in the harness; the reins knotted to the dashboard; the dark, winding road bordered by snow-drifts; the lights in the distance looming nearer, and the bulk of the station. His eyes were shining under the bandage, wide-open beneath the brows.

Kaya drew away from him slowly, burying herself in the corner of the sleigh, drawing the buffalo robe close about her and trembling. The cold was bitter.

He drank in the icy air in long breaths, and it seemed to give him strength, to clear the fumes of the brain. He was like one who has been drowning and is coming to life again gradually. Suddenly he turned and they faced one another. The hoofs rang gainst the ice, pounding forward; the sleigh was lurching, and the runners slipped and slid in the snow.

"Kaya!"

"Velasco."

He put his arms out and they closed around her; he drew her nearer and nearer with all the strength in his body, and she yielded slowly, resisting and weak. She yielded until his lips were on hers, and then she flung out her arms with a little cry, and they clung together, closely, silently.

The horses galloped on and the sleigh lurched faster—and faster.

CHAPTER XIII.

The night train steamed swiftly through the darkness, the cars swaying from side to side of the track, and the couplings clanging and jolting. It was warm inside the compartments and the air made a thick steam on the windows, hiding the snow-fields and the station as the train rushed thundering past. In one of the third-class compartments two gypsies sat together with their heads close to the window, peering out.

"Half an hour now, Velasco."

"Twenty-two minutes, Kaya."

"Now, only twelve."

"Are the passports ready, Velasco?"

"They are here, little one. There is Virballen now in the distance; can you see the roofs and the eagle floating? In another moment, another second—!"

The two gypsies sat quiet, straining their eyes through the steam; then the dark one rose suddenly and adjusted the strap of his knapsack, taking his violin in his hand.

"The train is slowing up now, Kaya, come! Follow me close, and look neither to the right nor the left."

The two sprang from the train, and hurrying into the customs-room of the station were soon lost in the crowd. The minutes dragged slowly.

"Do you see that paling, Kaya? The other side of it is Germany—is freedom."

"I know, Velasco—I know!"

"Your heart is beating and throbbing, Kaya; your jacket tosses like a ship in a storm. Fold your arms over its fluttering, little one, that the guards may not see. They are coming now."

"Pray—Velasco!"

"To whom should I pray? The Tsar perhaps—or the Icon over yonder?" The gypsey laughed, holding out the passports. He was swaggering with his hands in his pockets, and when the official spoke to him, he shrugged his shoulders and answered in dialect.

"Bohemian!" he said, "Yes—gypsies! We earn our living on the road, my comrade and I—eh, Bradjaga?" With that, he clapped Kaya on the shoulder, showing his white teeth and laughing: "No baggage, Barin, no—no, only this—and that!"

He pointed to the knapsack swung from his shoulder and the violin in his hand.

The girl started back for a moment, her shoulder brushing the shoulder of Velasco; then she lifted her blue eyes to the official, and her heart seemed to leap and bound like a wild thing caged. She began to stammer, shrinking back against her companion. A bell sounded suddenly in the office behind them and the official started:

"A telegraph despatch!" he said. "Ha—I must go!"

The girl sprang forward and clutched this sleeve: "Don't go!" she said: "You ask what I can do—I can dance! We will show you, my comrade and I. In a moment the doors will be unlocked; wait until the doors are unlocked! We will give you a performance now, a special performance such as the Tsar himself has heard and seen.—Play!"

She waved her hand to Velasco, and in a moment the violin was out of its wrappings and held to his cheek. He was playing a wild, strange rhythm and Kaya was dancing. The crowd made a circle about them, and the official stood in the centre transfixed, open-mouthed.

The violin was like a creature alive—it sobbed and laughed; and when it sobbed, the little figure of the dancer swayed slowly, languidly, like a flower blown to and fro by the breeze and when it laughed, the rhythm quickened suddenly in a rush like an avalanche falling, and the figure sprang out into the air, turning, twisting, pirouetting; every movement graceful, intense, full of feeling and passion.

The crowd about the gypsies stood spell-bound; the official never stirred. The bell rang again and again. Every time it rang, a new impetus seemed to seize the dancer. Her feet in the heavy boots seemed scarcely to touch the ground; the green of the velveteen was like the colour of a kaleidoscope, and the gold of her curls glittered and sparkled under the cap. The crowd swayed with the rhythm; they grew drunk with it and their bodies quivered as they watched. The minutes passed like a flash.

Suddenly there came a creak in the lock, the key turned and the great doors opened, the doors towards Germany. Beyond was the long line of paling; the flag with the eagle floating; the sentinels with their muskets over their shoulders. A step and then—

The dancer made a little rush forward, gave a spring in the air and then bowed, snatching off the cap.

"Messieurs—Mesdames!"

She held the cap in her two hands, eagerly, pleadingly, and the silver fell into it. Copecks—ten—twenty—hundreds of them and roubles, round and heavy; they clinked as they fell.

"I thank you!" cried the gypsey. "Good-bye Messieurs—Mesdames! Au revoir!"

She bowed again, backing towards the door, the cap still held between her hands, the Violinist following.

"Adieu! Au revoir!"

The crowd clapped noisily, cheering until the great, bare station of the customs rang and re-echoed.

"Au revoir! Adieu!"

The gypsies backed together, smiling, bowing; they passed through the door. They reached the paling—the sentinels; the flag with the eagle floated over their heads; then a click and the gate closed behind them.

They were on German soil. They were free—they were free.

"Kaya!" said Velasco.

The room at the inn was small and very still. The shades were down and over in the corner, beyond the couch, a single candle was burning.

"Are you awake, Kaya?" said Velasco softly, bending over the couch until his curls brushed her, and his lips were close to her rosy cheek.

"I have watched so long for your eyes to open, Kaya! My—wife."

The girl moved uneasily on the pillow.

"My wife—Kaya!"

The Stomach Needs Held

The Liver, Kidneys and Bowels Must Be Kept Active to Ensure Health

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS

Not one person in a hundred can get along at this time of year, without using something to enliven the action of the liver, kidneys and bowels.

Too much eating of heavy artificial foods, too little outdoor exercise, this is the explanation.

The liver and kidneys are overworked in their efforts to remove the poisonous waste matter from the system. They fail and become torpid and clogged. The bowels become constipated and stomach derangements follow.

There is one medicine which will overcome this condition more certainly and more quickly than any other, and this is Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

This medicine gets the bowels in action at once and by awakening the liver and kidneys ensures the thorough cleansing of the filtering and excretory systems.

With the poisonous obstructions removed, the digestive system resumes its healthful condition, appetite improves, pains and aches disappear as well as irritability and depression.

You cannot imagine a more satisfactory treatment for biliousness, constipation, backache and kidney disease than Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. One pill a dose, 25 cents a box, at all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

EARLY BREAKFASTS

King George and Queen Mary are Early Risers

One of the new fashions instituted since the accession of King George is that of dining at an earlier hour than has hitherto been the custom. The King and Queen were the first to set the fashion. It is well known that both the King and Queen are advocates of early hours. A proof of this may be found in the fact that the King is to be seen in the early morning in Rotten Row, and that the time of the May Courts has been fixed at 9.30 instead of 10.30. King Edward preferred to dine late, and this, no doubt, accounted for the fact that till the end of his reign late dining was popular. M. Gustave, of the Savoy Hotel, says that the pendulum is slowly swinging in favor of the early dinners. "King George's example," he said, "is being followed by his people. At first it was a matter of a few minutes. Now the difference is evident. I have noticed it when passing through the restaurant at my usual time, and have remarked to one of the waiters that the restaurant was not so full as usual. Then I discovered that the diners had already left. There is no doubt that among select circles the time of dining has changed. For a while the hour became later and later, till a quarter to nine was a favorite time. Now the usual hour is half-past seven."

MILLIONS OF JUNE BUGS

Farmers in Middlesex County report that in their spring plowing they found the earth teeming with millions of June bugs, which do great damage to basswood, plum and cherry trees. The beetles lay their eggs in the ground, and after hatching, the insect, known as the white grub, eats on the roots of grain for three years before emerging as the June bug.

OLYMPIA PRIZES WILL BE $65,000

Great Preparations for the International Horse Show—A Russian Section this Year

June, in London, will be a dazzling month this year, and visitors will find it very strenuous work indeed to attend all the various festivities, but whatever they do, they are advised not to leave out the International Horse Show at Olympia, which will surpass anything of the kind ever seen in London or in New York. The interior of the vast building will be transformed into a Tudor village. It is intended that the illusion shall be as satisfactory as possible. The bandstand will be an Elizabethan cottage on the slope of a garden. There will be a village inn by the village green—the Lowther Arms (a compliment to the chairman of the show, the Earl of Lonsdale). It will have a swinging sign. From the long eaves overhanging the timbered front natural roses will climb, and a horse plough near will convey a sense of realism. The show will open on June 13th, and it will open each day of the Coronation period, including Coronation Day, both afternoon and evening, closing on June 24th.

The prize list is a record for any horse show. It amounts to nearly $65,000. The King is a patron of the show, and he has offered a $2,500 cup for jumping round the course by individual military officers of any nation. King Edward's Cup was for team jumping, and is, of course, still in the list of prizes. It was won in 1909 by France, and last year by Belgium. The competitions are more attractive than ever, and for the first time entries have been received from Germany and Russia. Already promises from about 70 officers have come in. This year, as the number of officers taking part will be so large and represent so many nations, there will be a great display in which all will appear, beginning with a march. Representatives of the various countries will then show their different methods of training and schooling chargers.

There are, as in the past, classes for mounted constables; and the costers will be there in force, to be judged by Mr. Alfred G. Vanderbilt. Prizes of $175 are offered for the best donkey turnout, and a similar sum for a pony turnout.

One novel and highly interesting feature in this year's programme is the introduction of a Russian section, organised by M. Okonishikoff and M. Watcher, presidents respectively of the Imperial Moscow and St. Petersburg Societies for Encouragement of Breeders of Trotters; Lieut. Gen. Idanovitch, M. Souponoff, and Gen. Skouhoff. One competition will be for trotters and prentashka, in wagon or droshky. In this class two animals are driven together, the horse on the near side being a trotter and his companion a galloper. In the troika class three horses are driven abreast, the centre animal a trotter and the flankers being gallopers. The full equipment of Russian harness and troikas will be provided for the first time in England. Several Russian noblemen have intimated that they intend sending their own horses, carriages, and coachmen for these competitions.

MASTER OF FIVE LANGUAGES

Some Interesting Facts About a Centenarian, A Gordon Hake

Mr. A. Gordon Hake, the dean of the bar, celebrated his hundredth birthday recently at his home at Brighton surrounded by his family—Miss Charlotte Matilda Hake, his daughter; Mr. Augustus Hake and the Rev. T. G. Hake, his sons, and the latter's wife and daughter Constance. Mr. Hake is a master of five languages—Greek, Latin, French, Italian and Spanish, and reads Horace, Virgil and Montaigne. He attributes his long and healthy life to plenty of riding—he had for years a favorite horse named Daisy—and walking, and to abstemious living. He has never cared much for modern varieties of dress. The Rev. T. G. Hake tells a good story of his father's rough-and-ready toilet. Dr. Charles Hanson once called on him at his chambers and asked permission to put on his barrister's wig and gown. "Now," he said, "lend me a looking glass." He was handed a razor—the nearest approach to a mirror possessed by his friend.

Could Not Rest at Night.

Back Was So Weak.

Weak, lame and aching backs are the primary cause of kidney trouble. When the back aches or becomes weak it is a warning from the kidneys that everything is not right with them.

If you don't do this, serious complications are very apt to arise and the first thing you know you will be troubled with Dropsy, Diabetes or Bright's Disease, the three most deadly forms of Kidney Trouble.

On the first sign of anything wrong Doan's Kidney Pills should be taken. They go to the seat of the trouble and strengthen the kidneys, thereby strengthening the back.

Mrs. John Feigh, Parkdale, Man., writes:—"I have used Doan's Kidney Pills and find nothing to beat them. I could not rest at night my back was so weak. I tried everything, but could not get anything to do me any good until I was told by a friend to use Doan's Kidney Pills. I tried them and I am not the same weak woman I was before I am very thankful to have found so speedy a cure."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50 cents per box or 3 for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Be sure and ask plainly "Doan's."

ROYAL FAMILY GOOD LINGUISTS

Both the King and Queen Speak Welsh—The Prince of Wales Studies Welsh and German

The Prince of Wales is studying the Welsh language in order to reply in that tongue to the address of welcome which will be presented to him on the occasion of the investiture at Carnarvon in July next. Sir E. Vincent Evans, secretary of the London Cymmorodorian Society, said: "The young Prince is thoroughly conversant with French and German, and he has a reputation for learning quickly. He could, by a little application, easily master Welsh and know it sufficiently well to enable him to speak in it at the forthcoming investiture. Welsh is far easier than either French or German. It is well known that all the members of the Royal Family are excellent linguists, and both the King and Queen speak Welsh. The late King Edward could make himself understood in it. When, as Prince of Wales, he was present at the Eisteddfod, he very often made use of Welsh phrases in conversation with prominent Welshmen, who were introduced to him. The late Queen Victoria also used Welsh words, to the great gratification of her Welsh subjects, on the occasion of her visit to Merionethshire a few years before her death. The fact that the Prince is learning Welsh will undoubtedly create an interest in the language, which deserves to be appreciated more than it usually is by those who are ignorant of its beauties and literary treasures." There are at present over thirty places of worship in London where the services throughout are conducted in Welsh. The London County Council's evening classes in Welsh have been largely attended, and it is now proposed to establish a Celtic Chair at the University of London.

POTATOES IN LONDON

Prices Have Increased 50 Per Cent. In Ten Days

The English potato market is threatened with a famine. Prices increased 50 per cent in ten days, and Covent Garden merchants consider a further increase as highly probable. The ordinary potato, which, at this time last year was selling at the rate of $1.64 for 51 pounds, is now bringing almost double the price for the same quantity. The threatened famine will only be avoided if there is a good supply of new potatoes, which usually reach England from the Canaries at this time of the year.

UNION OF SERVANTS

Demands of Domestics in Denmark, Norway, and Sweden

The servants in Denmark, Norway, and Sweden have started a big organization, with headquarters at Copenhagen, Christiania, and Stockholm. The demands they have formulated are:—

1. The suppression of all night work; servants to knock off at 9 o'clock in the evening, and to rest until 7 o'clock next morning.

2. Extra pay for servants should they be requested to work after 9 o'clock, as, for instance, when company is being entertained.

3. A night out from 5 o'clock every week; a Sunday off from 10 o'clock in the morning every fortnight, and a fortnight's summer holiday, the regular wages and additional board wages to be paid.

4. Increase of wages when the work of the house is satisfactorily performed.

5. The servant's room to be light and warm, and to be so situated as to catch the sun.

CANNIBAL CITIES

Fashionable Nowadays to Gather in All the Little Suburbs

Birmingham is patting itself on the back and announcing with pride that it is now the second city in the kingdom, or perhaps one should say the third, if London be counted.

Birmingham has just absorbed four neighboring towns, Aston Manor, Yardley, Kings Norton, and Erdington. This means an addition of 250,000 inhabitants, which brings Birmingham's total population to 850,000, or very nearly that of Glasgow. If she could only have swallowed Handsworth, as she greatly desired to do, the Midland metropolis would have been well on the way to the million mark.

It is the fashion nowadays for big towns to gather in all the little ones around them. Some few years ago Torquay doubled her area at one swoop by collecting St. Mary Church, Babbacombe, and Cockington, and increased her population from 25,000 to 35,000.

Dover has done the same sort of thing by including several neighboring villages, and has increased the area of the borough boundaries by fully 10,000 acres.

The greatest amalgamation which England has ever seen was accomplished last year, when the six big Pottery towns became one under the official name of the County Borough of Stoke-on-Trent.

These towns were Burslem, Hanley, Longton, Stoke, Fenton, and Tunstall, and between them they have a population of very nearly a quarter of a million. No doubt the three other townships of Lyme, Stone, and Alsager will eventually join forces, and so make Stoke one of the half-dozen greatest cities in the kingdom.

CONSOLIDATE THE EMPIRE

Statement on the Imperial Conference by Sir Wilfrid Laurier

Sir Wilfrid Laurier has made the following statement regarding the Imperial Conference: "Canada recognizes in its fullest sense the great importance of the Imperial Conference. This Dominion is neither indifferent nor lacking in appreciation of its value. The Conference is an advisory body with possibilities. It has already done excellent work, and I believe it is destined to do even better work in the future. Much of its strength is found in the element of personal contact in the meeting of the representatives of the component parts of the Empire. It may be that in the matter of co-operation we may have gone as far as is advisable at the present time. Reading British history demonstrates that all British communities are slow to move. This is the trend of the British mind; it is the record of British institutions. There is steady progress; but it is step by step as new needs make changes imperative. And progress will go on, step by step, in the line of making for the betterment of mankind and the universal peace of the world, for the consolidation of the British Empire is and will be a powerful factor for the good of the whole human race."

TROUT GETTING SCARCE

A Resident Says Fish are Also Smaller Than Formerly

That New Brunswick's good reputation as a province abounding in fish is in danger, especially in the matter of trout fishing, is the claim made by Harold C. Secord, Penobsquis, N.B., in a letter to the St. John Telegraph. I declare and believe, says Mr. Secord, as one who lives alongside one of the best fishing streams in the country, the Kennebeccasis and its tributaries, especially the South Branch, and enjoying the right to fish in them at any time during the open season, that I am right when I say that the trout are getting scarce and small, being unmercifully slaughtered by unsatisfied sportsmen during the hot summer months—June, July and August. It seems to me that the Government fails to pay any attention to the grievances of the farmers who complain of so much damage done to their hay crop along the banks every year. But they will only have to wait till we have a few years of six months' fishing, when it won't be worth the trouble to fish for trout. May be only month in which a sportsman can be satisfied with the number and size of fish he gets, although he might be given a chance during the hunting season.

FISHING ON THE TAY

The Duke and Duchess of Bedford and the Marquis of Travistock, who have gone to Meikleour House, Perthshire, are to spend three weeks there salmon fishing on the Meikleour and Stobhall reaches of the Tay. Lord Lamington has been staying with Lord and Lady Douglass at Springhill, near Coldstream, for a few days' salmon fishing on the Tweed. Sir William Hooper is staying at Fort Augustus for salmon fishing on Loch Ness.

SHE WAS SURPRISED

Mrs. E. Sadlik, of Winnipeg, Man., tells an interesting story of relief from almost intolerable sufferings:

"I can hardly tell you how great my sufferings have been. Chronic liver complaint accompanied by biliousness were a daily source of trial to me. Every day I experienced the distressing effects of these ailments. I longed for some medicine that should permanently drive them away.

Hearing of Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills, I thought they were worthy of a trial. My surprise was indeed great. From the very first I experienced relief. Continuing with them I found my troubles were slowly but surely leaving me, and before long I once more knew what it was to be free from the harassing effects of the ailments that had long sickened and weakened me. So great is my faith in Dr. Morse's Indian Pills that I shall never on any account be without them."

WAR AEROPLANES BY THE HUNDRED

Russia Has Decided to Buy a Big Fleet—Activities of Other Nations

An English representative of the Aeroplane Purchasing Committee of the Russian Government, which has decided to spend $4,500,000 without delay upon military airmanship, visited the Aero Exhibition at Olympia, accompanied by two of the Russian Government airmen. Russia has decided to buy a fleet of 300 war aeroplanes, all the machines to be delivered before the end of the summer; and the Russian agent spent a whole day discussing British aeroplanes with the English makers. Already the Russian Government has bought eight British-built biplanes, five Farman biplanes, and forty Bleriot monoplanes. The dominant note of the exhibition is the remarkable activity of Governments in the formation of fleets of war aeroplanes. Experts from the British War Office have been examining machines closely since the show opened; French Government experts will be coming during the week to inspect the English-built machines. "We have now," explained M. Norbert Chereau, manager for M. Bleriot, "no fewer than eighty war aeroplanes to supply to the order of the French military authorities. Thirty of these machines, both single and double-seated monoplanes, have already been supplied to the Government and are in use. French officers have begun to learn to fly so rapidly that there are now not far short of 100 military airmen in France. So great is the demand now for war aeroplanes for various countries that M. Bleriot cannot deliver any more two-seated military machines for reconnoitring work for the next five months." An extensive order for Breguet biplanes, as seen at the show, has been given by the French Government. These machines, constructed almost entirely of steel, take to pieces in half an hour for expeditious military transport. A number of Farman military-type biplanes—in which the two occupants of the machine sit in a neat enclosed body like that of a racing motor-car—have also been bought by the French, Italian and Spanish Governments.

With the recent orders for Bleriot and Farman aeroplanes, added to the number of machines of other makes already bought by the French Government, the French War Office will shortly possess an air fleet of at least 150 war aeroplanes. The fast-flying war aeroplanes, as designed by M. Bleriot, is the striking feature of the exhibition. Sitting side by side, protected from the wind by a dome-shaped metal screen, and with maps and compass fixed in frames before them, the driver of the machine and the observer will rush through the air at a speed of sixty miles an hour, inspecting a wide panorama of country over the sustaining wings, which have been set farther back to facilitate reconnoitring. The British War Office now owns ten aeroplanes, having purchased a day or so ago the Howard-Wright biplane owned by Captain E. M. Maitland. It is understood that British Government orders will be placed for several machines at the exhibition. A notable fact concerning the activity in France was cited by an international expert at the exhibition. If France were involved in war to-morrow she could, by calling up her civilian airmen as well as her military pilots, put a fleet of more than 300 aeroplanes into the field.

STOPS SKIDDING

Apparatus to be Tested on a Roof Covered with Soft Soap

Skidding—the nightmare of all motorists—is soon to become a thing of the past. The gyroscope affords a cure. When a gyroscope is fitted to a motor-car—either in front or on the back wheels—it is absolutely impossible for the car to swerve even an inch from the path along which it is being steered. The gyroscope, making 3,000 revolutions to the minute, corrects any tendency to skid in its initial stage. Experiments have already been made on steep hills with a right-angle turn at the bottom. In every case the corners were negotiated with the greatest ease. The Gyroscopic Non-Skid Company, Limited, are giving a demonstration of the gyroscope's possibilities at their works in Grosvenor Road. A 40-h.p. car fitted with a gyroscope will be driven at a high speed on the roof of a large building covered with soft soap and Thames mud. The brakes will be jammed on suddenly as the slippery surface is reached. In the ordinary course of events the car would swing over the edge of the roof.

BABY ILL; CALL FIREMEN

Chicago Mother, Terrorized, Brings Hook and Ladder to Relief

When baby becomes ill, send in a fire alarm.

This was effectively tried in Chicago by Mrs. Mary Rothschild, when her baby had a severe coughing spell. She rushed into the street shouting fire and neighbors sent in fire alarms. Two companies responded. When a battalion chief asked where the blaze was, the reply of the mother was, "Never mind the fire! Baby's choking. Don't stand there doing nothing. Help me!"

The firemen called a doctor and the baby was soon himself again.

The postman brings him thirty plays a week on an average, and each one is carefully considered. And he has only once refused a play that afterwards made a great success.

ENGLAND WANTS THEM

Preaching the Gospel of GIN PILLS in the Old Country

Canada's wheat fields are not the only things that are making our country talked about. A well known citizen of North Toronto has set the people of England talking about GIN PILLS, the great Canadian Kidney Cure. The old country has nothing like GIN PILLS and the missionary work done by Mr. and Mrs. Simpson is bearing fruit in the great demand which sufferers from Kidney Trouble are making for our own GIN PILLS.

DAVISVILLE, NORTH TORONTO.

"I have great pleasure in writing and recommending GIN PILLS. We have used them for the last two years and they have never failed us. We took GIN PILLS to the old country some time ago and gave some to relatives and friends and they have asked us to find out where they can buy GIN PILLS over there. Everyone was pleased with the pills and said that only two pills were needed to give relief. Will you let me know if you have any agents in England? I had a few pills left on my way back here and we gave them to a woman on board ship and she was much pleased with th . If I can be of any help to those suffering from Kidney Trouble in spreading this wonderful remedy—GIN PILLS—I am only too willing to offer my services."

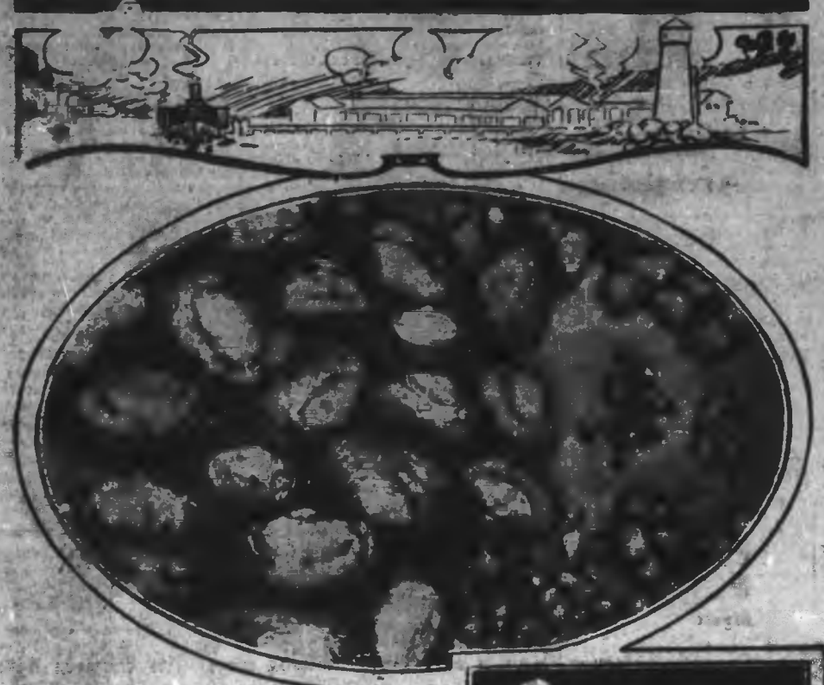
ADVERTISE IN THE EXAMINER

SAVING LITTLE RHODY'S PET CLAMS

HEAVY Inroads on the Smallest State's Favorite Crop Have Stirred Her Officials to Seek Legislation That Will Prevent Extinction of the Bivalve



Collection of Clams Taken from an Area Six Inches by Six Inches in the Clam Catcher at Rumstick Point

All These Clams Entered the Clam Catcher in Free Swimming Condition Since the Summer of One Year and Dug Almost Twelve Later

THE clam industry, one of the most important in the State of Rhode Island, is threatened with extinction unless speedy remedial action is taken by the General Assembly.

And though the clam is far less important in a financial sense than cotton, wool or even jewelry, there is more discussion of it, chiefly in the summer season, throughout New England than of any other product the State can boast.

The Rhode Island clam as a gastronomic gem claims first place in "little Rhody's" diadem, and occupies relatively the same position in Providence as does the sacred codfish on Beacon Hill. Indeed, when the New York architects were considering the fittest symbol to surmount the dome of the three million dollar marble palace on Smith Hill, Providence, where the State's solons hold forth, it was gravely suggested that a heroic clam should occupy the place now proudly held by the figure of the "Independent Man."

Clam propagation, clam digging, clam serving, following the monster clambakes which have made the State famous throughout the East, are a most important part of Rhode Island's industrial and social life. Hamlets, villages and towns have sprung into life on either side of Narragansett Bay, have waxed and waned, declined and fallen, according as the clam has been plentiful or scarce.

When there has been an excellent "set"—for the Rhode Island variety hatches and sets far more prolifically than does the Rhode Island turkey—the shore resorts, which give employment to thousands every year for several months, flourish mightily and entertain hundreds of thousands. Pilgrims from all over Southern New England visit the various clam shrines of Rhode Island and millions of dollars are spent, excursions coming from far and near to pay tribute to the "Rhode Island clambake."

It has been stated that more than fifteen hundred men depend for their maintenance upon the clam, though outside of the commission, which knows all about the subject, few people appreciate the importance of this mollusk (Myra arenia), which has great possibilities, according to the scientists. It has been stated that Narragansett Bay has more than two hundred and fifty miles of protected shore line, including peninsulas, estuaries and islands, and is most advantageously located in the very heart of the clam's geographical range. Every time the tide ebbs it uncovers more than ten thousand acres of available clam ground, or beds, and gourmands and epicures have asserted without fear of contradiction that nowhere else in the wide world is the clam more tender or more palatable.

Life History.

Hence the scientific interest in the subject and the extended study that has been made of the clam's life history and habits and economic importance. Under the life history these studies have comprised the spawning season, the free swimming period, the attachment period, the commencement of burrowing and growth and age at sexual maturity.

The questions of economic importance include:—Physical causes of the depletion of the clam flats, natural enemies of the clam, methods of increasing the yearly yield, transplanting, rate of growth and results of experiments in transplanting.

These studies have convinced the scientists that while the shores do not now yield so abundantly as in former years the production can be increased not only to its former amount but far beyond it under proper restrictions and with adequate encouragement from the State.

It has been found feasible, practical and profitable to transplant clams, and the scientists have proved that a good crop can be reared in two years under right conditions, small crops being reared at the Wickford experiment station under the watchful eyes of the investigators who shared the popular taste for the clam and regretted its vanishing tendency.

For some seasons the famous bakes served in Providence have savored more of Indian corn, sweet potatoes, quahaug chowderhead clam fritters [illegible] shellfish clams, and clambakes have been like "Hamlet" with the ghost eliminated, hardly even haunting reminiscences of the days that were. And conditions have gone from bad to worse until the very existence of the clam is threatened, notwithstanding the expenditure of many thousands of dollars by the State for the investigation and propagation of the luscious bivalve over which scientists in Providence and at Woods Hole, Mass., have pondered for more than a decade.

Extinction Threatened.

Now comes the Rhode Island Inland Fisheries Commission, composed largely of men who have devoted years to the study of the life habits of the clam and other shellfish with which the waters abound, and represents to the General Assembly that something must be done, and at once, or the clam will disappear.

Patrons of the shore resorts have been noticing for several seasons that the clams have been growing smaller and smaller and that those which appeared to be larger than usual were not quite so appetizing, having been brought from some distance, as far as Maine in some instances. This was because the local yield was so poor that excursionists who have come to these plantations from the vicinity of Massachusetts Bay for Rhode Island clambakes have often had to take clams raised close to their own abiding places or go without them.

It appears from the commission's report that the shores of Narragansett Bay, from Field's Point to the Bonnet, have been examined for the extent of the yearly "clam set," which, as a recent rule, has been very poor, and that in only one case has the "set" been found to be abundant, though less than ten years ago there were scores of places in which the clam was plentiful, large and luscious. In only one place was a large "set" found last fall, that being on an area of about an acre in the vicinity of Field's Point, five miles south of Providence proper.

Here the small clams, those measuring half an inch long, averaged about three hundred to the square foot. The Commissioners refer to the soft shell variety, from which the clambake takes its name and derives its fame. The larger, hard shell clam is generally called quahaug, and is the principal ingredient in the clam chowders, a constituent part of the clambake.

Waxing eloquent on the subject the Commissioners represent that "the State of Rhode Island has a unique interest in the soft shell clam, not only on account of the famous institution the clambake, but because through your commission it was the pioneer in the discovery of the possibilities and the methods of clam culture. The results of the work which your commission commenced here more than ten years ago, and continued under Chapter 174 of the General Laws, have been confirmed and extended and exploited in other States, notably in Massachusetts.

"For these reasons," says the report, "and because the clam industry, at present at low ebb, has splendid possibilities, we recommend the question of regulation of the clam fishery to your serious consideration. Under the prevailing conditions the clam product of the State is an insignificant fraction of what it might be, and does not begin to supply the clams for home consumption. Occasionally, after an exceptionally good set of clams, the condition is temporarily improved, but even so the clams are dug or destroyed by digging before they are half grown."

The Commissioners have given long and serious thought to the problems involved, and have even thought of the drastic expedient of "closing a portion of the shore for a term of two or more years, and then opening it to the public, under suitable restrictions," as the most feasible means of reinstating the clam industry, but they regard it as impracticable.

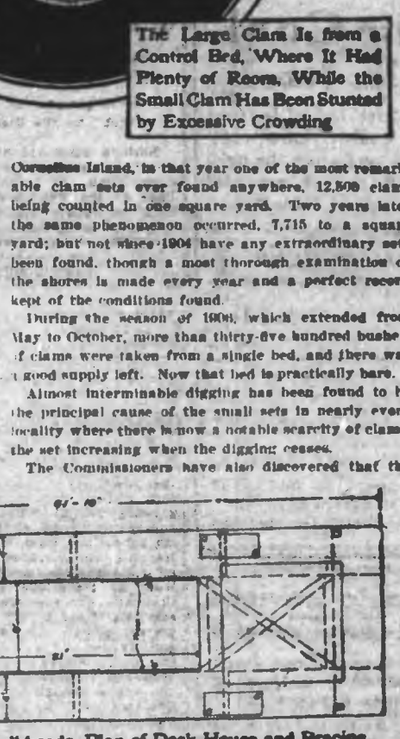
In conclusion they say:—"The only feasible solution of the problem yet proposed is, we believe, the leasing to individuals of the shore rights for the cultivation of the clam. According to the proposed law before the Legislature of Massachusetts the cities or towns are given discretion in the matter of leasing. In this way consideration of local interests is guaranteed.

"The objection to the leasing of a part of the clam grounds to individuals on the theory of the rights of the free fisheries loses force and justification when the particular fishery is depleted almost to the vanishing point and no one is getting the benefit of what might be a considerable industry."

The General Assembly has been asked to enact a law in accordance with the commission's recommendations, and it may also so amend the existing laws bearing on the shellfish industry in general that the Commissioners may again avail themselves of the benefit of the almost invaluable services of Professor Albert D. Mead, of Brown University, who resigned from the commission last year following a disagreement with political interests which favored the fishermen against what he conceived to be the best interests of the State.

Professor Mead succeeded Professor H. C. Bumpus, now of New York, and won the Fourth International Fishery Congress gold prize in 1908 for the best original and practical method of lobster culture. He had scientifically directed all the efforts of the commission, and is believed to be the one man who can save the State from the threatened calamity. He located the station of the commission at Wickford, its present site, twelve years ago, and there he discovered, on Cornelius Island, in that year one of the most remarkable clam sets ever found anywhere, 12,800 clams being counted in one square yard. Two years later the same phenomenon occurred, 7,715 to a square yard; but not since 1904 have any extraordinary sets been found, though a most thorough examination of the shores is made every year and a perfect record kept of the conditions found.

Six Months' Growth of Two Clams, Upper at One Year, Lower at Two Years



The Large Clam Is from a Control Bed, Where It Had Plenty of Room, While the Small Clam Has Been Stunted by Excessive Crowding

During the season of 1908, which extended from May to October, more than thirty-five hundred bushels of clams were taken from a single bed, and there was a good supply left. Now that bed is practically bare.

Almost interminable digging has been found to be the principal cause of the small sets in nearly every locality where there is now a notable scarcity of clams, the set increasing when the digging ceases.

The Commissioners have also discovered that the clams do not grow so fast in the overcrowded over-fished beds, though the lack of food is not the cause in places were the tide-runs swiftly, inordinate with burrowing and feeding being considered the principal cause. It has been discovered that a certain depth of soil is absolutely necessary to the proper growth of the clam, while in the overcrowded beds the clams are prevented from reaching the necessary depth or are forced entirely out of the soil.

Enemies of the Clam.

Experiments to ascertain the rate of growth of clams after transplanting have been made over a series of years. Such experiments showed that the smaller clams developed inside of two years at the rate of eighty per cent a year; clams a year older gained in length, under the same conditions, more than eighteen per cent, and the very old clams about one and eight-tenths per cent a year. For years the commission has been distributing at favorable points in the bay and its estuaries approximately 1,200,000 clam sets every season. This was less than thirty bushels, but the yield has been many thousands of bushels annually.

The spawning season extends from the latter part of May into the early part of July. Artificial fertilization in May has developed approximately twenty per cent of the clams in a perfectly normal manner. Observations extending over nearly a decade show that clams setting at any time other than the early summer have little economic importance.

Among the enemies the new born clam has to fight are the tides, which sweep the larvae into rocky places or out to sea; many varieties of fish, mollusks, crustaceas, &c., particularly the paddler and rock crabs, which dig up and eat clams of a considerable size. Four rock crabs were seen to dig up and gorge upon twenty-one fair sized clams in two weeks. The sea snail even burrows after the clams and bores neat holes through them, one snail disposing of half a clam a day in this manner for two weeks. The oyster drill (Urosalpinx) is also a voracious enemy of the clam.

But the greatest of all the natural enemies is man. Still, man is also the preserver, and if nature is allowed to take its course, reasonable restriction being placed upon the free fishers, there is no good reason, say the scientists, why the clam cannot, figuratively speaking, laugh at the other enemies in its natural element. He can do this readily because of his great productivity.

"Were the chances against reaching maturity millions to one," says Professor Mead, "and they probably are, the eggs are laid in sufficient abundance to offset them."

The decrease in recent years has been due almost wholly to what the professor calls "the promiscuous, unlimited and unreasonable" digging by man. There is no evidence that the physical conditions or natural enemies have recently become more destructive, nor can more than a small part of the responsibility be laid at the doors of manufacturers who allow detrimental waste products to pour into the bay. The decrease is quite as well marked where the water is good and where the clams, if left to themselves, thrive well.

"We are convinced," he adds, "that the clam in Narragansett Bay can at the present time, as in the past, hold its own against natural enemies and adverse physical conditions, and can regain and maintain its former abundance; and, moreover, that excessive digging is the immediate cause of the decrease of the product."

The professor spent years in developing methods of clam culture, keeping in mind two possibilities—reinstatement on the shores for public digging and cultivating them on grounds leased to private parties. He is convinced that increase in the production of spawn and in the production of the set, protection of the swimming fry, protection of spat, transplanting and caring for seed clams are most important factors in the successful propagation of the clam, and the present Legislature is expected to follow the suggestions of the scientists and protect the clam as they have done with the oyster and the lobster for many years.

As illustrating the vanishing tendency of the clam the following table, compiled by the commission, is eloquent. Assemblymen say:—

"DIXIE" BY A SNAKE BAND.

EVERYBODY in the South knows Lamar Fontaine a noted surveyor and story teller. Everybody knows him personally. Smoking compartments in the Pullmans of Southern trains are impossible without him. Even the porters boast of having served him in one way or another.

Of the six or eight men in the smoker of a Texas Pacific train from New Orleans to Dallas recently only one man, an appreciative Northerner, had not had the honor of a personal acquaintance with that monumental spinner of yarns. The story that appealed to him most was told by a man with massive cheek bones, who had known Fontaine years ago in Mississippi.

"Did you-all ever hear of Fontaine's story of the pet snake that he uses send into the enemy's camp every night during the war to kill three or four Yanks? That was one of the best I ever heard him tell. 'Ah reckon, sah,' he uses say, 'that that ol' snake killed a thousand Yankees before the wah was ovah?' When Fontaine went West later on a surveying trip he took his pet with him and lost it in a dense forest. Years afterward, happening to be passing through the same forest, he was startled by a familiar rattle. 'What do you think, sah?' he would say. 'Raight theah before me stood that ol' snake of mine, with half a dozen others, with their rattles sp playin' "Dixie."'"

NATIONAL GALLERY HAS GREAT YEAR

Momentous Period for British Art—Some Magnificent Bequests—Number of Visitors Increased

Sir Charles Holroyd, the director, reviews in his annual report one of the most interesting years in the history of the National Gallery and the National Gallery of British Art.

The year 1910 was one of momentous happenings to the national collections of pictures. There was the bequest of 194 pictures under the will of Mr. George Salting, and a number of gifts. The latter included a Ford Madox Brown and two Frederick Walkers, two specimens of Jacob Maris, two of Josef Israels, and six Gainsboroughs.

Four purchases were made at a cost of $36,000, and they included Crome's "The Poringland Oak" and Hogarth's portrait of Dr. Headley, the Bishop of Winchester.

The 240 additions to the galleries during last year are divided as follows:—

Italian school	39
Dutch school	71
Flemish school	16
Spanish school	2
German school	1
French school	24
British school	86

A daily average of 2,647 persons visited the National Gallery on the 267 free days during 1910, and the 266 free days at the Millbank Gallery showed an average of 1,340 visitors.

The Sunday visitors were: Trafalgar Square, 69,013; Millbank, 65,-960. The fees for students' days at both galleries showed a marked increase on the year 1909.

GAMBLING INCREASES

In Switzerland—Petitions Against the Vice are Being Largely Signed

Gambling has increased to a serious extent during the last few years in the principal Swiss towns and summer resorts, where kursaals and casinos have sprung up in numbers, each having its "Cercle des Etrangers" and "Petits Chevaux" to attract the visitor. But experience has proved to the Swiss that the visitor does not come to Switzerland to gamble, and the greatest sufferers of the gambling mania are the Swiss themselves.

A crowded meeting against gambling has been held at Geneva, and many persons, pastors and professors included, have sent a petition to the federal authorities, asking for the enforcement of Article 35 of the Constitution, which prohibits gambling in every form.

M. G. Fatio pointed out that one kursaal made a profit of $600,000 a year from the proceeds of gambling.

Even hotel proprietors have joined the petition, stating that a very small percentage of their customers go to the kursaals and gamble there.

GOLF CADDIES

Mr. Churchill Favors Obtaining Them Through Labor Exchanges

Does Mr. Lloyd George, the most enthusiastic golfer in the Government, employ his caddies through the Labor Exchanges? Mr. Churchill thinks he and all other golfers should do so. In the House of Commons Mr. Raymond Greene asked the Prime Minister whether he would consider the possibility of introducing legislation with a view to mitigating the growing evil by which a very large number of youths, at the age of leaving school and when they ought to be learning useful trades, are employed as golf caddies, thereby learning to lead a precarious existence. Mr. Churchill, who answered the question, said this raised a very useful and important point. "The occupation of a golf caddie is peculiarly unsuitable for young persons," he added, "but is peculiarly suitable for adults who are not strong enough for active productive labor, or who are partially incapacitated."

...ING AMONG BOYS

German Lads Who Were Not Successful in Promotion

Considerable alarm is felt in Germany at the rapid increase of suicides during the gentle months of spring, which seem to have the peculiar effect of driving the sentimental German to thoughts of self destruction. A fresh and extraordinary example is reported from Leipsic, where in a single high school three lads one after another took their own lives. In all three cases the chief cause quoted is [illegible] despair at want of success in securing promotion to a higher class; and though in two of the cases the despair is intelligible since failure of promotion meant loss of the privilege of escaping conscription with only one year's service, no explanation is offered for the third case beyond the statement that the victim had "lost his mental equilibrium." The papers naturally ask, "If the school system is to blame?" But they have asked this for a long time now and still await the answer.

MISDIRECTED CHARITY

Woman Who Spent the Money on a Chicken Farm

A remarkable instance of misused charity was given by Colonel Wilford Lloyd, the Duke of Westminster's secretary, at a meeting of the Chester Charity Organisation Society. "I recently asked a parish clergyman to investigate the case of a woman who had received £10 annually for many years from the late Duke and the present Duke," he stated. "The clergyman replied that she was the owner of a prosperous chicken farm, and when he called she was just starting for a carriage drive."

DYSPEPSIA Can Be Cured.

This disease is the all prevailing malady of civilized life, and one which often[illegible] baffles all ordinary treatment. It gives rise to a great variety of distressing symptoms, such as distress after eating, rising and souring of food, wind in the stomach, heartburn, etc.

Nearly everything that enters a weak dyspeptic stomach acts as an irritant; hence the great difficulty of effecting a cure.

The long train of distressing symptoms, which render life a burden to the victim of dyspepsia, may be promptly cured by the use of Burdock Blood Bitters.

B.B.B. regulates the stomach, liver and bowels, stimulates secretion of the saliva and gastric juice to facilitate digestion, purifies the blood, and tones up the entire system.

Mrs. Herman Dickens, Benton, N.B., writes: "I have used Burdock Blood Bitters and find that few medicines can give such relief in dyspepsia and stomach troubles. I was troubled for a number of years with dyspepsia, and could get no relief until I tried Burdock Blood Bitters. I took three bottles and became cured, and I can now eat anything without it hurting me. I will highly recommend it to all who are troubled with stomach trouble."

The Great Mr. Ord

By Terris Amateur Detective

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Henry Ord lighted another cigar and waited impatiently for the reappearance of his chief clerk. Every three minutes he consulted his watch and compared it with the electric timepiece on the wall between the windows. He had an important engagement at 11 o'clock, and it was now 10:30. Smithers was getting more stupid every day.

He brought his feet down from the desk with a thump as the secretary returned with a worried expression on his long, pale face. Mr. Ord reached for his hat and held out his hand.

"Give me the securities, Smithers," he said.

"I can't find them, Mr. Ord," said the clerk diffidently. "I thought perhaps you might have them in here."

"Here!" snorted Mr. Ord impatiently. "If I had them in here why did I send you to the vaults after them?"

"I have looked everywhere, sir. They are not in the vaults nor any other place in the office. I will question"—

"No need to question anybody," cut in Mr. Ord, sinking back in his chair and tossing his hat into the ticker basket, "I gave you those securities day before yesterday, with instructions to lock them in my private box in the vaults. You returned the key to me then, and I have just handed it to you now. I haven't had occasion to go to the box since Thursday. Now, where are those securities?"

"I don't know, sir," returned Smithers respectfully.

"Give me the key to the box. Now come with me and show me where you placed them."

Drawers snapped open, papers rustled, and Mr. Ord's boot heels rapped out on the metal flooring as he went from shelf to shelf, from box to drawer and from drawer to cupboard.

Once more he opened his own private box and ran over the papers contained therein.

"Where the dickens are they?" he demanded savagely when his last efforts proved in vain.

"I really don't know, sir," replied Smithers. "As I said before, I thought it possible that you might have taken them out, and it slipped your mind that you had done so."

"Huh! Perhaps you took them out yourself and it slipped your mind, eh? Ever forget anything, Smithers?"

"Not very often, sir."

Smithers faithfully followed his employer back to the private office and folded his long thin arms behind his back preparatory to listening to the lecture that he knew Mr. Ord had in store. And this time—well, those L. D. bonds were worth $10,000 today, and it was known that tomorrow they might not be worth the paper they were written on because—but that has nothing to do with this story.

"Please call up Hughes & Carraway, and tell Mr. Hughes I shall be unable to keep that engagement with him. I will talk with him later on the phone. Now, Smithers, this is the third time this has happened—securities have disappeared in this same way during several days until the market interest in them has abated. It's an old game and won't work again. Now, who do you think is at the bottom of this?"

Smithers fidgeted nervously and looked out of the window at the blank wall of another building. "Really, Mr. Ord, I haven't formed an opinion," he said, rather mincingly.

"Haven't, eh? Well, I have," thundered his employer, fixing the chief clerk with a hard stare.

Smithers jumped nervously. "Indeed, sir!" he said.

"Yes, indeed, Mr. Smithers. I'm going to ferret this mystery out before 2 o'clock. See! This office is the worst managed affair in the city of New York, and you are the most inefficient chief clerk I ever employed. Got that?"

"Yes, sir."

"See that row of books on the shelf?" Mr. Ord pointed his ruler at a narrow shelf laden with cloth bound copies of Conan Doyle's books.

Smithers bowed respectfully.

"Detective stories, every one of 'em. I've read 'em all," said Mr. Ord. I shall solve the mystery of the disappearance of those securities by the same methods as those employed by that noted detective," went on Mr. Ord, forgetting in his excitement to compare his watch with the timepiece on the wall. His searching glance fell on an advertising blotter that lay on his desk. It had become mixed in his personal mail, and he had not tossed it in the waste paper basket until now. He threw it in and crossed his hands on his plump waistcoat.

"Do you wear plasters, Mr. Smithers?" he asked coolly.

The chief clerk stared at this personal question, fired so abruptly from the lips of the great Mr. Ord—great in the financial district.

"Sometimes," he said guardedly.

"Have you one on now?" snapped Mr. Ord.

"Yes, sir," blushed Smithers.

Mr. Ord smiled with satisfaction. "Mr. Smithers, sir, you have been with me for three years, and up to this time I have never detected you in a grave error. I have trusted you implicitly, and I have always found you faithful and honest. In fact, I have no fault to find save that the office has no system whatever, and I can never find anything when I want it. Got that?"

"Yes, sir," Smithers replied dazedly.

"Now, sir, you admit you are wearing a plaster. How do I know that those securities are not concealed within your plaster, huh?" Mr. Ord looked from his astonished clerk to the red bound volumes of Sherlock Holmes' adventures and patted his chest knowingly. "How do I know, sir?" he repeated.

"Really, I couldn't say, Mr. Ord," began Smithers, and then, as if the real meaning of his employer's insinuation had pierced some sensitive spot, at last he added forcibly, "But I wouldn't do such a thing, you know, Mr. Ord, begging your pardon."

"You wouldn't, eh? How do you know you wouldn't?"

"I couldn't, sir," protested Smithers warmly. "You see the plaster. I'm wearing is a bunion plaster, and I couldn't get the securities"—

Mr. Ord raised a fat forefinger. "I didn't ask you for details regarding your personal ailments, Mr. Smithers," he said icily. There was silence for a few moments while his little eyes roamed from his three foot shelf of wisdom to Smithers' now agitated countenance. He pulled the ticker tape toward him and studied the figures as they slipped through his fingers. He had made rather a fool of himself and the L. D. bonds were so far from discovery as ever. Once more he turned to his clerk.

"Did you mention to anybody that those bonds were in the vault?"

"Not a soul knew of their presence there except yourself and me, sir."

"Did you check over all the other securities in my box?"

"Yes, sir, and every other security in the vault," returned Smithers earnestly. "Begging your pardon, Mr. Ord, you might recollect that in every other instance of loss of papers, they were afterward found to have been mislaid either by Mr. Carnes or yourself."

"Enough!" said Ord sternly. "I have no such recollection, young man! Now," pointing an accusing finger in the face of his uncomfortable clerk, he continued with measured accents, "those bonds bear a date stamp impressed with purple ink. How did purple ink, composed largely of gentian violet, come on your right thumb and face, Mr. Smithers?" Mr. Ord shot a glance at his bookshelf and then his eyes came back to the face of his clerk.

For the first time Smithers' face wrinkled into a faint smile. "I was assisting Miss Fenn to adjust a new ribbon in her type machine," he said primly. "Before I had time to remove these stains you called me."

"Is it one of the duties of my chief clerk to assist the stenographers with such duties?" thundered Mr. Ord fiercely. "What do I hire office boys for, eh?"

In Mr. Smithers' opinion office boys were hired to loaf around the corridors and discuss baseball topics. He merely cracked another deprecating smile and did not answer the question.

"Huh! I don't approve of courting in the office, Mr. Smithers," remarked Mr. Ord, his critical eye still on his employee's pink face. He pressed a button beside his desk, and the door opened promptly, admitting a tall, slender girl whose black hair was twisted in the latest fashion and whose bright brown eyes seemed to take in every detail of the situation in one swift penetrating glance. Her gaze swept her employer's desk and then came to attention at Mr. Ord's curt accents.

"Sit down, Miss Fenn."

She did so, flapping open a notebook and poising her pencil.

"I don't wish to dictate. Have you seen or heard anything of the L. D. bonds since they were put in the vaults day before yesterday?"

Miss Fenn nodded. "Why, yes, Mr. Ord. Don't you remember you sent me to the vault for them this morning after you talked with Mr. Hughes over the telephone? You were reading when I came back, and you used the bonds as a bookmark as you closed the book to resume dictating. Why, there they are!" She picked up a red covered book from under his nose and removed several beautifully engraved certificates from between the pages of "The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes." There was a sickly smile of enlightenment on Mr. Ord's face.

"Thank you, Miss Fenn; you may go now," he said, with an effort. When the door had closed behind her trim figure Mr. Ord recovered his self possession. He picked his hat out of the basket, placed it on his head, compared his watch with the clock, nodded approval at the hour of 12 and drew the telephone receiver across the desk.

"By the way, Smithers," he said genially without turning his head, "I suppose if you're going to get married you'll need a little more money, eh?"

"I really couldn't say that I'd thought about it, Mr. Ord," said the clerk meekly.

"Well, just tell the cashier to add another hundred to your salary. I'll O. K. it. Don't mention it! Hey! Central! Give me 3869 Livingston. Hello! Hughes & Carraway? Ah, Hughes; about that L. D. Now"—

Smithers closed the door softly behind him and passed in the tiny outer office where Bessie Fenn sat before her machine stifling dreamily at a blank sheet of paper on the roller. The young man leaned over until his breath fanned her cheek. "Bessie," he whispered, "he's missed me another hundred. I'm sure I can take care of your mother as well as you. Will you marry me soon?"

Bessie's nimble fingers rapped out three letters and an exclamation point, and then on the fair blank sheet there appeared a word written in purple letters:

"Yes!"

Cards on Sunday.

Pepys, the diarist, was greatly scandalized when he first saw cards played on a Sunday. "I did find the queen, the Duchess of York and another at cards, with the room full of ladies and great men, which I was amazed to see on a Sunday, having not believed, but contrarily flatly denied the same a little while since."

Small Things.

We are too fond of our own will. We want to be doing what we fancy mighty things, but the great point is to do small things when called to them in a right s, hit.

The Test.

Friend (to confirmed toper)—I don't see how you can drink so much. It's shocking. Toper—It shocks me too. It surprises me. I suppose it's just luck.

A Bit of Truth.

The Story of a Famous Hymn.

The famous hymn beginning "God moves in a mysterious way," known as "Cowper's Hymn," had its origin as follows: Cowper was all his life the victim of melancholia and more than once attempted suicide. One day, bent upon destroying himself, he got into a cab and ordered the driver to take him to a certain point on the river where he intended to drown himself. The cabman, noticing his strange appearance and feeling that all might not be right with him, drove him about the city and finally stopped in front of the poet's door. Stepping out and recognizing the old familiar surroundings and shocked at the thought of his narrow escape, Cowper exclaimed, "God moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform," and, rushing in, immediately composed the immortal hymn.

The Man With a Cold.

The sympathy given to the man with a hard cold is purely perfunctory. We know, or at least we think we know, that he will not die. We know that he is thoroughly wretched, yet we are equally certain that in three days or so he will be coming upstairs two at a time. This does not comfort him, though he may know it himself. He therefore feels himself an outcast a pariah. He is cut off from the ordinary human relations. If he so much as kisses his wife or child he is a blackguard, mentally self convicted of it. Nobody loves him, and he may go out into the kitchen and drink cough syrup.—Boston Transcript.

Keeping the Asters Clean.

Some years ago, when playing in Leeds, I started a swimming competition among the members of my company and to encourage them offered as a prize a silver loving cup (won by the way, by the late Edward Lennek. The event apparently created some interest in the town, and a friend heard two men engage in a discussion as follows:

First Man—I say, darst to know this 'ere Terry's given a cup to-bar swimmer f' company?

Second Man—Aye. What's that for?

First Man—Oh, I suppose it's to keep them play actors clean.—Edward Terry in His Annual.

"REX" IS OPENED

Peterborough's Newest Amusement Place Throws Doors Open to Public in High-class Vaudeville Offering

LARGE ATTENDANCE

In spite of the Arctic tinge in the weather the opening of the Rex Theatre, George street, last night, was a conspicuous success, featured by a splendid bill of high-class vaudeville and a patronage that crowded the commodious theatre to the doors. A surprise was in store for the patrons, not only on account of the merit of the performance, but also because of the completeness of the fittings and appointments of Peterborough's newest amusement place. It was somewhat of a novelty to find a completely furnished theatre housed within the walls of a tent, but the audience soon lost sight of the fact that they were sheltered by nothing more substantial than canvas. The bill lived up to its advance notices in merit and the programme gave every sign of meeting with popular approval, if the frequent applause can be accepted as a criterion. The acts were bright, snappy and above all, clean—the latter a much-appreciated feature.

The bill was opened by the Stocktons, a decidedly clever team in a comedy singing act, that was warmly received. The masculine end of the partnership is cast as a German music teacher, giving him a chance for some funny comedy and he gets it over the foot-lights in fine style. The lady sings splendidly, her big, pure, soprano voice being admirably displayed in several solos that won for her an enthusiastic reception. The act is wound up with a duet introducing several song hits. Claude Austin, a novelty juggler, "does all kinds of things with all kinds of things." A clever little fellow who one would imagine at times had half a dozen pairs of hands; his act is a series of surprising feats and he handles rubber balls, top-hats, Indian clubs and cigar boxes with equal skill and dexterity. At that he was working under a big handicap last night, his hands being benumbed by the cold, that he was in difficulty in several of his "stunts."

"Real Novelty" is what Gatchell and Madora call their singing act and a novelty it is indeed, bubbling over with cleverness all through. It opens with a singing dialogue "Money Matters," a musical "quarrell," that is splendidly sung and interpreted, and that serves as an auspicious introduction.

The man who has a high tenor of splendid range and tone wins favour in his solo "For Killarney and You," and the girl follows with a delightful little solo, "Cupid," in which she shows a sweet, pure voice. A duet medley, introducing a series of Witmark successes, including "San Francisco Bay," "I'd Love to be Loved by a Girl Like You," and "Goodbye My Love," brings a grant act to a most happy conclusion.

The bill is concluded with the Stocktons in their latest singing and comedy success 'Tribulations,' which serves to introduce some very amusing comedy as well as several delightful song numbers.

The same programme will be given at matinee and evening performances to-day and to-morrow, while on Monday there will be a complete change in the acts, two bills a week being given throughout the season. The Rex has evidently come to stay, judging by the opening.

THE DOCTOR'S QUESTION

Much Sickness Due to Bowel Disorders

A doctor's first question when consulted by a patient is, "are your bowels regular?" He knows that ninety-eight per cent. of illness is attended with inactive bowels and torpid liver, and that this condition must be removed gently and thoroughly before health can be restored.

Rexall Orderlies are a positive, pleasant and safe remedy for constipation and bowel disorders in general. We are so certain of their great curative value that we promise to return the purchaser's money in every case when they fail to produce entire satisfaction.

Rexall Orderlies are eaten like candy, they act quietly, and have a soothing, healing influence on the entire intestinal tract. They do not purge, gripe, cause nausea, flatulence, excessive looseness, diarrhoea or other annoying effect. They are especially good for children, weak persons or old folks. Two sizes, 25c. and 10c. Sold only at our store.—The Rexall Store, McDermid and Jury, druggists.

OTTAWA, MAY 5. — The Liberal caucus this morning accepted the proposal that Commons adjourn for two months or thereabouts to enable a delegation from both houses to attend the Coronation. No dates were fixed. There was opposition from a section of the party who thought it was up to the government to keep faith with the U.S. by fighting the reciprocity bill through without adjournment to allow the Premier and certain members of both parties to pair off and go to the Coronation.

TEACHER'S NERVES

FINANCE COMMITTEE MAKES GRANT OF $16,000 TO BOARD OF EDUCATION FOR IMPROVEMENTS TO SCHOOLS

Debentures Will be Issued for $16,000.00 to Bear Interest at 4 1-2 Per Cent. and the Sinking Fund to be Based on 4 Per Cent.—Will be Recommended to Council.

A meeting of the Finance committee was held last night, when a deputation of the Board of Education was present requesting that a sum of money be granted for the improvement of the city Public schools. Ald. Bradburn presided at the meeting, and the following members of the committee were present: Ald. Duncan, Ald. Metheral, Mayor Morrow, Ald. Fuller. The following members of the Board of Education present were: Col. Miller, the Public school Inspector, Mr. Mowatt, Dr. Morrison, Mr. Hall and Mr. V. Eastwood.

Mr. Hill, in a few words, outlined the improvements that were required, pointing out that the Board of Education only asked for an amount which was barely enough to cover the expense of the improvements, which is stated must positively be done at once. $16,000 was the amount asked for, by the Board of Education.

The result of the request was that Ald. Duncan moved, seconded by Alderman Metheral, that it be recommended, that the request of the Board of Education be granted, and that a by-law be prepared to issue debentures for $16,000 to bear 4 1-2 per cent. interest, and the sinking fund to be based on 4 p.c. The motion carried.

Mr. Hill pointed out to the committee that the third story of the King Edward school must be fitted out with seats and finished off, as the school was overcrowded. He stated that it would cost in the neighbourhood of $500, but it has to be done at once. The Central school is also in bad shape. The boiler is out of commission and will have to be replaced by a new one. He advised that the committee act at once, so that they could advertise for tenders, and have the work started by the first of July, and completed by September. The West Ward is also in a very bad shape, and extensive improvements will have to be made to it; the total repairs for the West Ward and Central school may be placed at about $11,000.

Dr. Morrison pointed out that the children in the Central school are labouring under extreme difficulties, as the rooms are very much out of date, and the lighting and ventilating very poor, and everything is in bad order.

Col. Miller was asked to say a few words regarding the repairs that he thought should be made. He stated that Mr. Hill had outlined the matter about as he would have it, and he did not think it necessary to go into it in detail. He stated that the walls of the Old Central school were built very strongly, but the other equipments were far from what the Government demanded, and it would be necessary for them, sooner or later, to comply with the Government's demands. He said that there was no doubt that the upper story of the King Edward must be finished at once, as the school was filled to its utmost capacity now, and that there was not seats for all who attend.

Mr. Eastwood voiced the sentiments of the former speakers, and stated that the repairs to the Central school were five years past due, and the changes must be made at once.

Mr. Mowatt, School Inspector, stated that at present there were 460 pupils attending the King Edward school and that these had to be crowded into eight rooms, and that under these conditions, it was impossible to seat them all, and also not fair to the children. He thought that if they had a finished room in the Central, that he would be able to relieve the Kindergarten pupils at the South Central. At present Kinder garten pupils are being turned away, and it is too far for them to go to any other school.

Acting on the information, the committee then took action as stated.

A communication was received from the Canadian Free Library for the Blind, Toronto, requesting that the Finance committee give them some aid. No action was taken, other than requesting Mr. Armstrong, the City Clerk, to get more information regarding the communication and report to the committee whether the institution was worthy of the requested aid.

The meeting then adjourned.

ELOPERS ARRESTED

Mrs. (Rev.) Kennedy, of Niagara Falls, Caught in Winnipeg and Will be Brought Back East to Answer Charge of Theft

MINISTER RESIGNS

Special to The Examiner.

NIAGARA FALLS, N.Y., MAY 5.—Word has been received here of the arrest in Winnipeg of Albert Seagraves and Mrs. A. P. Kennedy, wife of Rev. Mr. Kennedy, the Baptist minister here, who eloped the other day. Seagraves has been released, but Mrs. Kennedy will be brought back here to stand her trial for the theft of a suit case borrowed from a citizen here. She had four hundred dollars cash when arrested. There is great sympathy with Kennedy, who has since tendered his resignation, which the church board wouldn't accept. Seagraves was baptised by Kennedy only last Sunday night.

CENTRAL PARK.

Yesterday the Examiner hinted at the generally good character of the work of the Peterborough Board of Education. However, there are spots on the sun, and Jupiter himself sometimes nods; so with the School Board in connection with the beautifying of the Collegiate Institute and Armouries grounds. They are for locking the stable after the horse is stolen. At the Board meeting on Tuesday night a discussion was had as to the necessity of securing $3,000 for the beautification and improvement of the Collegiate Institute and Armouries' grounds; and a resolution was adopted, appointing a committee to interview Hon. Mr. Stratton, with a view of securing his influence in procuring government aid for the purposes mentioned. The Board in taking this course committed itself to the most palpable act of self-stultification and self-condemnation imaginable. Some time ago, soon after the completion of the structural work of the Armouries, and when the question of dealing with the grounds arose, Hon. Mr. Stratton, as representative, of Peterborough, procured from the government, the services of Mr. Fuller, chief government architect, and the sum of $3,000 or $4,000, in order to lay out and do the work of improvement of the Institute and Armouries grounds and the park generally. The School Board, by some inconceivably, inscrutable process of reasoning, or not reasoning, "turned down" the proposal, rejected the good offices of the most capable landscape expert in the country, and rejected the $3,000 or $4,000 of government money available — offered them and fairly thrust into their pockets.

Now, to the person of ordinary sensibility, it requires a good deal of assurance on the part of the Board to approach the parties whose free gift they so summarily scorned and request the advice and cost which at the time it was offered would have been more effectively employed than now. It comes to this, that Central Park will never come to its own so long as jurisdiction over it is divided between three or four authorities, with the natural result illustrated by the saying: "What's everybody's business, is nobody's business."

SEED-TIME AND HARVEST.

The school children of Toronto had at their credit on the 10th of March last in the Penny Savings Bank $164,394.86; of which amount it is said one boy deposited the tidy sum of $500. This splendidly illustrates the advantage of a convenient means of depositing small amounts. The Peterborough Board of Education, which is distinguished for generally good administrative work, falls short in some matters, whose importance and value are hardly a subject for controversy. A few years ago the Board considered and practically decided upon a system of Penny Savings Banks in connection with the schools, and abandoned it, without due consideration of the effect of their action. When we see the success of this system in other places, the action of the Board is more surprising. No better or more practical means could be devised to develop a national habit of thrift, one of the most important essentials to solidity and stability of national prosperity and commercial character. If the Penny Savings Bank system had been generally adopted years ago we should have had a generation ripe for practical acceptance of the Government annuities system, the most potent possible agency for promoting the well-being and happiness of the people, through a provision for old age and the avoidance of the pauperism and enforced charity that creates demands upon the thrifty.

The great value of the Penny Bank system is that it provides the impulse, and, in many cases, the means to use savings to the best advantage in the form of the Dominion Government Annuity System. This furnishes a plan of investment for their savings that may be of permanent advantage to them, a plan that, when old age arrives, and their earning days are over, will furnish an income that will enable them to live in comfort, happiness and dignity for the remainder of their lives. Such a plan is provided by the Canadian Government by its Annuities Act.

If, for example, the lad referred to, who we will assume for the purposes of illustration, is 16 years of age, will avail himself of this plan, and will deposit with the Government one-half of the amount which he has already saved, or $250, he will receive at 60 an Annuity of $254.85; and if he will add to his $250, $20 a year from 16 to 60, he will receive a further sum of $245.70 ,or a total income of $460.55 a year for life, payable in quarterly instalments. If he should die before 60, all his payments would be returned to his estate with 3 per cent. compound interest; though the same payments would secure for him a larger Annuity if he did not wish to provide for this return.

If the pennies of the children had not been deposited in the Savings Bank, there is little doubt that in the majority of cases they would have been spent on trifles; but while the custodian of their savings is the Savings Bank, the temptation to withdraw will constantly recur. If deposited with the Government for the purchase of an Annuity, they cannot be withdrawn, for if they could be, the object aimed at would probably in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred, never be attained. Consider the advice of Sir Walter Raleigh:

"Use thy youth so that thou mayest have comfort to remember it when it hath forsaken thee, and not sigh and grieve at the account thereof; use it as the springtime, which soon departeth and wherein thou oughtest to plant and sow all provision for a long and happy life."

This is good advice still, though given over three hundred years ago; and you can now plant and sow where the harvest will be sure and abundant, for the Annuities plan is positively the only plan open to you that will enable you to spend your principal and interest without your income becoming smaller, no matter how long you may live.

In youth, life seems limitless and boundless, but before middle age is reached the shortening process becomes daily more real. There is no time to sow "wild oats." Statistics show that at 45, 97 per cent. of men meet with reverses and lose their entire accumulations; that at 60, ninety-five per cent. are dependent upon their daily earnings or on their children for support; and that of those who fail at 45 only two per cent. ever recover their financial standing. The advantages, therefore, which the Annuities system presents as a means of making provision for old age should be apparent to everyone. In an interview a few days ago with an old lady of 90, who is an inmate of a poorhouse, she said she frequently cries for hours at a time at the thought of having to end her days in such a place. But no one who has purchased a Canadian Government Annuity need ever be afraid of ending his or her life there, as no process of law can deprive him or her of it. The wolf will never enter their door.

Anyone of the age of five or over who is domiciled in Canada may begin, and may receive the Annuity at 55 or any age thereafter; and any person now of the age of 55, or over, may purchase an Immediate Annuity. For a small addtion to the ordinary rate an Annuity may be continued for a certain number of years though death occurs before the number of years expires.

Literature explaining all about this most provident system may be obtained at the post office or on application to S. T. Bastedo, Superintendent of Annuities, Ottawa, to whom letters go free of postage. He will be glad to give all information. A better way, however, for Peterborough citizens is to attend the address of Dr. Samson, the Government Annuities lecturer, in the Collegiate Institute assembly hall, on Tuesday evening, May 9th. Everybody urgently invited. There is, of course, no admission fee.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Forty-five thousand United States farmers, with effects to the value of twenty millions of dollars, are preparing to enter the Canadian West this year. The United States borrowed hundreds of thousands of Canadian citizens, and they are now paying them back, with interest.

There is a good deal of irony in the circumstance of the Board of Education, which, a few years ago, dropped a proposal to encourage habits of thrift by the establishment of penny banks in connection with the schools, should give the use of a hall in the Institute, for an address to demonstrate the benefits of the gospel of thrift.

The Ottawa Conservative Opposition is sending out thousands of campaign pamphlets to be used in the Nova Scotia provincial election. Why were they first sent to Ottawa by freight in packing cases? So that the Opposition might send them out free of postage, thus abusing the franking privilege and cheating the country out of the postage. It is to be noted that the pamphlet carefully avoids any mention of reciprocity. It is too popular in Nova Scotia for the Opposition to oppose it in a provincial election.

The Ottawa Free Press says that "it is stated upon the authority of men said to possess the confidence of the Conservative party, that the confidence with which the Opposition faces the prospect of a continuous session upon the reciprocity struggle is based upon assurances by those in charge of the anti-reciprocity movement that those who 'fight the pact' will be 'looked after' and that while those who are in favour of the agreement will have to work without indemnity after July 25, the others will have their allowances paid to them from the central fund and need have no fear of entering the orphans' home or living upon charity as soon as they have exhausted their indemnity." This is something more than an insinuation, and calls for an answer.

MR. OLIVER'S POSITION.

(London Advertiser)

The position taken by Mr. Oliver is clear and straightforward. The Toronto Telegram published what purported to be a fac-simile of a bank-ledger page, containing a cabinet minister's account, showing an entry of $50,000 on Oct. 9, 1907, and another of $19,250 in September, 1908. No names were mentioned, but it was asserted that the information had been furnished by a man who had evidence that the entries were connected with corupt deals. The Toronto World followed up the story by alleging that Hon. Frank Oliver was the minister referred to. The World also printed in the same issue an article which conveyed the impression that Mr. Oliver's bank deposits were directly related to an administrative act by which the Canadian Northern Railway Company was permitted to select 650,000 acres in Saskatchewan in place of the Manitoba swamp lands, provided for in the original grant to the railway. In other words it was insinuated, if not charged, that the minister was paid the sums of $50,000 and $19,250 by the railway company for bringing about the exchange of lands.

The resolution moved by Sir Wilfrid Laurier calls for a full inquiry into the transaction mentioned by the World. Mr. Borden, in effect, demanded that the minister be compelled to exhibit his private affairs to the public and explain every item in his bank account. Mr. Oliver says he has nothing to conceal, and challenges any inquiry into any of his administrative acts; but he holds that a cabinet minister should not be obliged his private business every time an insinuation is hurled at him by "a thug and blank-mailer." In this case, his name has been connected with a particular transaction, and it will be probed to the bottom. If any other transaction is specified, or any of his public acts called in question, an investigation will be granted, but it would be beneath the dignity of Parliament if any cabinet minister or any private member were called upon to notice every vague insinuation unsupported by a definite charge. For example, the reputed wealth of a cabinet minister (who is now regarded as a hero) was a few years ago a favourite topic with Opposition journals and speakers. None of them ventured to put forward a single definite charge, although they flooded the country with innuendo. As well say that the minister should have been compelled to produce his bank-book to answer the veiled insinuations of his enemies, as that Mr. Oliver or any minister today should be compelled to disclose his private affairs because somebody in or out of Parliament says he has made money. In this instance Mr. Oliver has not waited for a charge to be laid in Parliament. The mere association of his name with a public act alleged to be corrupt has been sufficient to prompt him to ask for an inquiry.

As A Prominent Merchant Of Montreal Regards The Benefits Of Reciprocity

Following is a stenographic report of a speech to the Reform Club in Montreal on Monday last, by Mr. Henry Miles, President of the Leeming Miles Co., and an ex-President of the Montreal Board of Trade, and intimate friend of Mr. H. S. McDonald, city:

The proposals for reciprocity between Canada and the United States covering a certain line of natural products along with some few reductions in the tariff has surely excited an unnecessary amount of comment. I have seen no one argument advanced that has in any way altered the first conclusions I reached on the day I read the text of the argument. A great deal has been said—the press has been loaded with matter—voluminous opinions and many a dark forecast of the future—in and out of Parliament much has been placed before the people—I am open to conviction, ordinarily speaking, and I have not regarded this important question from a political point of view. I can only say a few words to you as a merchant, and claiming that I have a deep interest in the welfare of our city and wishing ever the progress and prosperity of our country.

When our statesmen went to washington to continue negotiations that had been begun at the instance of the United States at Ottawa I must say that I could not see wherein there was any possibility of arranging for reciprocity in trade with our neighbours. I had the feeling that the United States would require the admission of manufacturers or there would be no reciprocity—our neighbours have always been selfish with us, and have been accustomed to come out with the best of it. This time the result of the negotiations has been different, exceptionally so, and Canada has scored. I was pleased with the result and marvelled that our Canadian delegation had evolved such a satisfactory schedule and that the United States' representatives should have accepted it. It is the first time in our history that an important tariff change has been proposed in the interests of the farmer—the backbone of this country. The manufacturer and the capitalist—two important trading interests and our banks, actuated by their important debtors, have always prevailed. A sop may have been thrown to the farmer at times, but this was not the clamour that held the usual Government ear. In these proposals the manufacturers are practically untouched, the Government has kept faith with all the engagements of Canada towards capital invested in industry. They have made good the assurance of a stable tariff in respect to the investments of capital in the manufacturing industries of the country.

A chance is now given to the producers on the farms—natural produce of the country—requiring no protection but requiring a market always. This reciprocal arrangement opens the best and the nearest market to our producers throughout the Dominion.

Our manufacturers want protection—they require it—the policy has been a good one and has built up our cities. It must stand. The country is committed to it and our industries generally could not stand the competition of our great neighbours with their specialized manufacturing—built up on the lines largely Canada has followed, but, serving a population of ninety millions of people. It is simply the fear of Canadian manufacturers that the Government of Canada will not keep faith with all undertakings of the past—that duties on manufactured goods will be lowered and that Canadian industries will suffer. This appears an unfounded fear, and in any case not a reasonable objection to securing a magnificent market for farm produce. The farmers have had to endure the high tariff on manufactured goods—they have had their own disadvantages in the process of nourishing industries and the building up of great city populations; now, they can have the United States' market and an outlet at the highest possible values for the fruits of their labours. I believe they should have it. We have done all possible as a country to build up and develop industry and we will continue to progress and increase in that direction.

Reciprocity, as proposed, will, to my mind do for the farming community, what protection has done and is doing for the manufacturer. The exports of Canada can only be affected in one way—they must increase. The first increase will take place undoubtedly by those terrible lines running north and south. There is no example in the world I know of where trade must be essentially governed by the points of the compass—why east and west only? If a farmer can sell his poultry at 18c. per pound by adhering to the east and west theory, or can obtain 25c. per pound by pointing south — which would you have him do? How long would the Montreal manufacturer sell a machine in Manitoba at $15 if he could get $25 for it in the State of Maine?

It has been feared by some that this reciprocity would adversely affect the St. Lawrence shipping and particularly the port of Montreal. I hold the view that the exports of Canada will increase enormously under this reciprocal agreement. The export trade now going on to the United States will benefit at once by the saving in duty. This great saving or profit will encourage and give impetus to greater production. This alone will make the showing I would predict. From some points of view does it matter so much if our exports do increase, if they reach an outside market by rail or water?

I do not see a blow to our shipping in this agreement ;the increases we are accustomed to may not be as pronounced ,but the bulk of our waterborne export will be little affected. The railways control the channels that grain will follow. The rate of carriage is in their hands and they will take care of the trade following the points of the compass that is inciated by their interest. I believe it will be East and West in this case. There is no fear for the port of Montreal. It will go on prospering. As improvements go forward and as shipping charges decrease with modern methods, we can look for increase asfast as it can be handled. The best and cheapest route for the great western production will prevail easily.

Only one thing more, and that one perhaps the hardest to bear of all criticism offered. It touches our loyalty —our nationality—our pride in Canada and all that is Canadian. It is asserted that this reciprocity with the United States will bring about annexation—that it will destroy our Canadian ideas—that it will be no time in fact before we will all find ourselves good, law-abiding United States' citizens glorying in the beautiful Stars and Stripes. Why? Because our Government arranges for an interchange of commerce, in produce of the farm, etc., etc. Because we as a country increase the volume of our business with a foreign country. This surely does not pay a tribute to a Canadian's intelligence; it vexes me to see all the flaunting of a super loyalty. We all love our dear old flag, but no one section of the community has any special claim to wave it over fancied ideas or to gain the selfish end either in business profits or political advantage. Great Britain is the greatest trading nation in the world. She trades free and open with France, Germany, with the world. Do we see the Englishman any less British? Does he follow his invoice for goods to France and become a Frenchman, or to Germany and become a German?

I am pleased to be able to say that I favour the reciprocity proposed. I believe it is a good sound business bargain with the great advantage on the side of Canada. I believe it will increase the business of the country — that it will add greatly to the prosperity of the agricultural community, and that it will materially improve the Canadian market for the manufacturers. It will build up the Canadian home market for manufactured goods —more people and more money to buy with. The country should support reciprocity along these lines. Every Canadian should support it, and I fully join in the belief that when we get this agreement through and working we will still be able to sing "Rule Britannia" with increased lustiness—honour the flag of Britain and our dear Canada as always, and incorporate as well in our prayers God Save Britain's King.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

"IN quiet country places one may be poor, very poor, without much conscious suffering. But in a city, if one knows anything at all of the possibilities of civilized life, of the joys and comforts of good food, clothing and shelter, of theatre and concert and excursion of entertaining and being entertained, poverty becomes a hell. In the country the innocent people wonder at the grossness of the more comfortable kind of city folks, at their love of money, their incessant dwelling upon it, their reverence for those who have it, their panic-like flight from those who have it not. Let them be careful how they judge. If you discover any human being anywhere acting as you think a human being should not, investigate all the circumstances, look thoroughly into all causes of his or her conduct before you condemn him or her as inhuman, unworthy of your kinship and your sympathy."

—David Graham Phillips.

The above passage from David Graham Phillips' new novel, "The Grain of Dust," I recommend to everyone who thinks himself a lover of fair play and the square deal to read over three times and then think about.

Especially the last sentence.

I think that sentence would make an excellent working motto for any of us who are inclined to be critical of others to paste up on our desks, or better still, in our hearts.

Only I'd like to add a little to it. "Investigate all the circumstances, look thoroughly into all the causes of his or her conduct before you condemn him or her"—and then make further allowances for a difference in inborn character and will power and strength of desires between you and the one you would judge, and acknowledge your entire inability to say "If I were what he is I would not have done that."

How one man dares judge another, bad or good, no matter what the circumstances are, I cannot understand, for surely accomplishment is not the only measure of goodness. Must not the tools each one has to start with and the obstacles he must encounter also be remembered in the reckoning?

And who can judge these things for each one of us but our own souls? Or may even we ourselves judge ourselves? being as we are without any measure of other men's temptations and strength to judge our own by?

For instance, how can the most highly respected member of the community dare to think that he is any better than the convict, ignorant as he is how his own God-given power to resist temptation and the strength of his own desires compares with the convict's.

The attempt to judge any human being seems to me like trying to solve X + Y = Z without having any idea what any of the letters stand for.

Who shall say but when the Divine Knowledge that understands each one of us and holds the measure in his hands shall judge us, He shall say to the convict, "With the obstacles of circumstances and environment with which I handicapped you, with the enfeebled body and mind and will he queathed from generations of unfit ancestors that I gave you, you struggled well"; and to the most highly respected member of the community, "Of splendid conditions of environment and opportunities, of the healthy body and brain and will power that I bestowed upon you, ye have made but half what you should."

Who knows?

Nobody.

Isn't it wisest, then, "if you discover a human being anywhere acting as you think a human being should not, to investigate all the circumstances, look thoroughly into all the causes of his conduct" before you condemn him, and then remembering that there are yet other factors in the equation you can not find out, to dull fail to condemn?

Irl Hicks' Weather Predictions For Month Of May

A reactionary storm period will culminate on and covering the 4th and 5th, and this period, being under the influence of the Mercury equinox, will bring storms of rain, with continuation of cloudy, threatening weather for several days. Under stress of the Mercury period, and solar conditions peculiar to this month, very severe storms are probable, at this and other May periods. High barometer with very cool weather with probable frosts northward will be the natural order from about the 5th to the 9th—first to the west and north, advancing east ward and southward.

A regular storm period covers the 9th to the 14th with moon on the celestial equator on the 9th and full on the 13th. High temperature falling barometer and electrical storms will appear about the 9th in western extremes and from Wednesday the 10th to Sunday, the 14th, these conditions will progress to the eastward, causing general and violent storms in many localities. From the 10th to the 16th constitutes a period of seismic strain that will very probably cause earthquake shocks and shivers in many parts of the globe. A marked change to high barometer and cooler, with probable frosts at night northward should be no surprise from about the 13th to the 16th.

A reactionary storm period will bring return of warm weather, falling barometer and storms, on and touching the 17th and 18th. Those who have followed us for years tell us that the solar eye is focused along the central parallels of the northern hemisphere during May, and hence violent electrical and tornadic storms often reach a maximum at this season. There is no special indication of such storms at this period at the same time, approaching storms should be calmly and carefully scanned. Expect change to much cooler after these storms for several days.

A regular storm period falls from the 20th to the 25th, being central on the 22nd. This period will culminate in very high temperature, a drop of the thermometer, and forceful storms of rain, wind and thunder, on and next to Tuesday, the 23rd. Dashes of heavy hail will be most natural at this time, with probability of a tornado, coming upon the unwary in scattering localities. Cycles of rain, wind and thunder storms may repeat themselves in afternoons and evenings for several days at this period, or until the barometer rises, attended by westerly winds and much cooler.

A reactionary storm period is central on the 27th, 28th and 29th. The New Moon is in perigree and near north declination, falls on the 29th calling for low barometer, change to very warm and resulting in vicious storms of thunder, wind and rain. Earthquakes from 26th to 30th.

TIT-BITS

A widow with an income of $600 a year can get along better than a widower can on $1,000.

There is one thing about working on a newspaper that is distressingly strenuous: When you use a word you are compelled to spell it.

It is often said of men, after being sent to the penitentiary, that they are model prisoners. Why couldn't they have begun the model business a little earlier?

I only confess to know two things: (1) What I want; and (2) That I don't get it.

If I don't like the man, I hate to hear his money rattle.

Men talk a good deal about their bravery, but as a matter of fact that part of a man that isn't sheep, is rabbit.

PETERBORO' MIDLAND LEAGUE TEAM READY

Enthusiastic Organization Meeting Was Held Last Night at Which Officers Were Elected and Arrangements for the Season Were Completed---Bright Prospects.

At an enthusiastic meeting held in the Oriental Hotel parlours last night the Peterborough Midland League Baseball Club was organized for the season. The prospects before the organization are of the brightest—there is an enthusiastic coterie of local sportsmen behind the team and there is a host of material available to select from. With a strong four team Midland League organized and operated on a strictly amateur and home-brew basis there is every reason to expect that Peterborough fans will get a lot of good baseball this season.

The following officers were elected:

Patrons and Patronesses—Hon. J. R. and Mrs. Stratton, T. E. Bradburn, M.P.P., Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Patterson, Mr and Mrs. D. O'Connell, R. Dobie, Mr. and Mrs. C. G. Graham.

Hon. Pres.—W. H. Denham.
Hon. Vice-Pres.—H. Phelan.
Pres.—R. M. Glover.

Manager—A. Quinlan.
Executive—E. Hartuhise, C. Curtis, F. D. Craig, J. G. Counihlu, Dr. Wightman.

General regret was expressed by those present at the death of Mr. W. J. Metheral who had always been an enthusiastic worker on behalf of baseball in Peterborough and the secretary was instructed to send a letter of condolence to his family. A vote of thanks was passed to Mine Host Graham for the use of the hotel parlours.

It was decided that the Peterborough club should have uniforms of white with blue trimmings, blue and white socks and Cleveland caps. These will be ordered at once.

BASEBALL

The Riverside Athletic field was the scene of a battle royal yesterday, when the Aeroplane and Dreadnought baseball teams fought desperately to prove which of these two scrappers is the most formidable. After the Aeroplanes took a few excursions and the Dreadnoughts ceased firing, the score was found to be a tie, three to three, showing the class of the game. Batteries—Cunniff and Tait for the Dreadnoughts; Anderson and Jewel for the Aeroplanes.

A Moment's Reflection Will Show You

You simply can't imagine the graceful styles, smart cut and fine fabrics of Sovereign Brand Clothes for men until you have seen them and tried on a suit. Go to the leading clothes shop in your town and ask to see the range of styles for Spring and Summer. Look them over carefully and select a pattern you like—you'll surely find one—take the suit and put it on. Now step up to the large full-length pier glass and note the effect. Here you will be able to see the suit as it looks on you and form your own opinion as to its fit and style. Note, for one thing, how splendidly the coat fits you around the neck—the supreme test of scientific coat-making—observe the graceful curve of the lapels, the symmetric cut of the cloth. Examine the inside—the linings—see the well-finished effect of the fine, thorough needlework—no ravels or unsightly seams—every characteristic of a high-grade garment.

It is these things—these unusual qualities of ready-to-wear clothes that recommend Sovereign Brand to men of taste and judgment.

SPLENDID ADDRESSES GIVEN AT BANQUET

President of the Hardware Association, Mr. Harrington, of Toronto and Others, Address Local Business Men.

AN ENJOYABLE AFFAIR

The Retail Merchants' Association held their annual banquet last night in the National Hotel. There were about thirty or forty prominent business men of the city present. A number of very excellent addresses were given, among them being an interesting, eulogistic appeal by Mr. R. Chown, of Belleville, to the Retail Merchants of Peterborough, urging them to stand by their organization.

In the course of a few remarks the first speaker referred to the excellent work done by the Association since its organization.

The purpose of the Association was to protect the retailers. We have a Dominion and a Provincial Board, and we have been organized for about fifteen years. We have had troubles of our own, in looking after the Retailers and in the securing of legislation. Commercial legislation was the most difficult to secure. If we could place all merchants in parliament the matter would be comparatively even. They have got more legislation in the United States than any other country in the world. Their system of electing their government, judges, etc., all leads up to legislation. A great deal of this was for the purpose of eliminating trusts; yet they have more trusts than any country in the world.

As a class we are the softest lot of people on earth. Take, for instance: It does not matter how much we pay our clerks, or our workmen, we lay in a big stock of goods, then we pay our insurance, taxes, etc., and then we wait for customers to come along and buy it out piece by piece. It is up to the taxpayer to support our schools, hospitals, gaols, etc. We are the biggest end of the taxpayer. In Toronto we pay 45 per cent. of the taxes that are paid in that city. You cannot buy postage stamps at two cents each and sell them at one cent and one-half. The Government won't let you. They do business on strict business principles. So ought it to be with the Retail merchants. You don't find very many merchants who have retired with enough to live on, most of them retire to the bailiff, or retire through death or failure.

The speaker then concluded with a strong denunciation of the co-operative method of selling goods, closing by a strong appeal to those present as merchants to stand by their organization and boost it onward.

Industrial Commissioner Duggan made a few appropriate remarks, in which he urged the members to greater activity and to form a stronger organization by endeavouring to increase the membership to the extent of 100 members.

Mr. Harrington, the next speaker, in a few pointed remarks, referred encouragingly to the good and efficient work done by the Retail Merchants' Association. He also took occasion to denounce the use of trading stamps, receipt coupons, or anything used to represent a discount. In fact the speaker read Act 536 of the Criminal Code, showing the illegality of the sale of these. The penalty of this offence is one year in prison, or a fine of $300.

The following officers were then elected:

President—Mr. Thos. Barrie.

First Vice-President—Mr. T. H. Adams.

Second Vice-President—Mr. Keith G. Lech.

Treasurer—Mr. J. H. Connal.

Secretary—Mr. Duggan.

At the close of the meeting the following resolution was moved and adopted by the unanimous approval of all who were present:

To His Honour Mayor Morrow and the Council of the City of Peterborough—

At a meeting of the Retail Merchants' Association, held in the National Hotel, on Thursday, May 4th, it was moved, seconded, and carried:

That the Retail Merchants' Association, in regular meeting, unanimously recommend the continuance in office of the present Industrial Commissioner, for another year, and consider it would be a mistake to make any change, either in the office or the incumbent.

That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Mayor and to the City Clerk for presentation to the Council. (Signed)

Thos. Barrie, President; T. H. Adams, First Vice-President; Keith G. Lech, Second Vice-President; James Connal, Treasurer.

A THEFT CHARGE

The Port Hope Guide says: On Saturday morning the Chief received a phone message from Melvin Bowins of Pontypool that some person had stolen his horse. The chief got busy at once and found a man at one of the hotel stables endeavouring to dispose of a horse which answered to the description given by Bowins. The man was arrested and appeared in court and pleaded guilty to the charge. He gave his name as William Neil and his home was in Rockwood Valley, Quebec. He had been working in the woods at Haliburton and was desirous of visiting Rockwood alley. He stopped off at Peterborough and had a few drinks and soon found himself strapped. He reached Pontypool and stole the horse and rode it to Port Hope. It was his intention to sell it in order to raise sufficient money to reach Rockwood Valley. He had never been in court before. The case was remanded for a week.

Wall Papers Artistic and Practical—Drapes to Match

It's surprising how people's ideas change. Only a few years ago the papering of the home was more of a necessity than a means of beautifying. We introduced into Peterborough the more artistic lines and ideas of wall papering, with the result that something materially more than wall paper is being looked for every day. We do not claim the entire credit for this state of affairs, for others have a claim just as well, then too the natural trend of civilized advancement is towards the more artistic ideas, yet we have catered for this trade ever since the commencement of our now thoroughly established wall paper section and have won an enviable name for our department.

There is a great advantage, in furnishing the home, to be able to choose wall paper, drapes and floor coverings all in one section of one store and not have to travel all over the city, hunting for colours and patterns to match. We buy for the three departments (Rugs, Wall Paper and Drapes) with this in view and the result is that our customers are easily satisfied and get their needs without extra worry and ultimately become enthusiasts in our mode of decorating and home furnishings.

Come and see our latest 1911 ideas. Stocks most complete and reasonably priced. Saturday we offer extra specials. Note these

"SUMMER FEEDING" WAS THE SUBJECT OF FINE ADDRESS

There was a large attendance at the monthly meeting of the Peterborough Poultry Association last night. The president, J. T. C. Lang, was in the chair, and the meeting was a splendid one and much enthusiasm was shown by the members. Many reported splendid hatches this season. During the evening a paper by Mr. J. H. Callender, on Summer Feeding, was read.

SUMMER FEEDING.

Summer feeding of poultry is apt to be allowed to take care of itself, rather more than during the winter months, because it seems to have become a simple matter. The necessity for providing the fowls with every item of their diet when housed up closely, keeps the attendant watchful all the time, and often this is the season when the best results are obtained.

When spring opens up, however, it looks as if the fowls could do some foraging for themselves, and the close attention is relaxed, until one naturally falls into a careless haphazard way of feeding the birds. Possibly, where free range is provided this method might be followed without noticeable evils resulting. But the penned up city flock is no better situated in relation to foraging ground than it was in the winter. The occasional footless insect that ventures within the precincts of the hen-yard, is quickly caught and executed, but the chances to participate in the game are entirely too few to supply the demand for animal food. Then there is a green feed. We tramp over fresh green lawns, and see nice bunches of clover along the roadside, and are apt to forget that inside the chicken yard not a blade of green is to be seen, while the longing for such food is always present.

We remember that it takes variety to keep the hens in egg-producing condition in winter, and naturally to make the young flock grow the best, the well-varied ration should be kept up.

Many poultry yards in the city are just as small a corner as the owner feels like sparing from his little garden, and the chicks are kept confined closely to keep them within bounds, very soon throw out roots if set in a warm place near the stove. When this happens spread them out about an inch thick on trays of any kind that are easiest to make. After that do not disturb the oats, but keep them well moistened. In a short time there will be a sod about three inches thick, that will be relished by the hens in a way that will do your heart good to see. Feed only what they will eat up clean, and by starting a new lot every few days, the green food question is solved, and the cost reduced at the same time.

If other meat foods is hard to get, try breeding maggots: Mix bran and water to a sloppy condition, and let stand in the sun for a day or two. It does not take it long to turn into a pailful of lively white maggots that will start biddy singing the song we all enjoy to hear.

The whole matter resolves itself into the question of making nature's conditions as near as possible available for the hens and chicks that are shut up, and the attention to detail is almost invariably well rewarded.

Oats by the process of sprouting may be seen at 114 Hunter street, East City, at any time any of the interested poultrymen wish to call.

"Not Too Good to be True"

- It was a present good customer of ours who said a few years since that "Semi-ready tailoring is too good to be true."
- Like other men we know he was captious, critical and incredulous, but a visit to the Semi-ready tailor shops in Montreal was a revelation.
- The story of the rise and progress of Semi-ready does sound marvellous, and yet it is but one of the many trade revelations which have occurred in the industrial renaissance.
- The telling is not as convincing as seeing what good clothes we tailor and finish to order for from $15 to $35.

WAS GREATLY LIKED BY LETHBRIDGE PEOPLE

The Lethbridge Daily Herald contains a very interesting reference to the service held in connection with the funeral of the late George Johnston, the former Peterborough citizen who died in Lethbridge and who was buried under Oddfellow auspices here this week. The Herald says in part:

The funeral service in connection with the late G. H. Johnston took place sat Knox church at 2 p.m. today. The casket, covered with floral emblems, was wheeled to its place in the church to softened strains on the organ. A large assembly of all trades and professions testified to the esteem min which the deceased was held.

The Masons and Oddfellows, with insignia and regalia were there to pay their last tribute to a dear brother. The service was conducted by Rev. A. M .Gordon, who said that every old timer knw withe late Mr. Johnston and ever new comer remembered the warm clasp of the hand by which he was welcomed by the deceased. No wonder he was a popular man, for he was one to interest himself in everything good that was going on. He took an active part in the encouragement of clean sport and if every man had his ideals nothing could be said against it.

The processional was headed by the pallbearers, Mayor Adams, Dr. Galbraith and Messrs. Sherock, J. D. Higginbotham, Fleetwood and T. McNab.

LIVERPOOL CHIEF CORONER'S WARNING TO GIRLS

Much good might be done if, in schools and elsewhere, the evils and dangers of this craze for pleasure and excitement could be brought home to boys and girls.

A STRANGE CAMPAIGN

A very curious kind of temperance reform campaign was waged recently in New York under the auspices of the Salvation Army. A description of it is given as follows by a writer in the English "Band of Hope Chronicle":

"The National Booze Conference" and "Booze Parade," which took place in New York a short time ago under the management of the Salvation Army, should rank as one of the greatest rallies of the past year. At all events, American newspapers say there has never been anything like it before in New York, and the Army are rejoicing in the possession of over 1,000 drunkards, who have promised henceforth "to ride on the water wagon," which is the American way of saying that they have become teetotallers.

So triumphal a success was the "Booze Parade" which preceded the meeting at a dozen big central halls in the City, that the Army are thinking of repeating it in London, where, to quote Miss Evangeline Booth, the Commandant in New York, "King Alcohol" has tens of thousands of helpless slaves.

The rally was conducted on Salvation military lines. Scores of skirmishers went ahead exploring the byways along the line of march, rounding up the drunkards in the adjacent gin palaces, and in some cases physically transporting them into the roadway, where they were picked up by the main body of Salvationists and lifted into the "water wagons" which were in the great procession. Some tumbled off, some were tied with ropes, but most of them were retained in position by friendly hands.

The "parade" at night was a mile long, and was led by Colonel Macintyre. All the city was aroused by the novel spectacle. Brass bands flared and drums beat along the busiest highways. One banner borne by a Salvation lass was inscribed, "Don't soak yourselves; but soak the devil."

The principal orators of the evening were named: "Fighting Julia," "Joe the Turk," and "Honest Jim Callum." Drunkards in various stages of somnolence and alcoholism filled the Salvation Halls to overflowing, and at midnight Col. Macintyre announced that the splendid total of 1,330 had "Climbed upon the water wagon." Reformed drunkards apparently made the best skirmishers. They knew the haunts of the enemy, and hardly a gin palace or gin kitchen on the line of march escaped invasion.

The Mayor of New York afterwards congratulated the Army on that heroic assault, and expressed the hope that the Salvationists would continue the crusade.—Pioneer.

FACTS ABOUT KANSAS

There are half a million young men and women in Kansas over twenty-one years of age who have never seen a saloon in that state; there is not a Kansas newspaper which publishes liquor advertisement; one-third of the counties of Kansas have not a prisoner in their jails nor a pauper in their poorhouses; one-half the counties of Kansas did not send a convict to penitentiary last year; Kansas stands first in the per capita valuation of assessed property.—American Issue.

PROHIBITION WORKS

Another answer to the misrepresentation that temperance is on the wane in the Southern States is to be found in a recent editorial in the Georgian, of Atalanta, Ga. It says:

Georgia has prospered under prohibition. It has increased in wealth and population, while Atlanta has leaped to second place among the cities of the south.

Exploded beyond repair is the old contention that prohibition hurts business. It hurts only the whisky business and boosts all others. Atlanta was never in the midst of such business and building activity as it is now.

In Atlanta, moreover, prohibition has decreased drunkenness, crime, and disorder. This has been shown by indisputable statistics.

And then it is pre-eminently foolish to say that prohibition doesn't prohibit because all drinking and drunkenness is not stopped. The prohibition laws never tried to do this. So long as whisky may be legally shipped into a state, that is beyond their power.

But prohibition has killed the old whisky saloon—an organized force corruptive both of society and of politics; and the law has been enforced, too, perhaps as well as could have been expected of any law passed over opposition as strong. Sentiment for its better enforcement is growing everywhere.

As to the prohibition law of this state—with all its faults, Georgia will cling to it still.

ARMOUR-PLATED BOYS

It is important in these days that we should have armour-plated boys. A boy needs to be iron-clad on—

His lips—against the first taste of liquor.

His ears—against evil sentiment.

His hands—that they do nothing wrong.

His heart—against irreverence and doubt.

His feet—against going with bad company.

His eyes—against dangerous books and pictures.

His pocket — against dishonest money.

His tongue—against impure words.

The Christian armour on a nation's citizens gives more security to the country than all the armour plate on her ships can give.—Selected.

"THE SELKIRK" THE NEW PALATIAL HOTEL OF THE GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC IN WINNIPEG

"The Selkirk" is the new palatial hotel of the Grand Trunk Pacific, in Winnipeg. The above is the plan, which has been approved by the General Steels Manager for the new hotel, which the Company intends to erect in Winnipeg. This hotel, which, in appearance and luxuriousness of appointments, is to be the equal of the Chateau Laurier, at Ottawa, will cost, in round figures one million dollars. It will be situated on Broadway, near the Manitoba Club, and close to the new Union Station. It has been definitely decided to call the hotel "The Selkirk," which not only has the appropriate name, but also one which is historically associated with Winnipeg and with the development of the West, generally. Messrs. Ross and MacFarlane, of Montreal, are the architects for the hotel. They are now working on the detailed plans, and construction is to commence forthwith. This hotel will be the first of a chain of similar hotels to be erected throughout the West by the Company. To-day the manager ment announced the purchase of a centrally-situated site opposite the Edmonton, for the erection, in the Edmonton Club on McDougall ave.. near future of another large hotel. deal, by which it secures a very The Company has also just closed a advantageous site for a new station to be erected in the City of Calgary.

SERMON FROM SHAKESPEARE

(Copr. 1909, by Bradley-Garretson Co., Ltd.)

What poor an instrument
May do a noble deed.
—Anthony and Cleopatra, Act V., Sc. II.

Cleopatra was Caesar's prisoner. She was about to be led to Rome to grace the conqueror's triumph. Her calamity weighed upon her mind. She had visions of Caesar's triumphal procession. To her attendant Iras she said:

"Mechanic slaves,
With greasy aprons, rules, and hammers, shall Uplift us to the view."

From such a fate she determined to escape by self-destruction. A "rural fellow," a stupid, half-witted clown, brought her a basket of fruit in which were concealed some asps—poisonous Egyptian reptiles. The deed of the clown was in no way noble. His part in the death of Cleopatra was a mere accident, but to Cleopatra's way of thinking his deed was to be noble in its results. She was in bondage; she, the great queen who had had the homage and love of the greatest emperors and generals, was to be dragged, a detested and despised captive through the streets of Rome. This clown brought her liberty. From Cleopatra's point of view she was about to do a noble, an heroic deed, in ending her life, and the "rural fellow" was an unconscious instrument in aiding her to defeat Caesar's designs.

The expression

"What poor an instrument

taken entirely apart from its setting is profoundly true. There is nothing that may not be turned to good use. That piece of driftwood in the stream may yet be worked into the structure of some noble building; that despised branch may give support to feeble limbs; that rude, rough block of granite by the wayside may play its part in nobly basing a lordly monument that tells of heroic deeds.

Shakespeare frequently gives instances of the poor, as man judges, consciously and unconsciously doing noble deeds. Poor old mad King Lear was driven forth a wanderer from a stormy moral world into a tempestuous physical world. Insults indignities, abuses were heaped upon him by his children and courtiers. The court fool followed him in his wanderings, comforted and protected him with odd wisdom and uncouth tenderness. Touchstone, the fool of "As You Like It," was the comforter chosen by Rosalind and Celia in their wanderings in the Forest of Arden [illegible] pure away to [illegible] Shakespeare places them in positions which prove that the poorest of instruments may do noble deeds.

One of Browning's most powerful poems is Herve Riel. The hero was a rude, illiterate sailor, a poor coasting pilot pressed into the service. Admirals, captains and lieutenants were in despair at the thought that they must either destroy their magnificent fleet or allow it to fall into the hands of the British. This poor pressed seaman, an object for scorn, curses and blows, put his hand to the wheel and steered the stately warships to safety. The Holland peasant lad who sat all night long by the dyke, pressing his little hand against the break to keep the trickling water from enlarging the hole and flooding the country, was no doubt a lad seemingly incapable of anything great, but as his deed proved he was an instrument fitted for noble action. The possibilities in material objects and human beings are incalculable. All that is needed is the artist to turn the stark or stone to noble uses, or the opportunity to call forth the hero in the individual.

History gives abundant examples of seemingly poor instruments doing the noblest of deeds. There was a man born of the humblest of parents. Until he reached mature years he was an odd, indolent, grotesque figure. No one who saw Lincoln in the Black Hawk War or Lincoln the rail-splitter or Lincoln the keeper of the general store would ever have supposed him capable of governing a nation in the most critical period of its history, of giving a new impetus to the life of that nation. In Canada a stonemason toiled at his trade. In early manhood, to the ordinary observer, he seemed a mere hewer of limestone and granite, but he was an instrument capable of noble deeds. In time Alexander Mackenzie was to become the first citizen of his country, the Premier of the Dominion. A newsboy became the greatest inventor of his age—Edison. But it is not necessary to multiply examples. No instrument, however humble, should be despised. The bootblack, the newsboy and the stonemason have in them potential powers which may enable them to do noble deeds.

To the Pharisees and Sadducees in the learned and cultured world of Jerusalem, what poor instruments Jesus and his disciples must have seemed—Jesus, the son of a carpenter, his immediate followers illiterate fishermen. The history of Christianity proves that the seemingly weakest of vessels are not to be despised.

Despise neither stock nor stone, the poor nor the feeble. The most grossly material object, the weakest and most insignificant human being may be an instrument that may do a noble deed.

CORRESPONDENT'S REPORT TO THE LABOUR GAZETTE

Mr. J. Arthur Sharp, correspondent for Peterborough, Ont., and district to the Labour Gazette, reported as follows:

GENERAL CONDITION OF LABOUR

Conditions during March compared favrably with February, and were better than in the corresponding month of last year. The cordage works were again in operation, having been shut down for some months, and about seventy-five men are employed at the plant. At present only the cordage and rope departments are in operation, and the employees are working overtime. The street railway company will extend its line south to Byersville this summer; it will also erect a new car barn at once, to cost $10,000, and inaugurate the pay-as-you-enter system on its cars. The Canadian General Electric Company has been awarded the contract for the plant for the new power station to be erected this summer for the Winnipeg Electric Railway Company. The city firemen have been successful in getting an increase in their salaries: First year men, from $500 to $525; second year men, from $525 to $575; and third year men, from $575 to $600. The increase will go into effect on April 1. The city also appointed two more policemen at $500 per year. The market tolls were awarded to Jos. Girven for $915.00.

CONDITION OF LOCAL INDUSTRIES

Agriculture.—Farmers were busy preparing for spring. There is a great demand for farm labourers in this section.

Lumbering.—Lumbering was active. The men have had a good winter's work. To cut will be equal to that of last year. The mills are getting ready to start for the season.

Manufacturing.—The manufacturing establishments were very busy, some working overtime. Sylvester's foundry at Lindsay has started operations again after being shut down for some time. About one hundred men are employed.

Railroad Construction — Railway construction was active on the Canadian Northern Railway at Port Hope, and on the Canadian Pacific Railway grain route at Lindsay.

CONDITION OF PARTICULAR TRADES

The building trades are rather quiet, but the outlook is good. Iron moulders, iron workers, core makers, and machinists were active. Electric workers and line men were busy. Metal polishers, buffers and brass workers were active. Blacksmiths were very busy. Boilermakers and horseshoers were active. Woodworkers had a good month. Printers and allied trades were busy. Butchers and meat cutters were active. Leather workers were busy. Broom makers were active. Railway and street railway employees were busy. Teamsters and expressmen had a good month. Unskilled labour was fairly well employed.

OBITUARY

MRS. ALEXANDER REID.

The Chesley Enterprise gives the following account of the death of Mrs. Alexander Reid, who was a niece of Mr. Richard Lillico and Mr. David Wilson, of North Monaghan and of Mrs. F. Stenson, Mrs. Wm. Fowler and Mrs. Jos. Forester, Peterborough:

Seldom has it been our duty to record so sudden and sad a death as that of Mrs Alexander Reid, nee Miss Ina Lillico, in Hepworth on April 27. Deceased was married 20 months ago to Mr. A. Reid of Hepworth and lived a busy and useful life, and the number of sorrowing friends at Hepworth station, several of whom came to Chesley to attend the last sad rites, bespoke the popularity of the young wife in her new home. Reeve Douglas, of Hepworth, expressed the sentiments of that community when he informed the writer that the older people felt as if they had lost a daughter and the younger people a very dear friend.

Mrs. Reid was the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. Lillico, 2nd con. Elderslie and was born on July 6th, 1883. She was married on Sept. 1st, 1909, to Mr. Alexander Reid of Hepworth, where she and her husband established an ideal home. But she and her newly born baby boy are now resting peacefully in the silent tomb. All that medical aid and kind friends could devise and apply for her comfort and assistance were brought into action but the fiat of Him who rules our incomings and outgoings, had been issued and after a brief struggle the sufferer's spirit took flight to that home which every Christian believes is the fulfilment of life everlasting.

"THE BLACK CROSS"

By CLIVE H. BROOKS

He put his arms about her and she lay still for a moment, scarcely breathing. Then she spoke:

"I am not your wife, Velasco. Take your arms away."

"Your cheek is so soft, Kaya; the centre is like a red rose, blushing. Let me rest my cheek against it."

"Take your cheek away—Velasco."

"Your lips are arched like a bow, so red, so sweet! When I press them—I press—them!"

"Velasco—Velasco! Take your lips—away!"

The girl half rose on her pillow, pushing him back; striking at him feebly with her bare hands: "Go—don't touch me! I have been asleep! I am mad! I am not your wife—Velasco! We must part at once—I tell you, we must part!"

Velasco laughed: "Part!" he said. "You and I, Kaya?—Part? Have you forgotten the church, the priest in his surplice, the dark nave and the candles? We knelt side by side. You are my wife and I am your husband. Kaya, we can never part in life or in death."

The girl put her hand to her breast—"It was only a 'Nihilistic marriage' Velasco, you know what that means! A mere form for the sake of the certificate, the papers—just to show for the passport that we might go together." Her voice came through her throat roughly as if it hurt her.

Velasco laughed again shortly: "What is that to me?" he said. "We were married; you are my wife. Put your hands down, Kaya—let me take you in my arms. You know—throughout the journey, when we were tramping through the snow and the cold, I treated you as a comrade, for your sake. You asked it. You know—Kaya? And now—now we are in Germany; we are gypsies no longer. You are the Countess and I am Velasco—your husband, Kaya, your husband."

He stretched out his arms to her, and his eyes were like flashes of light under his brows, gleaming. His hands trembled: "Look at me, Kaya, look at me. Why do you torment me?"

The girl thrust her hand slowly into the breast of her jacket and drew out a paper. "You lost it," she said, "in the prison. I found it on the floor. The—the certificate of our marriage. I swore that night—if we reached the frontier I would—Velasco, don't touch me!—I would destroy it!"

She held it away from him and her eyes gazed into his.

"You would never destroy it, Kaya!" He looked at her and then he gave a cry: "Stop—Kaya!"

She had torn the paper across into strips and was flinging the pieces from her; she was laughing. "You, my husband, Velasco? Are you mad? The daughter of General Makarpin marry a musician! Our family is one of the oldest in Russia!" She laugher again wildly, clasping her hands to her throat. "You are mad—Velasco!"

He looked at her steadily. "Tell me the truth," he said, "Do you love me or do you not love me? Yes, or no."

"No, Velasco. You were kind to me—you saved my life, I am grateful. If it had not been for you—" Then she laughed again, staggering to her feet. "Love you? No—no! A thousand times—no!"

"That is a lie," said Velasco. "You are trembling all over like a leaf. Your cheeks are ashy. The tears are welling up in your eyes like a veil over the blue. You are breathless—you are sobbing."

He flung his arms around her and pressed her head to his breast, kissing the curls. "Lie still, Kaya, lie still in my arms! The gods only know why you said it, but it isn't the truth! You love me—say you love me! You said it in the sleigh when I was stunned—half conscious! Say it again—Kaya! The certificate is nothing. Does love need a certificate?" He laughed aloud. "Say it, Kaya—let me hear you, my beloved!"

She was silent, clinging to him; she had stopped struggling. Her eyes were closed and he kissed her fiercely on the lips again and again. Presently he was frightened, and a chill of terror and foreboding stole over him.

"Look at me, Kaya—open your eyes! Have I hurt you—was I too rough? Are you hungry? I love you so! The whole world is nothing; art is nothing; fame is nothing. I would sell my Stradivarius for the touch of your fingers in mine, Kaya! I would give my soul for a look in your eyes! Ah, open them—dearest!"

His voice shook and was hoarse, and he held her away from him, gazing down at her face and the panting of her breast. "Tell me you love me—Kaya!"

Suddenly she stiffened until her body was straight and unbending as steel, and the strength came back to her slowly. She opened her eyes and the veil was gone; they were flashing and hard. "You use your strength like a coward, Velasco," she said. "Can you force love? I told you the truth."

She pointed to the fragments of paper on the floor with her finger, scornfully: "There lies the bond between us," she said, "See—it is shattered; it lies at our feet. You will go on your way from here alone, to fill your engagements, and I—" She hesitated and stopped again, as one who is afraid of stumbling.

Her arms stiffened, and her hands and her whole body; and she drew away from him, avoiding his eyes, and looking only at the fragments of paper on the floor.

"Good-bye now—Velasco," she said.

He looked at her, and he was trembling and shaking from head to foot, like one in a chill. His teeth were clenched and his eyes were bloodshot; the pulses beat in his temples.

"My God!" he cried, "If it is true—if you don't love me! If—"

Kaya stretched out her hand to him, catching her breath. "Good-bye Velasco."

He turned on her fiercely, and raised his arm as if he would have struck her: "You are cruel!" he said crying out, "You are not a woman!" He caught her by the shoulders and held her, looking down into her eyes, with his face close to hers.

"Swear it!" he cried, "Swear it if you can—if you dare! Swear you do not love me."

She looked at him and her lips trembled.

She nodded.

A cry burst from his throat, like that of an animal, wounded, at bay. His blood-shot eyes stared at her for a moment, and then he flung her from him with all his strength and turning, dashed from the room.

The door slammed.

The girl reeled backward, putting her hands to her face. Then, as the echo of his footsteps died away on the stairs, she fell on her knees, crouching and sobbing.

"He is gone!" she cried out, the words coming in little moans through her clenched teeth. "He is gone! Velasco is gone!"

Her form shook in a torrent of weeping, and she took her hands from her face and wrung them together. "I love him!" she said, "I love him! If he had stayed! No—no, I am mad! I am cursed—cursed by the Black Cross. here is blood on my hands!"

She held them out before her, and they trembled and shook. "Blood," she cried. "I see it—red—dripping! It fell from his wound on my hand and nothing will wash it away! Nothing!" Her voice died away to a whisper and she knelt, staring at her hands with eyes wild and dilated:

"Not even his love," she said, "not even his love could wash it away. It would spread—he too would be cursed. He—too!" Then she flung herself on the floor and buried her head against the side of the couch, clinging to it, with her body convulsed:

"Come back, Velasco!" she stammered, "I am weak—come back! Put your arms around me—kiss me again! Don't be angry. Don't look at me like that! Velasco—I won't leave you! I—I love you! Come back!"

She lay still, shuddering.

Outside, in the street, came the clatter of wheels passing and the cries of a street vendor; far off came the whistle of a locomotive. Kaya dragged herself to her feet slowly, stumbling a little. She passed her hands over her eyes once or twice, as if blinded; then feebly, like one who has just recovered from a long illness she tottered towards the door and opened it.

Her head was bare and her curls covered it in a tangle of gold; her jacket and trousers were old and faded, patched at the elbows, torn at the knees. The tears had dried on her cheeks. She gazed ahead steadily without looking back; and the blue of her eyes was like the blue of the sky at night-fall, darkened and shadowy.

At the bend of the stairway she stumbled half-falling; then she steadied herself, clinging to the balustrade with her hands—and went on.

It was daylight, and the cocks were all crowing when Velasco returned. When he opened the door the candle burned low in its socket, and the sun-rays came filtering in through the windows. The room was deserted. He was muddy and footsore; his face looked haggard and old, and it was lined with deep furrow. His dark eyes were listless and weary, and his cheeks colourless.

"Kaya," he said, "are you here? Kaya!"

He looked on the couch, but it was empty; behind the curtains, but there was nothing; out of the windows, but there was only the street below. His eyes had a dazed look.

"Kaya!" he cried.

On the floor lay a boy's cap, tornrakish, faded with the sun and the snow of their wanderings—a little, green cap. Velasco stared at it for a moment.

Then suddenly he snatched it to his lips with a sob, and buried his head in his arms.

CHAPTER XIV.

Ehrestadt lies in a plain.

The walls of the old city have been levelled into broad promenades, shaded with nut-trees, encircling the town as with a girdle of green. Beyond, a new city has sprung up, spreading like a mushroom; but within the girdle the streets are narrow and crooked, and the houses gabled; leaning to one another as if seeking support for their ancient foundations, with only a line of sky in between.

At the corner of the promenade, just where the old city and the new city meet, is a tumble-down mill. It is called the Nonnen-Muhle, and it has been there ever since Ehrestadt first came into existence, as in evident from the bulging of the walls, and the wood of the casements, rotten and worm-eaten. The river winds underneath it, and the great spoked wheel turns slowly, tossing the water into a cloud of yellow foam, flinging the spray afar into the dark, flowing stream, catching it again; playing with it, half sportive, half fierce, like some monster alive.

As the wheel turns, the sound of its teeth grinding is steady and rhythmical, like a theme in the bass; and the river splashes the accompaniment, gurgling and sighing in a minor key, as if in complaint.

It was Johannestag. (St. John's day).

The citizens of Ehrestadt were walking on the promenade, dressed in their best; the men strutting, the women hanging on their arms, the children toddling behind. In the square a band was playing; the nut trees were in full leaf, and the air was warm and sweet with the scent of the rose buds. The wheel of the mill had stopped.

Just under the peak of the roof was a small window gabled, with a broad sill, and casements that opened outwards, overlooking the promenade. The sill was scarlet with geraniums, and the window itself was grown partly over and half smothered in a veiling of ivy. Behind the window was a garret, small like a cell; the roof sloping to the eaves.

There was nothing in the garret excepting a pallet bed in the corner under the eaves, and in the opposite corner a box on which stood a pitcher and basin; the basin was cracked; the pitcher was without a handle. On the wall hung a few articles of clothing on pegs; and the slope of the roof was grey and misty with cobwebs. Otherwise the garret was bare.

Sitting by the window with her elbows on the sill, framed by the ivy and the geraniums, was a girl. Her head was propped in her hands, and her hair glittered in the warm sunlight against the green and the scarlet. She was gazing eagerly over the throngs on the promenade, and her blue eyes were alert as if searching for some one.

She was young and slim, and her gown was shabby, turned back at the throat as if she suffered from the heat; and her hair was cropped, lying in little tendrils of gold on her neck, curling thickly about her ears and her brow. Her cheeks were quite pale, and there was a pinched look about the lips, dark shadows under the eyes. She gazed steadily.

"If I could only see him," she murmured to herself, half aloud, "just once—if I could see him!" Her lip trembled a little and she caught it between her teeth: "It is seventeen weeks—a hundred and nineteen days—since we parted," she said, "At day break on Thursday it will be a third of a year—a third of a year!"

RECIPROCITY AND ITS EFFECT ON PRICE OF EGGS

From Farm and Dairy.

How will reciprocity affect the price of eggs? The recent importations of eggs from the United States during our season of low production have been a cause of alarm to some poultry men. Mr. D. D. Wilson, of Seaforth, is one of the best authorities in Ontario on the egg trade. He has expressed his views as follows:

"I believe that producers of eggs will obtain a little higher average price under reciprocity than they do at the present time. Ontario is the only province in the Dominion just now that has a surplus of eggs. All the other provinces produce less than they consume. This is especially true of the western provinces where railway construction on a large scale and the coming of a great mass of immigrants has led to an enlarged demand for eggs that the local producers cannot yet meet. No doubt in time the western provinces will produce not only eggs enough for their own use, but a surplus.

ONTARIO'S SURPLUS

"In the meantime, however, Ontario's surplus of eggs goes almost entirely to the Northwest provinces. The export to Britain has ceased. Reciprocity will change trade channels, so that the western States will supply our Northwest provinces' demand for eggs until the large production is sufficient to meet the market demand. That will cut off Ontario's market for her surplus eggs in the west; but Ontario will have a vastly better market in New York and other large eastern United States cities.

"The chief advantage of this market is, of course, that of proximity. It would be absurd to send Ontario eggs to Vancouver, 3,000 miles away, at a cost of four cents a dozen, when we can get a better market, duty free, in New York at a shipping cost of three-quarters of a cent a dozen. Not only so, but Ontario eggs, when formerly exported to the eastern cities of the United States, commanded a substantial premium. The probability is that this was due partly to the more general prevalence of purebred stock in Canada and partly to climatic conditions. Whatever the causes, Ontario eggs did command this premium in the markets of the eastern cities. The other day I received a letter from a New York dealer, with whom in former years I had business transactions, reminding me of this fact, and stating that he would be prepared to receive all the eggs he could obtain from Ontario on the old terms.

WINTER EGGS

"A point is made of the fact that in the middle of winter eggs would be imported into Ontario from more southerly regions of the United States, and that this would lessen the profits of the Canadian poultry-keepers at a time when eggs are quite high in price. We are practically not producing eggs at that season, and the higher price appears to be very much more profitable than it really is when one considers the volume of business. Long ago we used to import eggs from as far south as St. Louis in the middle of winter, and it is quite likely that this may be done again; but the point I am making is that the average profit on the whole year's business of the poultryman will be higher, because of the firmer average price, even if the price in the winter time does not reach the present peak. I am convinced that the production of eggs in this province will greatly increase under reciprocity, and will be more profitable than under existing conditions.

SUMMER PRICE MORE IMPORTANT

"Those who assert that this country will be flooded with eggs from the south in the winter time seem to forget that the period of extremely high prices is quite short. Eggs are no doubt higher in Toronto in midwinter than they are in adjacent big United States centres can be shown to are placed in store in the spring, in April and May, in the flush of the season, the average price in the United States centres can be shown to be materially higher than in Toronto. It is this fact that is the determining one in the egg trade. The higher average price to the producer at that time is a great deal more profitable than a big price in Toronto in midwinter, when people have no eggs to sell."

SUGAR BEETS

From Farm and Dairy.

Sugar beets are grown most extensively in Ontario and Alberta, where they supply roots for three sugar factories. The area in crop last year according to the Census and Statistics Office was 16,000 acres, which is a substantial increase upon 1909. The yield per acre was 9.69 tons, the total yield being 155,000 tons. The roots supplied to the Berlin factory were testing 17 per cent. sugar, and at the Wallaceburg factory 16 per cent., but a product of 5,000 acres in Ontario is being shipped to factories in Michigan. The product of 8,300 acres in Ontario was marketed at Wallaceburg and Berlin, where the average price was about $5.86 a ton, or better than $57.80 per acre.

SESSION CLOSED

From Farm and Dairy.

The 1910-11 session of the Nova Scotia Agricultural College closed on Thursday, April 13th. The session was the most largely attended and the most successful in the history of the College. The total enrollment was 62, of whom 41 were from Nova Scotia, four from New Brunswick, five from Prince Edward Island and 12 from foreign countries. While this is not, by any means, as large an enrollment as there should be, yet it compares very favorably with the enrollment of the older established institutions in Canada.

Such a statement, coming from the cashier of a bank, shows what confidence responsible people have in Dr. Miles' Pills. Mr. A. L. Wilson while ordering pills wrote:

"I have used Dr. Miles' Nerve and Liver Pills and like your Anti-Pain Pills, on myself, with great results. The Liver Pills act so naturally and so easily that I scarcely know that I have taken a pill. Frequently being troubled with headache I take an Anti-Pain Pill and get immediate relief in every case."

NAVAL DEFENCES OF AUSTRALIA

Special Correspondent Discusses Report of Admiral Henderson.

VAST AMOUNT OF WORK

Document is of a Far Reaching Character and Presents Questions That Interest All Powers.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

YOUR special naval correspondent writes:—

The full report upon the naval defence of Australia by Admiral Sir Reginald Henderson has now been received in this country, and the Admiral himself has returned to England and has been interviewed upon the matter. Considerable interest in the recommendations he has made to the Commonwealth government had been aroused by the telegraphed extracts from the report, but it is only by study of the latter in its entirety and taking into account all the details that an adequate conception of its far reaching character and the enormous amount of work that has been put into it can be obtained.

The naval navies of the world are nearly all the outcome of very many years of development, and they rest upon traditions that are time honored, sometimes even ancient. Some navies have gone down into the depths and have been rehabilitated, but all have been built up slowly.

Even if we take the Japanese navy, the youngest of the fleets of the great Powers, it will be found that no less than from forty to fifty years elapsed before it reached maturity. Yet to Sir Reginald Henderson's report it is proposed to establish a complete naval service from the necessary steel manufactories and cadets' training colleges right up to first class battle ships and full blown admirals, within a period of twenty-two years, or about half the time taken to evolve the Japanese fleet which was successful in the late war. There is this to be said, however, that Australia has not, like the youthful United States, to build her navy under the stress of battle.

TAKING THE UNIT.

So far as England is concerned, Admiral Henderson has taken the unit which had already been ordered as the minimum of the fleet to be created by 1915.

This unit, consisting of one armored cruiser, three protected cruisers, six destroyers and three submarines, was on the arrangement of the Imperial Defence Conference of 1909 to become part of the Imperial Eastern fleet. But it is by no means clear that the Commonwealth, when its fleet has passed the initial stage of development, contemplates that it shall become part of a division of the Imperial fleet.

The Australians have made it very clear that they themselves are going to control their fleet, and not the British Admiralty. Sir Wilfrid Laurier has said that while it is true that when Great Britain is at war, yet it does not necessarily follow that Canada will take part in all the naval wars in which Great Britain might engage, particularly on the outposts of the Empire. In the same way, when Australia is in possession of a fleet of her own she may differ with the mother country as to the way in which it should be used, and a peculiar situation will then be presented.

Admiral Henderson has taken the administrative machinery of the mother navy as his model, and has made very few innovations. In some respects it is evident that he is a disciple of Lord Fisher, which is more than can be said of all the officers concerned in the beginning of the Canadian navy. Thus, he has kept to the system of common entry and training for officers, which was introduced into the Imperial Navy by Lord Fisher in 1902, and he recommends short service for non-combatant officers and unskilled ratings among the men, or those grades which have been termed "sea laborers." In addition, there will be no marines in the Australian navy. If Sir Reginald's view that they are unnecessary in the initiation of a new navy, is shared by the Commonwealth government.

PREPARED TO ACT.

From a speech of the Defence Minister it would seem that such is the case, since he said that the federal government was prepared, provided the people gave it power, fully to carry out the naval defence scheme recommended by Admiral Henderson, as it had already followed the advice of Lord Kitchener with eminently satisfactory results.

At the end of the period of twenty-two years Admiral Henderson contemplates an annual expenditure of only four and three-quarter millions sterling for the upkeep of the fleet, which is to be composed of eight armored cruisers, ten protected cruisers, destroyer and submarine flotillas and four repair and depot ships. Whether this sum will be sufficient to insure the maintenance of a force adequate for the protection of Australian ports and shipping from hostile raids, while at the same time fulfilling the primary object of the Australian navy to support the Empire's command of the sea, is at least doubtful when the progressive advance in the naval expenditure of the Powers during the last twenty-two years is considered.

The sum is calculated on the basis of population, and works out at approximately the same ratio as the naval expenditure of Great Britain, the population of the United Kingdom being about ten times that of Australia.

Appeal to Americans to Share in the Honors To Be Paid to Charles Dickens

Centenary Committee Writes to Your Paper Calling Attention to Stamps.

FROM the Dickens Centenary Committee, Nos. 17-21 Tavistock street, London, W. C., your correspondent received the following letter, dated April 19, and signed in autograph by Lord Alverstone, Sir Charles Mathews, Mr. Hall Caine, Mr. Andrew Lang, Mr. W. W. Jacobs and Mr. Beckles Willson:—

To the Editor:—

In the belief that the heritage which Charles Dickens bequeathed to the English speaking world is as dear to Americans as to the Englishman, may we crave a portion of your space in order to call attention to a project for celebrating the great novelist's centenary?

Charles Dickens wrote his books before the era of international copyright as it exists to-day. He himself strove unceasingly to bring about this boon for the benefit of his fellow authors; and if he received the equivalent of single penny per copy of his works published in America, the number of which is said to exceed thirty millions of copies, he would have been richer by at least half a million dollars. Even in England to-day half a million volumes of Dickens are published annually upon which no copyright is paid.

In these circumstances it has seemed to the committee that it would be a graceful tribute on the part of a public grateful for the entertainment these works have afforded, and continue to afford to mankind, if the novelist's centenary could be marked by a voluntary offering on the part of his readers to be presented to his descendants, many of whom are in straitened circumstances. It is proposed to collect this fund through the sale of a centenary book plate known as the Dickens Stamp, which is to be obtained at the price of two cents from all booksellers and stationers who are interested in this scheme. These stamps are to be affixed to every copy of Dickens.

This movement already has received the support in this country of all classes from His Majesty the King to those in lowly walks of life.

"Everybody, it is hoped," said Lord Rosebery recently, "will feel it a duty to buy as many Dickens stamps, at any rate, as they possess volumes of Dickens, and to paste a stamp in each volume to show his debt is acquitted. The cause I am pleading is an old debt, long overdue, which constitutes a stain on the English and American races, and which I cannot doubt that in this centenary year they will be both willing and anxious to discharge."

If there are many owning copies of Dickens who cannot afford the stamp, small as the price is, surely there are hundreds of wealthy Americans to whom the name of Dickens is dear who will assist them by the purchase of large numbers of these stamps and their distribution in order that all may possess what His Majesty King George has called "an interesting and well designed record of the great novelist."

HE WOULD CHANGE INHERITANCE LAW

Physician Believes Second or Third Son, Not First, Should Take the Title.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

"THE law of inheritance should be altered so that not the eldest but the second or the third son comes into the possession of title, property and position on the father's death."

This revolutionary opinion was given by a physician with a large family practice when discussing the examinations of only and eldest children recently made in Vienna by Professor J. Friedjung, from which it would appear that only and eldest children are usually timid, neurotic, unstable and hysterical.

The professor had under examination one hundred such children, forty-five of them being boys. Of them all only thirteen were fully normal. Eighteen were severely neuropathic and sixty-nine showed nervous instability.

"I have frequently noticed that the eldest children are often backward and neurotic," said the family physician referred to. "The eldest child has usually been the only child for a considerable period, and the only child is the hub of the house. Everybody has to give way to it, everything is sacrificed to it, and the child speedily suffers from exaggerated ego. Such a child is spoiled, pampered and improperly fed. Even supposing that it is not true that the first child is naturally not so good as later children, he soon becomes not so good because of the way he is treated.

"In large families the healthy children, physically and mentally, are those who, having been born latest, are left to grow up by themselves and look after each other, instead of being coddled and shepherded by the parents. Children of a big family are far fitter than those in a family of one or two children only."

"Professor Friedjung is quite right," said another physician. Professor Karl Pearson, indeed, has said that first children, because they are first, are decidedly below the others both physically and in intelligence. They are children of the early part of the marriage, and the best children are born when the mother is aged from twenty-eight to thirty-five. Apart from that theory, there is the fact that they seldom play with children of the same age as themselves, but are constantly with the grownups, and the grownup mind is quite different from the mind of a child, so that these children develop an abnormal psychology.

"The ordinary child has vivid imagination, the grownup has not, but has reduced all experience to logical formulae, so that the mind of the child who has to associate with grownups becomes warped and does not develop naturally. The eldest child while it is the only child is given so much care and attention that it is pampered. All its minor wants are looked after far too well, and it does not learn independence of action or thought."

WARMER WINTERS ARE ONLY 400 YEARS OFF

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

For those who have only four hundred years more to live Major R. A. Marriott's pamphlet "Why We May Expect Warmer Winters" should be a publication of vast interest. Incidentally he attempts to prove that people will one day only be able to exist near the equator.

"That the winters in these latitudes are gradually and perceptibly getting milder," he writes, "is a matter of universal comment."

The theory propounded by Major Marriott is that the seasons depend on the obliquity of the earth's axis. Everybody is familiar with the model of the earth encircling the sun, with a rod piercing the earth to represent the axis from pole to pole. This axis slants inward, but it has not been realized by many that its position varies from time to time, and it is on this variation that Major Marriott bases his prophecy that the winters will get warmer.

According to his theory, based on Drayson's "The Earth's Past History," the more the axis slants over toward the sun the greater is the contrast between the seasons. The time when the obliquity of the axis was least was 1354 B. C., and as the position of the axis varies in cycles of roughly 20,000 years, the earth is now approaching the time when its axis will slant least.

The year 7295 A. D., he adds, marks the apex of the genial period, when the contrast between winter and summer will be least, owing to the obliquity of the earth's axis being least.

This year is only 25 years ahead of us," he continues. "The change in a generation has been quite appreciable. The glaciers of the Alps began to recede some forty years ago. Our winters can no longer be pictured as bringing a mantle of snow and periods of continued frost. Later the time will come when regions near the equator, such as the lands of the proprietaries, Northern nations can alone furnish a field for the maintenance of the life activities of the present age."

WOMAN GAMBLERS ACTIVE IN LONDON

One Made $30,000 on a Race Recently, and This Produces Considerable Comment.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

A STATEMENT current that one woman well known in London society made $30,000 in a bet on the City and Suburban race suggested the question whether women are being bitten with turf gambling. Inquiries of the principal bookmakers go to show that undoubtedly they are being more affected than they used to be. There always have been certain women—members of the very "smart" and "horsey" set—who have been factors to be reckoned with in the ring. But, quite apart from this element, it seems that of late the woman "backer" has been more and more in evidence at race meetings.

The innovation first became noticeable four or five years ago, but it has not been till comparatively recently that the increase in women "punters" has become so remarkable, and, early as it is to judge this season yet, it seems that their numbers and the amount of their stakes have gone up enormously.

One very prominent bookmaker remarked that already this season he had done more business with women than ten years ago he would have done in a whole season. Another suggested that this tendency had been the outcome of the bridge mania of a few years back.

"Women," he said, "got bitten with gambling generally and learned to wager on their own account in a way they would never have dreamed of before. When they turn their attention to horse racing they take to it like ducks to water. And I'm sorry to say they are not always above trying to be too sharp. We have to keep our eyes on them."

A group of bookmakers at Tattersall's confirmed these views.

"There are twenty women to-day who make a regular habit of backing horses for every one there was three years ago, and I've had some little transactions with women lately that made me keep my eye on my book. What the woman punter goes in for in the long shot."

Another "gentleman" bookmaker, who transacts his business privately and has always found his principal customers among women, said:—

"Yes, it's certainly increasing. You have only to look at the stands to see that women take more interest in horse racing generally. They are very clever at the game, and whether by petticoat influence or how I don't pretend to be able to tell you, but they certainly seem to get first wind of a good thing when there's one going. I'm always chary of committing myself very deeply about even the rankest outsider when any one of a score or more women take a fancy to back it. Yes," he went on, in reply to a direct question, "I paid the woman you refer to more than £25,000. Over Mushroom she got her first money on with me at 33 to 1, and she lifted £5,000 from another bookmaker."

"Your women gamblers are very bad payers," said another bookie mournfully, "and we have no hold over them like we have over men who belong to decent clubs or have definite professions, with reputations to uphold; so we have to keep shy of accepting some of them unless their husbands guarantee their accounts or they can produce other quite exceptional references."

At the Other End.

Everybody's:—A stout old gentleman was having trouble with the telephone. He could hear nothing but a confused jumble of sounds, and finally he became so exasperated that he shouted into the transmitter:—

"Is there a blithering fool at the end of this line?"

Lured by Canada, Many Are Deserting England

Vast Numbers of Persons Are Taking Their All and Departing Each Week for the Broad Fields and New Areas of the Great Dominion.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

IT is now the height of the emigration season to Canada, and, although more vessels are plying across the Atlantic at this time than ever before, all the steamship companies are booked up for some weeks and some for months to come.

Specially noticeable among the numbers of emigrants are the families of those who have already gone out to the Dominion. These are now taking advantage of the best months of the year for settling in their new homes.

A census taken of the eight hundred passengers leaving recently on board a vessel from Liverpool bears this out, for it was found that four hundred of these were going to join their relatives and friends. The number of yeoman farmers with a capital of $2,500 and upwards proceeding to Canada is also exceptional.

It was remarked to a correspondent at the Grand Trunk Railway Company's offices that very few persons having once settled in Canada returned to England until they had become prosperous. And when a settler did return for a vacation he usually was responsible for the emigration of at least two more persons whom he met while in England.

An indication of the large scale on which emigration is now proceeding may be gathered by the spectacle of people daily surveying the windows and entering the emigration offices of the Canadian government at Charing Cross. The inquiry staff, which has been especially augmented, are kept busy all day from early morning till late in the evening. The Canadian Pacific Railway is sending out on its own steamships about fifteen hundred emigrants each week, and a report just received from Montreal states that it now begins to look as though the immigration figures for this year will almost double those of last year.

The Grand Trunk Railway is booking about twenty-five hundred passengers each week for Canada, who proceed by the different steamship lines, and specially noticeable in the Grand Trunk traffic is the fact that they are carrying more British than have ever been seen on its lines before. The new steamship and railway company, the Canadian Northern, announces that it is practically booked up until June next. Once a fortnight one of its vessels takes out about eight hundred emigrants. Others, formed into parties, are emigrating through the Great Northern by other lines. In all an average of five vessels, having a total carrying capacity of about six thousand persons, are now leaving the country each week for Canada.

OTTOMAN EMPIRE RECOGNIZES HER

Status of Miss Ola Humphrey, Who Has Become Bride of the Khedive's Relative.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

THE marriage of Miss Ola Humphrey to Prince Ibrahim Hassan, a relative of the Khedive, has raised many questions as to whether such a ceremony between a Mohammedan and a Christian celebrated in an English registry office would be considered legal in the Ottoman Empire.

A special correspondent visited the Turkish Embassy in Portland place, where one of the secretaries said:—

"The marriage will be held as legal both in Turkey and Egypt. There is no question as to that. The only thing is that the wife of Prince Hassan becomes a Turkish subject. Should the question of divorce arise, the matter would be laid before the Mohammedan religious authorities, who would have the power to dissolve the marriage if they saw fit. Such divorce would be held good in Mohammedan countries, but whether in view of the civil marriage taking place in England, an English divorce would also be necessary to make it effective in European countries I cannot say.

"As to the position of Prince Hassan's wife, she becomes a Princess by courtesy, just as Prince Hassan, by virtue of being a member of the Khedival family, is a Prince by courtesy. Should there be a divorce his wife would no longer be entitled to call herself princess.

"Whether she will be recognized in Turkish and Egyptian society depends entirely upon the attitude of Prince Hassan's family. It is a personal matter which will be decided by the head of the family.

"As to the Princess going into seclusion upon her arrival in Mohammedan countries, that depends entirely upon the wife's religion. If she remains a Christian she will find no difference in her life, being free to move about in society as she does in European countries. If she changes her religion and becomes a Mohammedan, then, of course, she will be obliged to wear the veil and conform to the customs of Mohammedan wives."

When told of the speculation that was rife as a result of the marriage, the secretary said:—"People have very vivid imaginations when the East and its customs are mentioned. There are a number of cases of Mohammedans marrying Christian women, the latter having retained their religion, and their lives are as happy and as uneventful as those in Occidental countries."

LONDON PREPARING TO REPEL CROOKS

Scotland Yard Will Do All in Its Power to Protect Coronation Visitors.

(Special Despatch.)
London, Saturday.

THE hundreds of international crooks and grafters who intend visiting London this summer and are hopeful of reaping a bumper harvest during the coronation time will be annoyed to learn that Scotland Yard has prepared extensive plans for their care and reception.

Every device of the English law will be employed to keep them out of the country, and if they should happen to slip in, every device to harry and prevent them from doing business will be enforced.

Information which Scotland Yard has received leads it to believe that a perfect locust-like swarm of crooks from all lands intend to descend upon London this year. Superintendent Frank Frost, the head of the criminal department of Scotland Yard, is fully cognisant of the situation and is arranging the most effective disposition of his eight hundred detectives to cope with the unwelcome invasion.

Arrivals at every English port, including Liverpool, Plymouth, Southampton, Fishguard, Dover, Folkestone and others, will be subjected to a scrutiny by experienced detectives from the Yard, and any recognized crook will be detained and rejected under the Alien act. But this port precaution is only the skirmishing line of the campaign, so to speak. A large force of detectives will be set aside to spend their time at the leading hotels and restaurants, watching for crooks and harrying them away if no real definite charge can be brought against them. The hotels will be most anxious to co-operate with Scotland Yard, not only prompted by the desire to rid their hostleries of undesirables and to protect their guests, but for their own protection as well, as under the English law a hotel that harbors thieves is liable to lose its license.

Periodical raids and round-ups will be made at the various night resorts where these criminal petrels are sure to congregate. The section of the Metropolitan Police act which gives the police power to arrest any one on suspicion of loitering about the streets for the purpose of committing a crime will be rigorously enforced. Men with records, or known to the police, will be generally judged by the English magistrates to be loitering about for no good purpose unless they can definitely show to the contrary, and be sentenced to three months' imprisonment. At the end of that time, under the new Alien Criminal act which has been introduced, they will be deported, and if they show their faces again in England a two years term will be the penalty.

WINDSOR WILL BE THE ROYAL HOME

King and Queen to Make the Castle in Future One of Their Chief Residences.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

AS quickly as trains de luxe and fast speed automobiles can carry them the "great world" is now returning to England. King George and Queen Mary have returned to Buckingham Palace, where they will remain until they return to Windsor Castle for Whitsuntide and the Ascot race meeting, for which a series of big parties will be entertained.

The formal announcement that for the future the King and Queen intend to make Windsor Castle one of the chief places of residence, needless to say, has given the greatest satisfaction to the townfolk of the royal borough. During the reign of Queen Victoria the castle was sadly neglected, for it is an open secret that her late Majesty had almost a dislike for the historic pile. Consequently, when King Edward came to the throne an immense amount of work had to be done to set the interior of the castle in order, and during his short reign many forgotten treasures which had been stored away for more than one generation as so much lumber, had hardly been sorted and restored.

At Windsor the King and Queen occupy the handsome suite of private apartments that were arranged in their present form by the direction of the late King Edward. These extend along the whole of one side of the great corridor and command magnificent views over the terraces and the gardens of the castle, very bright just now with the beds filled with dainty spring blossoms, with the Great Park in the distance, and finally ended by the dark foliage of Windsor Forest.

The Queen's suite comes first as one passes along the great corridor, and is closely adjacent to the suite of state apartments that is reserved for the occupation of foreign visitors of the first rank to the castle. The principal apartment of the Queen's suite is a beautifully furnished drawing room, in which Her Majesty spends a good deal of her time. Its large windows open directly onto the terrace, and the room is sunny to a degree. It is decorated in cream, gold and delicate shades of green—Her Majesty's favorite colors—and her love for old French furniture is plainly to be discerned.

SOCIETY IN LONDON SEES LIVELY DAYS

One Essential to Keep "in the Swim" Is a Purse That Bulges with Money.

(Special Despatch.)
London, Saturday.

JUST at present every one is as fresh as paint, but very soon, when the court goes out of mourning, when there is polo at Hurlingham and Ranelagh by day, dinners and dancing and the opera by night, and two or three big functions every week, it will be absolutely essential at any rate to appear to be nearly worked to death or stand outside the social swim. The other essential will be a bulging purse, for most of the festivities anticipated are of the kind to which the harmless necessary check spells open sesame.

London never saw such a crowd of society weddings as are now being hurried forward; the Royal Academy at Burlington House will shortly open, and then will start the polo season, with all its attendant delights of tea on the lawn or coffee in the moonlight after dinner at Hurlingham, Ranelagh and Roehampton. Then come Chester races, for which, among others, there is always a big house party at Eaton Hall, the seat of the Duke and Duchess of Westminster.

Mrs. Anthony Drexel, who has just got back from America, is going to be one of the great hostesses of the season in London. Rumor has it that her always splendid entertainments are to surpass all previous records during the coming summer. Her house, in Grosvenor square, is one of the finest in London, filled with priceless art treasures, genuine Empire furniture, magnificent tapestries and old masters galore—Raeburns, Hoppners and Reynoldses. The reception rooms, which are all on the first floor, lend themselves admirably to entertaining on a large scale. It is one of the few London houses that have a musicians' gallery overlooking the grand staircase.

GOING THREE WAYS AT THE SAME TIME

(Special Despatch.)
London, Saturday.

Mr. Laurence Irving, manager, has produced a play at the Duke of York's Theatre by Mr. Laurence Irving, dramatist, in which that well known young actor, Mr. Laurence Irving, has the leading part. It is called "The Terrorist" and is a powerful little play of Russian political life. The brutal Governor does not get assassinated because he is smart enough to get the female nihilist to talking, and so she forgets the pistol in her muff and the object of her call.

There were two other new short plays brought out, also, "The Forest of Happy Dreams" at the Queen's and "Our Nervous System" at the Playhouse. Both will answer the purpose quite well as curtain raisers, when hardly anybody is in the theatre.

Mr. Cyril Maude is giving a charming revival of "Cousin Kate," with Miss Ellis Jeffreys in the same part.

THE LADY IN LILAC

A Short Story.

I.

"It is of no manner of use to attempt to write, or read, or think in this appalling noise," said Mr. Travers aloud, as he leaned out of the window of his hotel. Below him a row of donkeys, patient and apparently well fed, stamped on the cobble stones and shook their bells. In this occupation they were imitated by a large number of horses attached to cabs and omnibuses. Dogs—Mr. Travers counted no less than fifteen—poodles, pointers, and mongrels, ran backwards and forwards, eager, excited, loudly barking. There had been a fete on the previous day, and every child seemed to be the happy possessor of a hoarse-sounding trumpet, or a toy that whistled or squeaked. An old man was playing on an instrument closely allied to the bagpipes. All the grown-up people seemed to be shouting, arguing, or laughing. One in particular seemed to persist in screaming "Hourra! Hourra!" at the risk of cracking his voice for all time. Mr. Travers, cursing him in his heart, believed that it was merely the "Courier" that he was recommending to passers-by. Then a deafening ringing of bells became the dominant note in this babel of sound, until to Mr. Travers' despair, the town crier came down the street beating his drum loudly and ever louder. The English visitor could endure no more. He flung his "Baedeker" on the polished floor, seized his shady hat, and went quickly down three flights of stairs out into the town. Far above him the mountain peaks, of volcanic origin, showed grey and grim above a restless sky. It was a relief to look away from the hubbub of earth into the calm of their stern faces. Travers, going along the narrow village street, mentally resolved that no persuasion from his bland London doctor should ever induce him to undergo a "cure" in this valley again. He wandered aimlessly about, pacing the alleys under the trees where the band played; he looked into a small room where a group of perspiring people were risking their francs at petits chevaux; he bought a yellow novel for himself and a lace collar for an old aunt from whom he had expectations, and returned slowly to his hotel. The restaurant was already full when he entered it, and seated himself, feeling very solitary and depressed, at a small table by the window. At another table in front of him sat a tall gentleman, wearing a frock coat of liver colored cloth, tightly fitted at the waist, and whose hair was beautifully parted down the back of his head. A little further on a group of children, including a fat boy of some fifteen summers, stiff bare-legged above his socks, were making merry. A short man, in an alpaca coat, was telling humourous stories to a lady who brandished a toothpick and laughed incessantly in response. At the table facing Mr. Travers sat a very stout woman dressed in pale blue satin, golden haired and gorgeous. "Ah! le bon gigot! le bon gigot!" she cried, as the carver drew near her with a joint of underdone mutton on his tray. Travers felt too entirely gloomy to become cheered even by the sight of an Englishman's favourite dish. His French was not good enough to enable him to chaff the carver, or to bully the waiters, as did his golden-haired neighbor; so he amused himself by watching the changes of her face as the dishes did or did not please her. She smiled upon a braised duck, scowled at a harmless pudding; and grew gloomy at the approach of dessert. The peaches were no doubt less ripe than they should have been, and as Travers rose from his chair, he saw the lady fling one of the hardest at the head of the chief waiter, to be deftly caught in the air by a subordinate. As the Englishman, with a smile on his listless face, went towards the door, a newcomer entered the room. A woman, whose face at once attracted him. It was not very young or very fresh, but the features were delicate in outline, and the eyebrows beautifully shaped. The lady was dressed quietly and gracefully in pale lilac. A hat of a deeper shade of mauve threw a shadow over two dark grey eyes of singular softness. Travers could not resist giving one long, backward glance as she passed him. He saw that she went towards a table next to the one at which he always dined. "It will indeed be a rest and pleasure to look at her to-morrow," he thought, as he passed into the sitting-room to read the "New York Herald." A young Austrian, with whom he had a slight acquaintanceship, came up to him, and the two agreed that the "cure" was exhausting, the place dull, and the guests insignificant or vulgar.

"Ah! yes, but there is an exception," cried the Count after a pause.

Travers raised his eyes enquiringly.

"A fair countrywoman of yours, just arrived."

"A tall woman—with dark eyes—graceful—dressed in mauve, perhaps?"

"Ahh! you have seen her? Yes, it must be she. I met her last year at Marienbad. Her name is Mrs. Stanford."

"Stanford? I knew a fellow called Stanford rather well at Eton."

"She is a charming woman!" cried the Count. "Ful of grace, of talent, of true sympathy. I shall make you acquainted."

Travers murmured his thanks.

"And you must not look so despondent, my friend! You are young—only twenty-five, I think you said? What matters three dull weeks after all? They pass, they pass!"

Travers answered that he knew it was partly his own fault, that he had not the gift of making quick friendship, that he was insular and prejudiced. The Count answered him that on the contrary he was a delightful companion, gay, witty, and amiable, and smiling and bowing, they parted.

II.

His cure on the following morning appeared even more wearisome than usual to Charles Travers. He discovered, with a sense of half-surprise and amusement, that he was looking forward with unusual impatience to the breakfast hour. But when he entered the restaurant the chair by the little table next him was empty. He glanced round the room. The gentleman in the liver-colored coat, the fat boy in socks were there as usual. The golden-haired lady, wearing rose-pink to-day, was fiercely arguing with the carver. "We have magnificent sheep—absolutely magnificent," he said sternly.

But she only cried, "Take away the mutton—it is altogether disgusting!"

The door opened, and Travers started. Walking slowly and gracefully, with her small head rather in the air, the woman who had so attracted him, came up the room. She sat down opposite to him, and as she studied the menu the young man could observe her without embarrassment. She wore her auburn hair in a knot at the back of her head and its waves under the mauve hat caught the sunlight from the window. Her face was not that of a very young woman—Travers guessed her to be thirty-five, perhaps. There were faint lines round her eyes, and an expression that was a little sad about her mouth. Suddenly she looked up, and met Travers's earnest gaze. A very faint pink color passed over her cheeks, and he thought that perhaps the soft eyes smiled, although her lips did not move. She did not look at him again, and her breakfast was finished before his. As he watched the tall figure—with its training lilac skirt—going out of the room, he was astonished at the feeling of annoyance that took possession of him. The rest of his meal was hurried over, and as he approached the door of the salon, he was rewarded by a glimpse of a violet hat bending over a newspaper. He entered, and began to read the Petit Parisien upside down; the lady in mauve appearing absolutely unconscious of his presence. Travers, with a feeling of distinct pleasure, observed her small wrists and delicate hands. He thought of three girl cousins of whom he had seen much lately in England, and of one especially, Isabel, whom he suspected to be more than a little interested in him. They were all excellent young women, particularly Isabel. They played golf and hockey with great credit to themselves, and Isabel had quite a respectable musical talent. But they wore sailor hats always too much on the back of their heads, and their hair had a way of coming down when there was a wind, and there was always a gap at their waists between their cotton blouses and sensible tweed skirts. The lady in lilac had enchanting ruffles of lace round her neck and at the foot of her dress. Her hat was put on exactly at the right angle, and Travers thought how becoming her veil was, with its large spots showing the whiteness of her skin beneath.

"Good-morning, madame!" said a cheerful voice behind Travers; and the Count passed him, and stood bowing before the charming visitor. Her voice, her laugh, her smile, all were attractive. Travers blushed painfully when his friend suddenly drew attention to him, and introduced him to the lady. Then the three talked a little—of the place, of politics, and of the marriage of a friend of Mrs. Stanford's. The Count informed the other two that he was going out on a motor with a friend, and Travers soon found himself left alone with the woman who so curiously attracted him. He knew that he was not at his best, that he seemed very young and shy and awkward, and absolutely wanting in originality. But Mrs. Stanford talked on with ease and friendliness. She liked Travers's plain, but pleasant face, and his unmistakeable air of an English gentleman. Possibly his blundering speeches and his evident admiration of herself amused her. She proposed a stroll in the gardens, and he joyfully assented, and feeling as if he were dreaming delightfully, he walked beside her in the shade.

"I knew a fellow called Stanford, at Eton—who had his knees; yes, it was the 'rickets,' said Travers.

Mrs. Stanford started a little—and Charles thought that she colored faintly.

"Let me see, when would that have been?" said she.

"About eight years ago."

"Only seven years!"

Yes. I was five-and-twenty last week."

"I did not think you were quite so young!" she said, looking up into his honest face, with its square jaw and frank eyes.

"I feel pretty old sometimes."

"Tell me all about yourself. You have relations you are fond of?"

And Travers told her many things, among others that his parents were dead, that his aunt, who lived in Leinster Square, was kind to him, and that he had some cousins—yes, very nice girls, and here he blushed vividly.

"I am sure they are pretty!" said Mrs. Stanford, with a glance that Charlie thought irresistible.

"Not in the least! I mean, they are nice, fresh-looking girls; but they are not at all what I admire!"

During a walk that lasted some two hours, Mrs. Stanford found out still more about her young friend. As they drank tea at the hotel she even went so far as to confess that he had wished to become acquainted with her from the very first moment that she appeared in the restaurant. She laughed, a little sadly. "Well, I didn't even see you!" she said, after a pause. And Travers, feeling snubbed, relapsed into a pained silence. Before the next three days were ended they had met constantly. They walked in the rather stuffy gardens, they listened to the pathetic swing of Strauss's valses; they took drives up the hills, and looked down on the luscious green of the water meadows, bordered by a stern darkness of pines, and up at the peaks backed by the brilliant sky of August. Mrs. Stanford was always sympathetic and gentle, but once or twice when she observed traces of emotion on Charles Travers' boyish face, or in the tones of his voice, an abrupt change in her manner chilled him. Also he found that she was reserved. She scarcely talked of her own life, beyond telling him that she lived in Hans Place, and hoped he would come to see her sometimes. Of her tastes and feeling he soon knew more. He discovered that she loved music that he could not understand and poetry that to him was like a foreign jargon. But perhaps this knowledge increased his respect for her. When three days had passed, he determined that he would brave the displeasure of his aunt in Leinster square, that he would risk the contingency of wounding his cousin Isabel—in short that he must ask this irresistible woman, ten years his senior, though she might well be, to become Mrs. Charles Travers. So it was with a feeling of extreme nervousness that he got into a carriage on a sunny afternoon and sat down beside Mrs. Stanford. She was looking her very prettiest; wearing a dress, new to him, of lilac muslin, with touches of black, and a veil of white lace over her hat. The bells jingled, the whip cracked, about ten harnessed donkeys standing in a row began to bray, dogs barked, children yelled, and away went the carriage gaily towards the hills. But Mrs. Stanford appeared resolved to keep the conversation at a trivial level. She laughed over the saying of the excitable lady in the restaurant; she commented on the beauty of an American girl just arrived.

"You are very critical, Mr. Travers!" This was in reply to his remark that the young girl had no expression.

"Girls don't interest me," he said gloomily. Mrs. Stanford smiled and sighed.

"I didn't tell you," she remarked, "that a very charming girl is coming to join me here to-morrow."

Mr. Traver's face fell. Perhaps, thought he, there would be no more drives, no more pleasant strolls under the boughs for him and the speaker.

"I suppose," he said, "that this young lady will always be wanting you to look after and bother yourself about her?"

"Jeanne is not at all selfish. And people think her lovely."

"I daresay I'm rude, but I'm sorry she is coming," growled Mr. Travers, trying to get Mrs. Stanford to meet his earnest eyes.

But she was looking almost as earnestly at the landscape below them.

"What a wonderful and dazzling green those meadows are!" she said ecstatically.

"Yes—yes. I wanted—" and his face grew crimson, "—to tell you something important, Mrs. Stanford—"

She turned round with a half smile.

"Not to-day, Mr. Travers, please! I feel too frivolous. I am enjoying this long drive like a child out for a holiday."

Something in her tone checked his persistence.

"To-morrow, then?"

"Ah! to-morrow is a long way off! Let's make the most of to-day. Besides to-morrow, Jeanne will be here!"

There was just a faint tinge of sadness in her voice.

III.

"Jeanne! Jeanne! you lazy child! I told you that luncheon was at half-past eleven!"

Charles Travers, moodily eating a hard slice of veal at his little table, looked up as he heard the swish of a skirt advancing. And when he had raised his eyes, he stared long at the young lady who sat down opposite Mrs. Stanford. The likeness between her and the older woman was nothing less than astonishing. It is true that the girl's hair was brown, and that Mrs. Stanford's tresses were full of glowing lights and shades, but both had the same marked eyebrows and eyes of velvet softness; the same delicate poise of the head, the very same half-pathetic smile. But Jeanne's face was sunnier, and her skin smooth as a nectarine. Beside her young brilliancy Mrs. Stanford looked like a faded pastel drawing. The latter leant forward towards Charles.

"I must introduce you to Miss Molyneux; Mr. Travers."

He positively shook from head to foot. Yes, of course, it was impossible, that this tall girl, with the figure of a goddess, could never have been the daughter of the woman he loved. Thought travels quickly, and before he had had time to murmur any word, he had come to the conclusion that even if she had been, he was his own master, and that he would propose to Mrs. Stanford on this very same evening.

The girl's voice and laugh were exactly like the tones that rang now always in his ears. She expressed herself as delighted with the roller, and especially with the donkeys and the boys, and declared her intention of climbing to the top of all the highest hills.

"You must take Mr. Travers as an escort," said Mrs. Stanford, gravely.

Charles felt hurt. Had she forgotten, or was she purposely ignoring all that he had said about his absolute indifference to young girls? He left the restaurant before the ladies, and went drearily out into the sun-baked street towards the public gardens. There he sat, upon a very hard iron chair, turning over in his mind the words that he would say to Mrs. Stanford. More than ever did he feel sure that he could not exist without her. This Jeanne, who had come to spoil their tete-a-tete, might be beautiful, but he thought he detected something mocking in her smile. What attracted him in Mrs. Stanford was not so much her charm of face, as her sympathy and tenderness, her knowledge of life, her gentle thoughtfulness. He rose, feeling sad and disheartened, he scarcely knew why, and it was late before he returned from a long walk up the hills. The band was playing in the garden as he entered it. The man in the liver-coloured coat was arguing with a stout gentleman in black, and Travers vaguely wondered for what special merit this very unintelligent looking person should be wearing a red ribbon in his buttonhole. The fat boy in socks was bowing with great ceremony to once a few years his senior, who wore knickerbockers and a small sailor hat, and whose greasy hair was carefully parted at the back of his head. And Travers saw Jeanne Molyneux coming down the path behind the boys, and showing her white teeth with amusement. She had a brilliant colour, and her fair face, under a pink muslin hat, attracted the attention of most of the men sitting near the trees.

"Ah! there you are, Mr. Travers!" she cried, in the most friendly manner. He took off his hat a little stiffly.

"You are going for a walk? It is rather late."

"I really don't know. But we are sure to have a glorious sunset,"—she looked towards the west, and her eyes grew graver.

"Where is Mrs. Stanford? I hope she is not tired?"

What Do You Think of This?

How often we hear men say, "Yes, I'd insure my life if I was only sure I could keep it up. I could pay it alright as long as I had my health, but if sickness or accident laid me low I would have to give it up and lose the protection just at the time I needed it most." Now, the issues a policy just to suit such a case. Under this policy, should the assured become totally and permanently disabled from any cause, the policy is kept in force during such disability, without any lien or charge against it. Or, in lieu of this, the Company will commence forthwith to pay to the assured one twentieth of the policy each year for twenty years. Should the assured die before the twenty annual payments have been paid, the remaining instalments will be paid to such beneficiary as the assured may designate.

SUN LIFE

Assurance Company of Canada

Is not this the Climax of Liberality? The Sun Life lives up to its motto of "Prosperous and Progressive." Investigate this proposition before insuring.

"A little perfection, not much—she's a darling, isn't she?"

Travers Lindsay.

"She is beautiful!" he cried, angrily.

"I call her a perfect wonder," remarked Jeanne. And after a pause, she nodded, "It's not everyone who has such a grandmother as that."

"What do you mean?" Travers's voice sounded [illegible] and hoarse. Jeanne looked up quickly at him.

"I thought you remarked just now that my grandmother was beautiful."

"I don't know what on earth you are talking about, Miss Molyneux!"

Jeanne laughed merrily.

"Didn't my old darling tell you that I was her grandchild?"

"She told me very little about you!" He spoke fiercely. Then, after a few moments, he added—

"But it's quite, quite simply impossible!"

"She is lovely, isn't she?" continued Jeanne. "And excepting her hair she is hardly at all—well—you know what I mean? hardly touched up! She has such good features!"

"She is the most wonderful woman in the world!" gasped poor Charles.

"She is. She is fifty-six. She told me that her youngest son, Uncle John was at Eton with you! Oh! Mr. Travers, do look at the sky. Didn't I tell you it was going to be glorious."

He stared blankly upwards, with a strange feeling of heart-sickness. He was still loyal to his idol. "This girl," thought he, "will never, at any rate have her charm—and no else ever was for me!"

From her window in the hotel, Mrs. Stanford looked out at the sunset. The clear light accentuated the lines in her face, and she seemed very tired. Facing her was the great mountain, half hidden by a huge floating veil of golden mist. To the left, clouds of softest orange sailed over a background of slate-like grey, and one little patch of sapphire, small and vivid, shone as a jewel set in a shield of bronze. In the foreground, a crag behind the slender cross of the church spire, caught the light, and shone out with dazzling brightness. Far away, to the right, every stone on a grassy hill, and each little black form of the patient donkeys grazing after their day's work, were defined with singular clearness. The street, usually so noisy, seemed to have become silent and solemn under the huge golden clouds. Faster and faster grew these drifted over the valley, ever more and more brilliant as they passed across the tree tops on one of the lower peaks. The mist crept down the face of the mountain, to roll away at last, and leave it bare, in its majestic loneliness. And as the end of the day drew on, the blue and gold of the heavens grew always brighter, and more vivid. Mrs. Stanford held her hand for a moment over her eyes. The beauty of the evening gave her a strangely mingled sense of pain and joy. Just below her, coming slowly down the street, side by side, she caught sight of Travers and Jeanne. They were talking and smiling, she, as was her custom, keenly interested in what she was saying, he listening attentively, and looking down at her kindly. Mrs. Stanford drew back a little from the window. The sky was becoming grey, and the glorious vision of yellow and gold was no longer there to dazzle her eyes.

But yet for a few moments they grew dim, and the great hill was veiled from her once again, but this time by mist that was made up of tears.

LOVE AND WOLVES

A Short Story.

"It has been simply delightful," said Nora Rousakof, jumping out of the sledge at her own door; "sledging by moonlight and through the forest would be lovely in any case, but hearing the wolves howl was a new experience—you are quite positive they were wolves?" she paused; both the brothers laughed.

"Noel and I know most things about forest life," said Cyril, who stood with her at the door, having assisted her from the sledge; and Noel, who held the reins, added, "I wish I had an acre of land for every wolf I have heard howl—weren't you a bit frightened, Nora?"

"Not a scrap—what, with two huntsmen of renown like you and Cyril? You must take me again one night."

"Would you dare come with us if we drove about after midnight? You might see one or two—" Nora clasped her hands.

"Oh, yes—yes!" she cried. "To-morrow if you will, or any evening; send me word beforehand, and I'll be ready—good-night."

She gave Cyril's hand a distinct squeeze. "Good-night, Noel," she added. "I hope your weren't dull up there on the box!"

"Somebody must hold the reins," he murmured. He would have liked to add, "God knows, I would prefer to sit quite close to you and hear your dear voice at my very ear, but that's Cyril's privilege."

The brothers were silent for a few minutes as they drove homewards, sitting side by side now, both very thoughtful.

"I am almost certain it's you, brother," said Noel presently; "she scarcely spoke a word to me, and how merrily and happily she chattered with you!" Cyril did not reply.

"Don't you think so yourself?" continued Noel, somewhat brokenly.

"I'm afraid it is as you say, dear brother," Cyril replied softly. "God knows I am truly sorry for you."

"And God knows that since it may not be I, I am glad with all my soul that you should be the blessed one; I am not so mean as to grudge you happiness, brother!" Noel's words were brave, and his voice too, until the last sentence, when it trembled a little.

Cyril said nothing, but he took his brother's hand and pressed it. He did not speak because he dared not tell Noel the truth, which was this:

Convinced as he was that Nora preferred him, the circumstance—instead of delighting him as Noel imagined that it must—weighed heavily upon his spirits. Until last autumn he had believed himself to be as much Nora's slave as Noel himself; both had known her and loved her from boyhood, they had played together as children, the Rousakofs being their nearest neighbors in the country, and devotion to Nora had been a kind of tradition between the brothers for the past dozen years; but this last autumn Cyril had made the acquaintance of an English damsel in St. Petersburg and—well, Nora's predilection for him had since weighed like a burden upon his conscience, for he knew not how best to act in the interest of all parties.

"How perverse are the ways of love," he reflected bitterly; "here is poor Noel dying for Nora, and can't have her because of me; and I am dying for Miss Dorothy Osborne, and can't tell her so because of Nora!"

"I'll tell you what we'll do, brother," he said presently. "The day after to-morrow we'll take her after wolves; I'll hold the reins and you shall sit by her and tell her straight out that you love her; we shall see what she will say!"

But Noel shook his head. "That would only make her wretched, because she would have to refuse me," he sighed. "Better that you sit by her and tell her of your love; I have lost her anyway, you see, so that it will make no difference to me, and—and she will be spared a painful conversation."

"Very well, be it so," said Cyril after a moment, and the drive continued in silence.

But though Cyril had seemed to enter into Noel's suggestion, he did not intend to carry it out. He would have a last struggle for freedom and Dorothy Osborne, and at the same time do his utmost for old Noel. He would plead for Noel; Nora should at least know that Noel's splendid heart was hers to take or leave. "I shall say nothing about myself this time," Cyril reflected. "It will be easy to see if she really loves me! God grant that I may be mistaken, for if it be as I fear, I almost think I would rather be in Noel's shoes than my own. Thank the Lord I have said nothing to Dorothy as yet!"

A deputation came up to the Manor House that evening, half a dozen peasants from the village of Kamarof; there were wolves about, and hungry ones; the frost was severe, and the brutes were bold. Rusloff had lost a sheep, Trubof a dog, Kumma had had an old horse pulled down—all this happened last night; there must have been a dozen wolves about the village. "Save us, barin," said the Elder or Starost, "they will eat us out of house and home!"

The peasant bowed low, and crossed himself in the direction of the icon in the corner of the room.

"Good," said Cyril. "We will do our best for you, Starost, my brother and I; meanwhile see that your live stock is properly safeguarded at night. Is any part of Kumma's horse left uneaten?"

"But little, barin—"

"Well, place what is left at the edge of the forest, close to a convenient tree; to-morrow night I will sit in the tree and watch for the brutes; to-night we will scour the forest roads for them with a squealing pig."

This method of driving hither and thither in the woods when wolves are known to be in the neighborhood is a recognized way of getting a shot or two at the animals. A small brass-fringed pig is placed in the well of the sledge, confined in a sack or a hamper, and it is the protests of the noisy little prisoner that form the attraction for the wolves, which soon begin to assemble, and to follow or accompany the sledge, at a respectful distance, in hopes of a meal.

During the day Cyril bade his younger brother ride over to the Rousakof mansion in order to ask Nora whether she would care to accompany them in their nocturnal wolf-hunt. "Make all the running you can with her," said Cyril, "for remember I am to have an innings to-night."

"It won't be any good," Noel sighed; "besides I'm always such a fool when she's there, and can't string two sensible words together!"

"Don't come if you feel at all frightened about it," he told Nora presently; "of course, there's an element of danger when there are many wolves about, as there seem to be now."

"I'm not in the least afraid," said Nora, "still if you would rather be without the responsibility of having a lady with you—"

"Oh no, do come," Noel interrupted hastily. "I'm—I'm sure Cyril would be dreadfully disappointed if you didn't." An expression of impatience—almost a frown—passed quickly over Nora's face, but Noel did not observe it.

"Well, I'll come," she said. "I shall be ready at nine o'clock to-night."

Punctually at that hour the brothers called for Nora. Noel sat on the box seat, holding the reins, the girl took her place beside Cyril. There was no need to ask whether they had brought a pig with them, for the little brute was in full voice, having recommenced his yells with redoubled energy when the sledge stopped at Nora's door, doubtless in the hope of inducing someone to let him out of his basket and take him back to his mother and brethren.

Nora laughed. "We shall not hear one another speak!" she said, but Cyril replied that the pig would not maintain his present level of noise production; he would quieten down presently, and would perhaps even have to be shaken up later on in order that his invitations to the wolves might be sufficiently pressing. "If he falls asleep we shall get no wolves," Cyril laughed.

Then the long drive began through splendid pine forests lit up by a full moon, a sight to be seen once and

MIRIAM CARPENTER'S WONDERFUL CURE OF SKIN DISEASE

After 20 Years of Intense Suffering.

"I have been afflicted for twenty years with an obstinate skin disease, caused by eczema. I tried remedies and doctors without number, and spent over one hundred dollars, but could get no cure. About two years ago their virulent form appeared on my face, and I thought I would die with the misery of it. The doctors, to whom I applied at the time, declared it slowly but surely poisoned my entire system. For the past three years I have been unable to do any labor. Suffering intensely all the time. Every morning when I awoke I found a quantity of matter lying [illegible] my face, and on my bed, some of them half an inch in size. LOVE AND WOLVES never forgotten. The hush of night was almost unbroken, excepting when the pig—his basket shaken by Cyril's foot or by a jolt on the road—gave out piercing lamentations which murdered the beauty of the silence.

From time to time some great bird asleep in the branches of a pine tree at the edge of the road, would wake in alarm and suddenly hurtle with much crackling of twigs and flapping of huge wings through the tops of the highest trees, deep into the sanctuary of mid-forest.

Cyril was somewhat silent, considering how he should commence the difficult enterprise he had determined to undertake; namely to plead for Noel. It was difficult because, supposing that Nora preferred himself, there was the danger of wounding her by seeming to desire that she should listen to Noel's suit. Nevertheless, the task must somehow be begun, and finished to-night.

Nora, too, was silent, drinking in the beauty of the solemn, moonlit forest that lay on every side of her. Her soul was elated with the majesty of the scene, her heart softened moment to speak to her of love. She was ready to respond to any soft emotion, she was in an ecstacy of contentment and delight.

As for Noel, on the box, he was silent too; as a matter of fact he had no one to talk to, but if he had he would have preferred to sit still and listen, for his heart was beating excitedly, waiting to hear the result of the proposal which he believed Cyril was about to make.

"Heaven knows what I ought to feel about it!" he thought. "I would not have dear Cyril's heart wounded and yet—how shall I survive it if she accepts him, how shall I live, where shall I go from my sorrow? My God, how I love the girl!"

Presently he heard the silence broken in the sledge behind him. Nora and Cyril had commenced a conversation, speaking softly, so that he could scarcely hear each word, though he listened with all ears. There was nothing dishonourable about this for he had told Cyril that he meant to do so.

Listen as intently as he would, however, Noel could not catch more than a half of what his brother said; Cyril did not intend that he should.

"...So I have ventured to ask you ..." he caught these words, "whether it is merely friendship on your side or....may hope that a sweet word...; in short, Nora, can you and...love..."

Nora's answer came to Noel's ears clearly and distinctly. She spoke in tones of exaltation, of concentrated, deep, certain feeling: there was no doubt and no hesitation; she spoke aloud and from the very depths of her being, so it seemed to Noel:—

"Oh yes—yes," she said, "call it love, Cyril; with all my heart and soul I love—" A jolt, just at the last word, set the pig squeaking so that Noel lost that one word, the most important of all, had he known it, for him!

Poor Noel, he listened no more, though the two behind him continued to talk. A dull booming and thudding had commenced within his head and heart; he sat silent, stricken.

"At any rate dear old Cyril will be happy—and so will she!" This was the saving thought that kept him from despair.

Noel roused himself with a start and looked to right and left. "And on the left three," he said—"No four, five—and some follow behind."

Nora clapped her hands with delight and excitement. It was indeed a weird sight. Lank, grey, rakish-looking creatures were to be seen wherever the eyes were turned,—running belly to earth, or travelling at a hand canter, dark forms against the white of the snow, threading the sledge, yet all, as yet, at a respectful distance, and out of range of the breech-loader shot guns ready for them inside the vehicle. Occasionally the moonlight would catch the eye of one of them for an instant, as he turned his head towards the sledge, illuminating it with a ghastly sparkle that lit and vanished in a moment.

Noel was wide awake now, so was his brother; both young men were well aware that wolves, mere harmless cowards when met with single or in couples, become extremely dangerous when packed; just as disaffected individuals among human creatures are comparatively innocuous, while an angry mob is as dangerous to deal with as a corps of madmen. Noel whipped up his ponies; they had seen and scented the wolves, and were already somewhat anxious, their ears working backwards and forwards, and their eyes showed white as they glanced to this side and that.

"Shout when you can, Cyril," said Noel. "It is five miles to Gorka, I will see to the ponies."

A moment later Cyril fired a shot. A wounded wolf uttered a piteous howl, quickly stifled by its companions, which fell upon the poor beast and pulled him down. The taste of blood excited them; they came nearer, baying, yelping, howling as they ran. Cyril fired again and brought down his wolf, but fully a score seemed to follow on, though many stopped to fight over the carcase.

"It is serious, Nora, but do not be afraid; with Noel to keep the ponies to their work we shall pull through we wanted wolves, but there can be too many of them!"

"Keep on shooting, Cyril," cried Noel from the box.

Cyril fired shot after shot, but the jolting disturbed his aim, and he missed several times; worse than this, on one occasion the ponies shied so suddenly from a daring wolf that made a dash at the head of the off horse that the sledge collided against a tree trunk. Cyril clutched at the girl by his side, and held on to her as the sledge righted itself; but the gun was thrown out with the concussion, together with the pig in its hamper; and Noel's gun, which lay in the straw at the bottom of the sledge, went also.

"Holy Saints, you were nearly gone Nora," exclaimed Cyril, white and trembling; "Noel, both the guns are lost—"

Noel made no reply' One of the ponies limped and was tiring; the situation was becoming somewhat dangerous. He whipped up his beasts and called cheerily to them; they responded pluckily. "Three miles, my jewels!" he cried. "A hundred jumps and you're at home—woo-hoop, boys! gallop!"

But the wolves grew more and more insistent; they crowded close in upon the sledge and one, from time to time, more rash than his fellows, sprang forward, as though to seize one of its occupants, though as yet his courage did not quite suffice, and his attacks proved but half-hearted. Several times, too, the horses were menaced, but Noel succeeded in keeping the brutes off by dint of vigorous lashing with his whip.

Terrified, panting, limping, the brave little ponies galloped on. One fell lame. Without an instant's pause Noel handed the reins to his brother. "Vanka is lame," he said, "I must cut him adrift!"

He climbed along the shaft and performed the operation deftly and successfully; poor Vanka, finding himself free, darted off into the forest pursued by half of the wolves. They found his skeleton two miles away a few days later. Petka, the surviving pony, was the gamest of little animals, but the weight of the sledge with its three occupants, combined with the pace, soon began to tell upon him. Noel had taken the reins again. There was still a mile and a half to go.

"He will not quite do it," Noel thought. Nevertheless Petka struggled bravely on for half a mile in response to his encouraging cries. Then he slowed off seriously, and panted ominously. Noel sat and brooded upon his lox seat.

"If I can do it," he reflected, "Petka may drag the tightened sledge in; if not, he won't, that's certain." And again—"what does it matter, so long as Nora is safe and Cyril survives to assure her happines. Besides, if I made noise enough, I might—" A moment later he spoke:

"Take the reins again, Cyril," he said, suddenly and speaking very rapidly. "Petka tires, the load is too heavy for him. I heard your conversation a little while ago. My dear brother will make you very happy, Nora—God bless you both and goodbye in case I—"

"Brother, what are you saying, what are you doing, shouted Cyril, "it is you that Nora loves, man, she—"

But Cyril spoke too late, or at any rate he was so far too late that Noel had already taken the fatal leap from the sledge into the snow, but his words reched his brother's ears and that made an immense difference as matters turned out. Meanwhile the pony, Petka, sprang forward, for Noel's twelve stone six suddenly deducted from his load, made his task considerably easier for him. Cyril would have pulled up, however, but that at the same moment Nora shrieked and fainted, nearly toppling over the side of the sledge, so that he was obliged to give Petka a free mouth, and see that his precious charge did not fall out among the wolves. Three minutes later the good pony had dragged them clear of the forest, and the few wolves which had followed them so far, the rest having remained to settle matters with Noel, tailed off and returned howling whence they came.

Cyril thundered at a peasant's door, it was the hut of Spiridon, one of the gamekeepers on the estate. He handed Nora over to the care of Spiridon's astonished wife—

"Three men and horses, quickly, Spiridon, and the guns, my brother is among the wolves a mile away!"

"Saint Nicholas!" exclaimed Spiridon, crossing himself as he ran to obey the barin.

Within twenty minutes Cyril and his men were back at the scene of the tragedy, or quasi tragedy; but by that time that had heard Noel's voice shouting uproariously from half a mile away, and they knew that all was well. Noel, it appeared, was up in a tree, addressing boisterous abuse to a company of a dozen wolves that sat and licked their lips beneath him; a volley soon scattered them, and down came Noel.

"How in the world did you do it, dear old chap!" asked Cyril, shaking his hand so long and so vigorously that Noel drew it away with a wince and a laugh.

"My good man, your words did it, not I; if you hadn't sang out that she loved me, by all the saints I should have let the devils have me; as things are, a thousand of the infernal mangy brutes shouldn't have got me; you should have heard me yell at them as I stood at the foot of the tree. I give you my solemn word, Cyril, they couldn't stand it; they fell back a minute, and gave me time to climb, though I think they have regretted it ever since, and have been trying to tell me so! Do you know, dear old Cyril, since you shouted those words to me, I am positively drunk with happiness—but, what a brute I am!—forgive me, brother, I quite forgot; of course—my happiness means your sorrow—I—" Cyril laughed gaily:

"Oh, no, it doesn't—I'm in love, Noel, but not with Nora," and Cyril proceeded to explain matters, to the wondrous delight of his brother, who had had no suspicion of the state of affairs.

Nora had recovered consciousness, though her condition of anxiety was deplorable until Cyril entered to tell her the joyful news of Noel's safety.

He came out again presently. "She wants you in there," he grinned.

"Cyril—for heaven's sake tell me, what am I to say!" murmured poor shy Noel—"I'd rather it was a dozen wolves—"

"Well, don't tell her so, you old fool," replied Cyril laughing and pushing his brother through the door" ay; "you may thank your stars I did your proposing for you; go in and do the kissing for yourself, that's all she needs just now!"

"The Light Beer in the Light Bottle"

Is Far Better Than The Government Regulation Requires

The Canadian Government regulation, regarding the brewing of lager, is probably the most exacting in the world.

It calls for a brew of Hops, Malt and Water only. The American Government places no such restrictions on her brewers.

O'Keefe's "Pilsener" not only complies with the Canadian Government regulations—but is brewed of the very finest Hops and Malt, and pure filtered Water.

FORBID HAREM SKIRT

Police Find Regulation they Can Apply to New Fashion, But Case Will Go to Higher Court

The timid and hesitating among the votaries of fashion in Germany are expecting soon to have their doubts as to the propriety of the harem skirt settled one way or another by a judicial decision. A publican in the town of Rendsburg, in the hope of inveigling new customers to try the quality of his liquors, persuaded his barmaid to wear the novel garment while she was on duty at the taps, and was duly rewarded by an influx of the curious thirsty. Unfortunately, the fresh fame of his establishment spread, and reached the ears of the police, whose first thought in Germany, when they are confronted by an unfamiliar phenomenon, always is, whether it can be forbidden. They were not long in unearthing a regulation which, in the interests of decorum, prohibits waitresses from wearing "conspicuous" apparel while they are at work.

On the strength of this, the police called upon the landlord to pay a fine. He, however, is of opinion that the decrees of fashion are not subject to revision by the Prussian police, and has appealed against the decision, so that the law courts will be called upon to pronounce a verdict on the moral aspects of the harem skirt.

JEWS ARE REFUSED

Settlement in Western Australia, as They Want Species of Autonomy

Although the British public hears but little of the work done by the Ito, that is the Jewish Territorial Organization, founded by Mr. Israel Zangwill, of London, it is nevertheless trying harder than ever to find a country in which Jews may settle down and call their own. Mesopotamia was high in favor as the site of a Jewish settlement on a considerable scale—the principal object of the organization. It seems, however, that this region has now fallen into the background, principally on account of the opposition of the Turkish Government. And Western Australia has come into favor. Western Australia is by no means a new region so far as the Ito is concerned. Some years ago Mr. Zangwill was both directly and indirectly in negotiation with its government on the subject of a Jewish autonomous settlement within its boundaries, and it was understood then that the negotiations had broken down, not because the West Australian Government had any objection to a Jewish immigration, even on a large scale, but because they could not consent to any species of autonomy.

GYRO-COMPASS NOW

Theoretically Possible to Indicate Latitude of Place, also Direction

At the meeting of the Royal Astronomical Society in London, Mr. Shipinstone, of the form of Messrs. Elliott Bros., gave a demonstration of the gyro-compass, illustrated by a working model of the apparatus, which appeared to do all that was required of it.

It transpired that, theoretically, it is possible to construct a gyrostat which would indicate the latitude of the place as well as the direction of the north and south line.

TWO CHICKEN HINTS

Some poultry yards are so fortunately situated that there is abundant protection from wind and rain, and later in the season from sun, but some are exposed, and in this case it is necessary to provide artificial shelter. If the chickens are exposed to wind and rain their development is retarded and they are less healthy. It is a good plan to place the drinking vessels beneath shelter, as during cold weather it prevents the water from freezing, and during hot weather it keeps it cool. Green food should not be stinted, as this is a very necessary item in the diet of chickens. Those birds enjoying their freedom will obtain all they require, but those in runs should be supplied liberally with green food in one form or another. Without it the blood becomes heated, and the internal organs are likely to get out of proper order.

THE FAMILY HEARTH

A NOVEL DECORATION

Little sacs of satin ribbon are one of the most charming decorations of the season and are taking the place of bows on lingerie. They will be used extensively on lingerie gowns, at the waist line and on the three-quarter sleeves. They will finish the gathered ends of chiffon and lace shoulder scarfs and will also be utilized as parasol decorations. They are taking the place of loop sometimes on baby caps and hats and are seen on the lingerie hats of older children, where they nestle among the laces. Little garlands of the satiny buds appear on lace petticoats and are intended to show through the thin white gown. The second idea of double-faced ribbon is used for these pretty decorations, which are not at all difficult to make.

An excellent whitener is made by adding a handful of borax to the pail of soap suds used in washing floors or woodwork. The borax also renders the suds less trying for the skin.

Lacquered brass should never be cleaned with anything but a soft rag, dampened in tepid water. Bright brass can be rubbed with soft soap and vinegar and then polished with whiting.

IF BECOMING IT IS RIGHT

Wear anything you please so long as it is dainty and effective in itself and becoming to you, says a prominent Parisian millinery authority. It would seem as if this axiom were the ruling law this season, for never did one get such a variety of styles, shapes and trimmings. To group them into classes is next to impossible, so few features being common to any large number.

So far as toques are concerned, the cottages and pliability of so much of the straw used to build them up, necessarily makes for variety. Not only does each milliner mould it according to her likes to begin with, but afterwards moulds it anew to suit physiognomy of the woman who is to wear it. Only a professional would believe out of what shapeless straw pouches many of these deftly and becoming toques are made. Many hats, too, look strange enough before they have passed through the milliner's hands, come with a great flap sticking out on one side; others preternaturally wide at the back.—"The Millinery Trade Review."

White silk shirt waists should always be washed in tepid water. Warm water will turn the silk yellow.

Philosopher and poet are alike in the verdict that the safety and perpetuity of any nation lies in the homes of its people.

* * *

Many women nowadays want to turn the home into the street, so to speak, and make "the world's work" everything and the home life nothing. But a restful home, once experienced, is a joy above the promises of progress to disturb; and a restful—and intelligent—woman alone can make it.

* * *

A friend of ours lost a fine Jersey cow the other day—tied her too long. She got tangled up in the rope and broke her neck—a case of too much rope. How many instances there are in life that are counterparts of the above! The cherished of our hearts, our own flesh and blood, are often allowed to gradually slip away from us and out from and under our control, all because we love them so much and hate to restrict their pleasures or say "no" to them.

* * *

The world need never shed a tear for its sainted dead. They are safe as the harvest is when the farmer has bound it into sheaves and stored it away or as the roses are when the gardener has wrapped their roots in straw and housed them from the storm. They are safe as the larks that fly singing from the green earth out of reach of the huntsman's snare and the aim of the cruel sportsman. They are safe as warriors who march beneath worn battle-flags no more, but sit down with conquerors to festivals of song and wine. They are safe as young lambs are when shepherds fold them from the blast and carry them over rough places in tender arms. Weep for the living all you choose; let your tears be watered above the dying bed where your darlings lie like wreaths of fading snow beneath the glance of death; but if you believe in God, and hold any faith in heaven, shed not your tears for the blessed and happy dead. Christianity gives the lie to its belief when it garbs itself in sables and mourns without comfort for those who have exchanged the inn for the palace, the wilderness for the land of peace and plenty.

20. Verses 19-23—Was the disease of leprosy supernaturally inflicted as a punishment, or was it contracted in a natural way?

21. Does God in these days send disease upon people in any other way than through the laws of nature? Give your reasons.

To these merits add the GUARANTEE you need here—two pairs for one if Pen-Angle Hosiery disappoints. Note next the modest price you need pay to get all this—and then remember name and trademark when next you need hosiery.

GREAT DANGER IS ANTICIPATED FROM FLOODS IN THE NORTH

TALK OF A NEW CITY HALL IN THE AIR REPAIRS TO POLICE COURT DISCUSSED

Estimated That the Improvements Planned Would Cost $5000 and Aldermen Are Opposed to Spending That Sum on Old Building.

ACCOMMODATION NEEDED

At a meeting of a Committee of the Whole Council held last night, the question of the improving of the city buildings came up. To build a new city hall at present was out of the question, but the Committee worked according to the supposition that they might be able to erect a new hall in the course of five years. They did not feel like spending $5,000.00 in repairs to the old structure, and then in a few years vacate it. $2,000.00 was the amount of repairs that was considered sufficient at a former meeting, but Mr. Blackwell, the city architect, figured that $5,000.00 would be required to put the old building into sanitary condition. He did not have any plans or specifications to show the manner in which the repairs would be made, so it was decided that the matter be left over until specifications be drawn, and presented to the Council.

His Worship, Mayor Morrow, presided, and the following Aldermen were present: Aldermen Anderson, Duncan, Bradburn, Edgar, Metheral, Graham, Kerneghan, Morgan, and Brown. There were also present Messrs. W. H. Moore, Vincent Eastwood, and Richard Hall of the City Trust Commission, Mr. Blackwell and the City Solicitor.

Mayor Morrow stated that at the last meeting of the Council, a motion was made that the City Trust Commissioners be requested to go ahead with the improvements to the Police Station and the [illegible] and the thought it would be better to have the Trust Commissioners present at the meeting last night, and whatever their opinion was, the Committee would act thereon. He stated that at a former meeting, it was estimated that $2,000.00 would be required to make the necessary repairs to the City Buildings but that Mr. Blackwell was present and had estimated the repairs at $5000.00. This amount seemed more than those present cared to spend on the old buildings.

Mr. Moore stated that he felt quite sure the citizens would not care to have a new city hall, or city buildings erected at present, but that it was necessary according to what had been said, to have the Police Court apart from the Municipal buildings. The question of a site for a new city hall also was discussed.

Regarding the site for city buildings Mr. James Kendry, who was present, stated that he could think of no better site than where they were at present standing.

The Mayor did not know whether it would be better to go on with building on the present site or purchase a site somewhere else.

Ald. Metheral was of the opinion that it would be unwise to spend more money on the old buildings, considering that in a few short years a new city hall would be erected and the old buildings would be no use. It was figured that to put the suggested additions to the old buildings and remodel them over, they would extend out to the Market scales, at the south side, taking up the laneway at the back of the Police Station, but not interfering with the scales. The foundation of the Police Station would also have to be fixed, and the basement excavated.

Mr. Kendry, following up the idea of remodeling and enlarging the present buildings, suggested that Mr. Blackwell draw a plan, and find out what the necessary expenditure would be. He said that it was quite evident that some improvements would have to be made to the Police cells and station, as they were in a very bad condition.

Ald. Bradburn prophesied that inside of ten years a new hall would be built, and then the old buildings would be of no more use to the city.

Ald. Kerneghan was of the opinion that the city buildings could be repaired enough to do for five or six years, and a separate Police Court built for the expenditure of $5,000.

Ald. Morgan moved that Mr. Blackwell draw plans to that effect and given an estimate.

Ald. Kerneghan thought that this was a good idea and that they should decide whether they would build a separate Police Court or not, before they had an estimate made.

Ald. Morgan sympathized with this idea also, and further offered that a separate Police Court should be erected, no matter whether a new city hall was erected in five years or not. He said that all the leading cities of the Province were adopting this principle of erecting public buildings.

HON. ADAM BECK IS TO GIVE AN ADDRESS ON POWER

At the meeting of the Committee of the whole Council, held last night, Ald. Morgan moved, seconded by Ald. Brown, that Hon. Adam Beck Chairman of the Hydro Electric Commission, be invited to come to the city on Wednesday.

His Worship Mayor Morrow, related a conversation he had had with Mr. Beck, and stated that the honourable gentleman was desirous of coming to the city to straighten out the little matter, which came up at the Council some time ago, regarding the reading of the power report. He was particularly desirous of coming on Wednesday, as that would suit him better.

It was decided that he address a pub lic meeting in the Collegiate Institute Assembly Hall, (if it could be procured), on Wednesday evening, his subject being based on the Power Question. It was suggested that an effort be made to get him to come in the morning, so that he would have the day in the city; also that the Reception Committee be given authority to entertain him. This was added to the motion given above.

The yacht Wannetta will also be placed at the disposal of tourists who are disposed to select this beautiful summer resort as a place where they might spend their vacation and yet be in touch with the outside world.

Sensational Stop Of A Runaway By Capt. Thomas

Once again has Capt. Thomas, of the Peterborough Fire Department stepped into the foot lights of public notoriety. This time he appears in a brand new role, that of a horse catcher. This morning as Mr. and Mrs. Alex. Braithwaite, of Ida, Cavan, were approaching Bertie Morrow's hill, one of the rines of the horses bit broke. The animal immediately started to run; even the declivity of the above mentioned hill did not tend to deter it in its mad career. It continued to exceed the new speed limit up Aylmer street until it reached the fire station and there it met its Waterloo in the person of Capt. Thomas, who succeeded in making one of the most sensational captures of runaway horses that has been seen in this city for some time. The horse was held at the fire station awaiting the pleasure of the owners, who had jumped out of the buggy as soon as it started to run away, to come and claim it. They turned up about an hour later. With the exception of a large quantity of eggs, which were destroyed, no damage was done to the outfit.

IN MEMORIAM.

One year ago to-day His Majesty, King Edward VII died. In his eight short years of kingship, by the exercise of kingly qualities of statesmanship and personal solicitude for the causes of humanity and peace, he made himself a niche in the Westminster Abbey, of great kings, and in the hearts of his millions of subjects at home and abroad, a very warm place in the respect and esteem of good men everywhere. He well earned the title of Peacemaker, and that his influence is a permanent factor in influencing human affairs, is shown by the fact that the prospects for enduring international peace are bright on the first anniversary of his death, of his entering upon the enjoyment of the divine benison, "blessed are the peacemakers," than ever before in the history of the world.

LLOYD GEORGE RECEIVES FLOOD OF CONGRATULATIONS

Special to The Examiner.

LONDON, MAY 6.—"I shall require all the enthusiasm and all the support possible to carry out this great scheme," said Chancellor Lloyd-George today, replying to the flood of congratulations on his state insurance bill, which in cablegrams received from Canada, Germany and other parts of the world, was described as the biggest thing in the way of social problem financing ever presented by any government.

ACTION OF THE COUNCIL IS BEING CRITICIZED

Retail Merchant's Association Will Call A Meeting To Discuss the Decision Not To Re-engage the Industrial Commissioner---Mr. D. O'Connell's Views on the Subject.

The action of the City Council last night in deciding to dispense with the services of Industrial Commissioner Duggan is coming in for some severe criticism to-day.

"I have no doubt there will be much indignation expressed," remarked Mr. D. O'Connell, chairman of the Industrial Commissioner Committee of the Board of Trade, when seen by the Examiner to-day. "My personal opinion is that Mr. Duggan is the best man possible for the position. He has done a lot of work and done it thoroughly and I do not see [illegible] Council may have an opportunity of hearing the views of citizens upon the subject."

Mr. Thos. Barrie, president of the local Retail Merchants' Association, stated to the Examiner that that body will call a meeting of the merchants to discuss the matter. As far as he knew the sentiment of the Retail Merchants was embodied in the resolution forwarded to the council, asking for the re-appointment of Mr. Duggan. There might be some features about the case that the merchants were not aware of and therefore they thought it advisable to call a meeting and go into the situation.

The Retail Merchants' Association feel," remarked Mr. Barrie. "that it would be only throwing money away to discontinue the office now. We feel that Mr. Duggan has been interested in laying the ground work, as it were, during his first year, and is now in a position where results may be expected, it would be only business to allow him a chance to take advantage of the preliminary work that he has accomplished."

SAYS LABOUR ORGANIZATIONS WILL BE GRATEFUL TO HIM

Special Wire to The Examiner.

MONTREAL, MAY 6.—Looking like a prosperous commercial traveller, Detective William J. Burns, who scored the famous coup in the Los Angeles case, is here in connection with the David Russell case against the Pinkerton agency. In an interview with your representative here, Burns expressed complete confidence in the evidence and merits of McNamara case and said that the labour organizations in Canada and the U. S. would, when the facts came out, be grateful to him for removing from their ranks the prisoners now in Los Angeles.

GREAT FLOOD AT MATTAWA CAMPS ARE SWEPT AWAY

Special Wire to The Examiner.

MATTAWA, ONT., MAY 6.—Danger is increasing this morning from the great floods caused by the sweeping away of the dam built by the Dominion government at the foot of Lake Temiskaming. The new Canadian Pacific bridge is in great danger and traffic on trans-continental trains may be delayed while temporary tracks are laid round about for several miles detour. Residents and storekeepers in the lower parts of the town are moving out to the highland and whole construction camps have been swept away. It is feared with some loss of life. The dam was the important part of the conservation scheme to provide water for the proposed Georgian Bay canal. Eminent engineers here from Ottawa with an army of men worked all night, but the waters is still rising.

BIG BUSH FIRE RAGING TEN MILES FROM KENORA

Special to The Examiner.

KENORA, ONT., MAY 6.— A big bush fire is raging near the east end of Clearwater Bay, about 16 miles from here, and with very dry conditions at present existing, may spread over considerable territory. Men have been sent east along the line to battle with the serious outbreak there. The conditions are regarded as serious and recall the fearful bush conflagration of last year near Fort Francis.

The Coronation Celebration Committee Is Appointed

Rev. Canon Davidson, Chairman of the Chimes Committee, Major Clegg and Captain Mills, representing the 57th Regiment, and Aldermen Anderson, Brown, Graham, Metheral, Bradburn and Edgar, met in the City Committee rooms last night, and formed a committee to look after the programme for Coronation Day. The following were the members comprising the committee: Ald. Anderson, Ald. Bradburn, Major Clegg and Capt Mills.

Majority of the Aldermen Seemed to be in Favour of the Office but Voted Against the Present Official Being Engaged.

DISCUSSION ON QUESTION

"Shall we have an Industrial Commissioner, or shall we not?" was the question that confronted the Committee of the Whole Council, which met last night. After the question had been thoroughly threshed out, it was decided that the services of the present Industrial Commissioner, Mr. Duggan, be dispensed with. His term of office will expire on May 15. Ald. Morgan was the first speaker on the subject. He asked the Committee three questions, thus:

1.—Does the city need an Industrial Commissioner?

2.—Is Mr. Duggan the right man for the position?

3.—Is $4,000.00 per year too much to pay for these services?

To the first, he thought that the city needed such a man, but to the last two questions, he did not like to venture. It was suggested by Ald. Anderson, that he be kept on another year.

Ald. Brown stated that if a man was worth $4,000.00 for one year, he should be worth $20,000.00 for five years, and he asked the Council if they thought that they would get $20,000.00 worth of benefit out of having such a man.

Ald. Graham stated that he was not in favour of having an Industrial Commissioner at all. And Ald. Anderson balanced this assertion by saying that he was firmly convinced that the city needed an Industrial Commissioner. He stated that it was special work, and if Mr. Duggan was turned down, all the money spent in the last year, would be as good as lost. It would be the same in the event of securing the services of a new Commissioner. He pointed out the fact that the merchants had contributed to that branch, and that they would not like to throw their money away. He expressed his opinion to the effect that the Commissioner should be kept for another year.

Ald. Brown returned to the attack, by stating that the merchants were not contributing any more, so it could not have been so profitable or they would not have stopped. He also thought that Mr. Duggan was indirectly responsible for the Rubber Tire Co. by-law not passing. He stated that no by-law will pass if there are no means of conveying the voters to vote. He thought that Mr. Duggan could have prepared for the event and had arrangements made to take the men to vote.

Ald. Edgar stated that he felt much like Ald. Anderson. He thought that Mr. Duggan should be kept on another year. He pointed out the fact that he had only been there one year and he had done a lot of work, which, in the coming year would have ben chosen. He claimed that Mr. Duggan should have been given a chance to finish his work.

Ald. Duncan moved, seconded by Ald. Kernegan, that the City Industrial Commissioner be not engaged for the coming year. The action carried, supported by the Mayor, Ald. Keenegan, Ald. Metheral, Ald. Duncan and Ald. Brown; and opposed by Ald. Edgar and Ald. Anderson. Before the action was taken, the Mayor was asked his opinion on the subject. He stated that he had been in favour of an Industrial Commissioner, and that it was a pretty hard thing to go in and get industries all at once, but Mr. Duggan had spent a whole year and not got a single industry of his own dig up, and that in view of this, he was not in favour of keeping him. The action was then taken, as sigted.

GOOD TREATMENT AND GOOD SERVICE.

The Board of Education boasts of having the best staff of teachers in the province. And this is largely because it acts upon the principle that the laborer is worthy of his hire. On Tuesday night the salaries of some of the teachers were advanced, which was both an act of justice and a necessity. To secure the best teachers in face of the competition of Western Canada, adequate wages have to be paid; and within reasonable limits, liberal payments to secure first-rate services are the best economy. A good machine is always worth its oil. A staff of teachers well treated, and not paid grudgingly starvation salaries, will go into their work with spirit, willingness and effect. This principle, and the attitude and interrelation it involves, could, with advantage, be applied to the City Council's relations to the Fire Department. It goes without saying, that effective fire-fighting service is the most important feature of civic administration. A well paid, well-manned — and well paid and well-manned are inseparable ideas—fire department, will save the city thousands of dollars every year, while the false economy and irritating attitude that provide an inefficient and ill-paid fire brigade, may easily mean losses amounting to thousands of dollars. The public interests demand that there should be no friction as between the City Council or a part of it, and the Fire Brigade. We have a well-housed and well-equipped Fire Department, but this will not avail anything unless it is well-manned at all times—not weakened by introduction of new and untried elements from time to time. This is the consideration that the civic authorities have to deal with.

CHILDHOOD'S OPPORTUNITY.

No greater encouragement to thrift has ever been presented by any country than is offered to the people of Canada under the provisions of the Canadian Government Annuities Act, which was unanimously passed by both Houses of Parliament in 1908. While any resident of Canada may purchase, the Act was devised chiefly to enable wage-earners and others with limited income, to make absolutely safe provision for the closing years of life in a way that would be impossible to make any other conditions available. For example, a mechanic, whose weekly wage is but a little larger than his weekly expenditure, is, by paying $1.00 a week, purchasing Annuities for his two boys aged 5 and 7, the Annuities to become payable at 60. From that time as long as they live a yearly income of $547.76 and $407.78 respectively will be paid them by the Government. If they die before they are 60, the money paid in will be refunded to their heirs together with 3 p.c. compound interest, so that for a total of $2,808 to be paid in an income combined of $1,045.54, or greater than the income to be derived from an investment of $20,000 at 5 p.c. would be received. The one thing is feasible for a man even with a very limited age, while the other would be quite impossible for him. Taking advantage of the low rate to be obtained when the children are young is what parents should aim at, the children would carry the payments themselves as soon as they are able.

What a payment of 25 cents or 50 cents a week would purchase at any age may be ascertained upon application to S. T. Bastedo, Superintendent of Canadian Government Annuities, Ottawa, to whom letters go free of postage, or better, attend the lecture in the Collegiate Institute Hall on next Tuesday evening, May 9th, by Dr. Samson, explaining the provision of this splendid system.

BEAUTIFY THE CITY.

There are two main essentials, or rather, perhaps, one essential with two parts, necessary in the work of civic beautification. Cooperation is the main thing, and its two parts are the civic authorities and the people at large.

For the first time in the history of the city or town, perhaps, has the corporation shown as much and effective disposition to co-operate. Of course, so far, what the city has done is only a beginning, but it is a good beginning.

The cleaning of the streets, the removal of rubbish, is the first step; and, when the city authorities see what a vast improvement is made in the tidiness of our streets, they should certainly be encouraged to continue further; and the logical next step would be to put the street in such a physical condition as will permit of the best results, in the way of appearance, from keeping them clean and tidy.

Where the pavement is inside the line of trees, the absolute essential to a finished condition of the street is a boulevard. Heretofore, private enterprise, with, sometimes, the grudging cooperation of the street authorities, has provided boulevards. But this should not be. It is enough for the citizens to do to keep the boulevard tidy and well mowed.

But the city should provide the boulevard, especially where it can be done, practically without expense. With the policy of street cleaning carried out the collected earth, decayed leaves, etc., which make ideal foundation material for boulevards, might be easily disposed of by being drawn to the nearest street—or to the same street — where a boulevard is wanted, instead of being carted a mile or two away.

With general prevalence of boulevards, citizens would be encouraged to provide beauty of premises and in this way the work of city beauty represented by the Horticultural Society, and its work would be greatly advanced. The campaign for membership is going forward pretty well, but not half as fast as it would do if the people are assured that, if they undertake to beautify their own premises, the city will co-operate in attending in part, if not altogether, to the public places which the streets really are.

Our streets, with the abundant lines of trees, could be made a continuous stretch of park, if the whole street lines were provided with boulevards. These would be kept as neatly as a park, by the citizens, if the city would provide the boulevards, which can be done, as shown above, with little cost.

PROTECTING POPULAR INTERESTS.

More and more, as time passes, do public utilities enterprises, come under government control in the interests of the public. While corporations that manage these facilities have their rights respected, the rights of the people are at the same time protected. On Thursday Hon. G. P. Graham, Minister of Railways and Canals, introduced important amendments to the Railway Act. It provides, among other things, that telegraph, telephone and express companies shall be placed in the same relations to the commission as railway companies, and be compelled to furnish statistics; that proper provision shall be made for the protection of forests in sections of country through which railways run, on the lines set forth by the commission on conservation and the Dominion Forestry Association; that railway companies holding lands not used for railway purposes shall be placed upon the same footing before the law as ordinary individuals; that provision shall be made for agreement between provincial railway boards and the Dominion railway commission in questions which affect the interchange of traffic and the control of rates; that further protection shall be given to municipalities in the matters of the transfer of wires and sewers over railway tracks, and in regard to fencing; and, also, that, in addition to prescribing the amount which shall be paid for electrical power under certain conditions, the railway commission shall have the right to decide as to the quantity of power which may be needed by any special locality."

Probably the most important feature of the bill is one which gives the railway commission power to step in where a company (or a corporation which has acquired a company's charter) allows a railway to fall into a state of dilapidation, and insist that the subsidy paid to such a company shall be a lien upon such company's property, and that such property may be sold under such an order. It was the minister admitted, a drastic proposal, but was one which was needed in the public interest. The Dominion Railway Commission has used its power so wisely in the interest of the public welfare, that it is reasonable to be certain that it will use its enlarged powers with equal regard, for just dealing as between the public and the bodies that give services, provided for the public, and upon whose patronage their successful operations depend.

Significance Of Imperial Conference

(Brantford Expositor.)

It is now settled that Sir Wilfrid Laurier will attend the Imperial Conference. The conference, like many other things British, has grown. To the schemes of Imperial federation which were mooted some years ago there were serious practical objections. The recasting of the British Parliament so as to make it a truly Imperial Parliament would have been a formidable task. It would have necessitated the creation of local Legislatures for England, Wales, Ireland, and Scotland. The present Parliament of the United Kingdom is overcrowded with business, and could not bear any additional load. This at least is true of the House of Commons; and to colonial representation in the House of Lords there are serious objections. What is desirable is a closer union of the British peoples, and the warmest friend of the House of Lords would not contend that it is a representative popular body. A colonial peer would lose touch with his own people and would not be likely to get into touch with the struggling masses of the United Kingdom.

Even if the constitution were recast, and a new Parliament, created for dealing with large Imperial questions, difficulties would arise. Such a Parliament would have to decide, for the United Kingdom, many of such matters as are decided by our own Parliament for Canada. As we would not be willing to give up any part of our autonomy, our representatives could not, in fairness, take any part in legislating on such matters for the United Kingdom. Questions would always be arising, as to whether the colonial representatives should speak, or vote, or remain aloof from the discussion.

These difficulties, together with the strong and growing desire for better knowledge and understanding of the various parts of the Empire, gave rise to the project of a periodical gathering of Ministers of the Crown representing all the self-governing commonwealths. It is true that the conference has no legislative power, but it would be a great mistake to suppose that it has little or no power. Very important matters are decided by caucuses and political conventions which are not recognized by the constitution, and by informal conversations between Ministers and other influential persons. Consultation, advice, the exchange of information, are real and important forms of political action.

A Minister attending the conference has a double duty to discharge. He is bound not to compromise or imperil the autonomy of which he is the chosen guardian, or to commit his commonwealth to any project of which its people would not approve. At the same time he has to consider the vast power for good that may be exercised by intelligent co-operation among the British peoples. Social problems of much importance are being handled in the United Kingdom, in Canada, in South Africa, in Australia, and New Zealand. In the centre of the Empire there are problems due to congestion, custom, and tradition. In Canada, in Australia, in South Africa, there are problems due to an opening up of huge tracts of new country to settlement. It is recognized that migration, the movement of population from congested to unoccupied areas, is a matter that needs intelligent direction. Along the Pacific coast of Canada and the United States, and in Australia, there has been disposition to develop what is called 'a white man's country.' This feeling cannot be dismissed as mere race prejudice. It is a recognition of the seriousness of the task of moulding the citizenship of a new country.

The greatest of all means of union are communication and the exchange of information. The New Zealand Ministers who visited us some weeks ago greatly interested Canadians by their account of the progress of social reform in that country. The test of all government is the condition of the people, not the amount of money or other wealth they possess, but the development of their manhood and womanhood. The true bond of Empire is a common desire to promote this grand object. The only intelligent use of Imperial fleets and armies is to protect the people who are carrying out these tasks and making these experiments, and thus advancing civilization and lifting humanity to a higher plane. But the world seems to be moving toward a condition in which so vast an amount of human energy will not have to be expended in merely suppressing the malefactors of the world and the disturbers of its peace.

TWO BENEFICIARY SYSTEMS.

Canada's system of Government Annuities may seem a small affair compared with the gigantic scheme of state aid involved in Lloyd-George's plan of state insurance against unemployment, sickness and invalidity. The bill in this regard introduced on Thursday provides for an expenditure for 1912-13 of 35 millions of dollars, rising to 100 millions in 1915-16. The Chancellor in introducing his bill, divided his proposal into two parts, one dealing with sickness and the other with unemployment. By the provisions of the measure every worker whose annual earnings fall below the income tax level of £160, or approximately $800, will be compulsorily insured against illness, so as to assure him the receipt of five shillings per week during his incapacity. Toward this the worker would contribute about one-half, the same being deducted from his wages, while the balance would be paid jointly by his employers and the State.

The weekly assessment against the insured would be eight cents in the case of a man and six cents for a woman, representing, as the Chancellor put it, "two pints of ale or one ounce of tobacco."

Everyone in the class mentioned between the ages of sixteen and sixty-five is included in the plan. The employers would pay six cents weekly for every employee, and the Government contribute four cents for each of the insured.

Mr. Lloyd-George estimated that his plan would affect 14,700,000 men and women. Provision is made whereby women will receive thirty shillings in maternity cases on condition that they do not work for a month following childbirth, and for free medical attendance for every contributor.

Although in cases of permanent disability the sick allowance would be five shillings weekly, ten shillings would be allowed for the first three months in the case of men, and seven shillings sixpence in the case of women. Those who can be shown to have invited incapacity would receive no insurance, though any necessary medical treatment would be provided.

This scheme, though in principle it invites a certain measure of self-help on the part of the beneficiaries, is not nearly so valuable in developing habits of thrift and saving as the Canadian government annuities system. Under the latter, deposits with the government may begin at the age of five years, in view of an annuity at 55 or 60. The saving of small amounts necessary to make the regular deposits develops the habit of thrift in this regard in the very young, and there is every reason to assume that this habit, applied to one specific purpose would extend to other expenditures by the individual.

The habit of saving for proper purposes, is one of the things that would strengthen the financial capacity of the country in proportion to its general application. We all know that a large proportion of the poverty and suffering that exist in any country is due to improvident waste of the means coming into the possessor's hands from time to time. We all know that, in millions of cases, enough money is wasted on unnecessary and foolish expenditures, to adequately provide against the "rainy day" and the period of illness or inability. If only a very small part of the money thus wasted were devoted to making payments to provide a government annuity, the payer would, at the age of 55 or 60, be sure of an annual income all the rest of his life of any amount he choses to provide for, up to $400 a year and as low as $50 a year.

There is no expense to the contribution; he deposits his money with the government and his payments are dealt with in such a manner that he receives from 10 to 12 per cent. on his money invested with the government, in the form of an annuity payable quarterly. This annuity is payable till death, and carries with it no idea of charity. The possessor of an annuity only gets his returns from an investment he has made; and the comfort it purchases is won with as much dignity as the income a millionaire may derive from his investments.

This government annuity system should be used by every wage-earner, and every man of moderate income. It is surprising that more general use is not made of it. This is, perhaps, because its merits are not well enough known. To remedy this defect to a certain extent, Dr. Samson, lecturer on the subject of the Government Annuities System, will give an address in the Assembly Hall of the Collegiate Institute on Tuesday evening, May 9th, to which there is, of course, free admission and a cordial welcome.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

WILL you please write and tell me whether it is customary to acknowledge Valentine postcards? I do not know, and I am so anxious to do the courteous thing."

So a young person wrote to me a few weeks ago.

I answered her to the best of my ability, but I confess I could not help smiling at that last sentence. You see it didn't seem possible to me that anyone who was really "so anxious to do the courteous thing" could have written asking a favour without enclosing a stamp, to say nothing of a self addressed stamped envelope.

She has many brothers and sisters in this lack of courtesy. Almost daily some epistle comes to me asking help or information or advice, and obtaining to do the decent thing by applying me with the vehicle in which to send what is wanted.

It seems to me rather like going over to borrow something of a neighbour, and not only expecting her to supply the molasses and milk, but nonchantly announcing that you didn't see fit to bring a cup and that she will have to supply that, too.

Only in the case of a stamp it is a gift, not a loan, that's asked.

Yes, I know two cents is a very little matter.

But a hundred two cents is more, and a thousand two cents means a good deal more to us.

Incidentally you might be interested to know that I do not supply the stamps, so that my protest is quite an impersonal one.

And now, while I'm talking to my correspondents, I might as well say one or two things which have been on my mind for some time.

I wish you people who write and ask me questions, the answer to which could only be of very limited interest, would sign your names, thus giving me a chance to answer you by private letter, instead of expecting the answer in the column. You see my column is my open letter to many thousands of people, and I do not feel that I ought to take up the space with matters that will only interest one person, or at best, a very few people.

Please do not be afraid to sign your names, whatever you write. I have never published a name, and I never will without the owner's express permission.

I cannot close any talk with my letter friends and acquaintances without once more expressing my thanks to the dear good folks who have sent me words of appreciation and cheer and constructive criticism.

Dear friends, do you know my heart just aches with happiness sometimes to think there are such kind people in the world, and that fate should have brought me in touch with the in, when I so little deserve that wonderful good fortune.

That you should think such kind things to yourselves would be sweet enough of you, but that you should actually take the time and make the effort to put them on paper and send them to me—it is wonderful.

I thank you.

I often say from the bottom of my heart "God bless you and prosper you as you deserve." May others gladden your lives with the needful of appreciation and encouragement spoken at the right moment, as you have mine.

To Mr. Roy Powell, on his birthday:

My friend on this, your natal day,
A token small I send you,
A flower, from fancy's garden, gay
While festive joys attend ou.

I will not wish you plenteous store
Of treasure rich and golden,
Nor gems, from India's distant shore
Or ocean caverns olden.

Nor that the fickle hand of Fate
Your path with roses scatter
High pomp and state upon you wait
While crowds obsequious flatter.

For what are these compared to wealth
Which you are now possessing,
Sure, common sense, with youth and health
Are fortune's greatest blessing.

Nor shall I wish that lengthened be,
Life's fleeting years of sorrow,
Or that your eyes may ever see
A bliss-winged, happy morrow.

What matter if the task is o'er
At morn or noon-day shining?
Or if we bear the burden sore,
Till evening's rays declining.

Ne'er by the week, or month, or year,
The labourer's wage is meted,
But as the work appointed here
Is well or ill completed.

But higher far, for you my friend,
Ascends my proud ambition,
That fairest gifts, kind heaven may send
The joy of hope's fruition.

That honour's meed the jewel rare
Above all value prizing,
Untarnished you may ever wear
Earth's gain, or loss despising.

Both fearless of the world's dark frown
And heedless of her smiling
The soul's bright genius never drown
In sensual streams beguiling.

I'll wish you love, and friendship's dower
To stand unmoved without them.
Or failing these, at least the power
To stand unmoved without them.

And firmly walk the narrow way
Leading upward to the portal
Where, through an eternal day
Victors wear the crown immortal.

Round your dwelling day and night,
Still, may guarding angels bending
Shield you with their pinions white,
From all ill each step defending.

—Mrs. A. F. Calder.

MR. R. J. TODD CRITICIZES THE ACTION OF THE COUNCIL

In Regard to the Requested Resignation of Deputy Chief and Captain of the Fire Department—Was Present at the Meeting and Gives His Impressions of the Proceedings.

Editor, Examiner.—In a foyer of justice, many and fairplay, I feel that the time has come when I can no longer keep silent—if you will allow me space to express my very humble opinion on the action of our City Council, or at least some of its members. We have no right to condemn all for the weakness of a part of the Board. At present they are handling a matter that is of vital interest to every citizen, one in which the interest of the whole city should be considered—not merely the interest of one or two individuals, namely, the matter of a proper fire fighting department.

Judging from the attitude of some of the Aldermen, one would think they had been elected to fight the fire chief instead of serving the interest of the city. I feel that if our city is to prosper, and the business properly attended to, that this bickering and fighting against certain officials must cease. Let us look this matter fairly in the face and see whether or not our interests are being looked after. It is a well-known fact that since the organization of the new Fire Brigade a few of our citizens have bitterly opposed it; whether they are right or wrong in that opposition is not for me to say. However, I can say I have listened to a great deal of the wrongs of our Fire Brigade, especially of the Chief, from the opposing faction. This caused me to be suspicious of the Brigade, and I have watched them carefully, and have seen nothing wrong more than the usual wrongs of the human race. When I learned through the Press that the firemen would be on trial before the Council that night, May 1st, I concluded to hear what the trouble was. Now, sir, to my very great surprise, when the question came up for discussion, I found no one to speak. He said everything had been made, no firemen there to answer the charges. There was, however, a request from a committee of the Council, asking Assistant Chief Grange and Captain Thomas to resign.

It is proper, I think, for the public to view the ground on which this resolution carried. Alderman Metherel, the big gun in the discussion, at once showed that it was the Chief he was after and not the men mentioned. He said everything had been wrong from the beginning, but no wrongs mentioned, only so many men leaving was proof of something being wrong with the house.

As to the two criminals, they had knowledge of certain statements made against one alderman. The proof he gave for this was that the writer of the letter in question said so. The writer of the letter he designated as a "poor, simple fool." Thus two faithful officials of our city, or gentlemen workmen, if you please, are to be beheaded on such evidence. In this the way Alderman Metheral and his colleagues would wish to be treated? I think not. Alderman Metheral further blamed the Chief for the men leaving; then he insists upon those tendering their resignation who stand by the Chief and don't leave! "Consistency, thou art a jewel."

Alderman Morgan had moved the resolution and would therefore stand by it, and, if needs be, go even further and get after the Chief. This was his statement.

Alderman Kernaghan, being the one insulted, asked for an apology. The Mayor insisted on the right of the men receiving an official notice, and have a hearing. This brought Alderman Brown to his feet, who spoke strongly in favor of the men having a hearing, then took his seat and voted for the dismissal of the men without a hearing. This ended the discussion, and the men must go. Thus we learned something of the justice and business methods of our city fathers.

I shall not attempt to pass judgment on the action. I have just aimed at giving the public the arguments concerning our firemen as I heard them, and allow the public to judge. As for myself, I have always made a practice of upholding our representatives, and I am very sorry to have to record my utter disapproval of the action of the Council on this occasion. And would say if this is a sample of the fruit of the ward system, my opinion is that the sooner we abolish it the better.

Envy and spite are not the elements that should control a city. Righteousness and truth should govern public affairs as well as private; then shall we have prosperity and peace. Thanking you for valuable space.—Sincerely yours, R. J. TODD.

Talk Of New City Hall In The Air

said that those which have all the buildings together are regretting the fact, as all the hard characters around the city always assemble around the Police Station in the mornings.

Some of the aldermen suggested that the old Police Station might be fixed up a bit to do for a few years longer, but Chief Thompson was very much opposed to such an action, and told of the filth of the Police cells. He told the Aldermen that he could bring them into the cells at that moment and show them thousands of bedbugs crawling up the walls.

The Aldermen thought that it was not necessary to have such a state of things existing; that the place could be cleaned up. The Chief maintained however that it could be cleaned up, only by tearing down the old walls and erecting cement ones.

Ald Metherel offered the suggestion that they build a permanent police station, and not spend a lot of money on old buildings that would soon be going out of commission. He told them that they should look to building a new city hall in the near future and act accordingly.

Mr. W. H. Moore stated that he supported the idea of repairing the old buildings, when the expenditure for that purpose was only $2,000.00, but when it went away up to $5,000 and possibly, six or seven thousand, he would not support it.

Ald. Bradburn, still following up the idea of erecting a new hall at a near future date, suggested that the Police Station be established in the municipal part of the present buildings. And if $2,000.00 worth of repairs were made to the old building it would last for seven or eight years.

The Chief stated at this point that the Council were leaving themselves liable to the law at present, by the state of the cells in the Police Station. He said that the cells for the male prisoners and those for the females were all in the same room and facing each other, thereby being contrary to the present law. The Chief stated that the present Police Station was too small, anyway, that there were not enough cells. It was suggested that an addition be made to it, but that did not suit the Chief either.

Ald. Bradburn then asked that an Committee be appointed to look into pairing the old Buildings and building a new Police Station.

Ald. Kernaghan moved that a small Comittee be appointed to look into it. Mr. Moore reminded him that they did not want to go by it, they had an express Trust, and that Ald. Graham, coming back to the idea of repairing the old Police Station, wanted to know what would be the matter with having only a one-story Police Station, and having more cell room. He thought that if something like this was done, that it would relieve the Police Station, and that it was the most needing place at present.

If the additions are made, and the remodelling made to the old buildings it was thought that a new heating system would have to be installed. Mr. Blackwell gave the estimate for this at $375.00.

Ald. Morgan moved, seconded by Ald. Graham, that the expenditure be cut down from $5000 to $2500, and that specifications be drawn by Mr. Blackwell and presented to the Council. This motion carried.

WHY SLEEP IS NECESSARY

During sleep Nature removes the cells and tissues wasted by the activities of life. Without sleep physical bankruptcy is quick and certain. Mrs. J. Dorpsher, 429 Bedrville street, Peterborough, Ont., writes: "I can say for a certainty that Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food is a splendid medicine, for besides steadying the nerves, it built up my sleep wonderfully and enabled me to sleep and rest well."

A GREAT REMEDY FOR LITTLE ONES

That is what thousands of mothers say of Baby's Own Tablets. We have received thousands of letters praising them — we have yet to receive a single one condemning them. The Tablets cannot possibly do harm even to the newborn babe. They contain none of those poisonous drugs which make the so-called "soothing" powders so dangerous to the welfare of little ones. They are a scientific medicine prepared by one of the greatest specialists on childhood ailments and should be kept in every home where there are babies or small children. Mrs. Fred McCarthy, Pinewood, Ont., writes: "I have used Baby's Own Tablets and have found them a great remedy for little ones. I would not be without them." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

WILL END NEXT WEEK

The last of the series of popular band concerts by the band of the regiment will be given in the Armouries on Friday next, May 12th. An excellent programme will be given.

The band will be assisted by Miss Edna Pringle, soprano soloist. As usual, ample seating accommodation will be provided and indications point to this being one of the best performances of the season.

Linoleum

Very Artistic Designs in these Practical Floor Coverings

We have just imported from Scotland an immense range of artistic designs in inlaid and printed linoleums in two and four yard widths.

The Scots have obtained a high degree of perfection in making these very practical floor coverings. They will give a maximum amount of wear. Poor linoleums crack and grow dingy in colouring after a little service. These do not.

Many dainty bed room effects are included among the host of artistic patterns.

No time like the present for freshening up the home after the wear and tear of winter. Look around and see where new linoleums are needed and then come and see our assortment and how little they cost.

RICHARD HALL & SON

The Eloquence Of An Old Peterborough Boy

The following "Dalhart, Texas" notes is an old Peterborough boy, in the person of Rev. Father Patrick J. Murphy:

At the statewide prohibition rally held last week at Waco there were hundreds of prominent men from all over Texas present, many of them famous as platform speakers and political orators and yet a Dalhart citizen, unknown to the majority of the audience and unheralded with any press agency, captured the convention with a masterly address and became a man of state wide prominence within an hour.

Father Patrick Murphy, of Dalhart became easily the leading character of the gathering and was almost mobbed with applause.

Tom Finty, the veteran correspondent of the Dallas News, said that Father Murphy's speech was by far the biggest gun yet fired in the campaign. It was ordered printed for distribution in the campaign. An incident related as an illustration in the speech gave Dalhart as the place where it occurred, which was an error of the press correspondents, Henrietta, being the town referred to.

It was an honour that is accorded to but few men thus to make a splendid use of an opportunity and men who are great enough to do it attach no personal significance to their achievements. With the rare modesty that makes him seek over to minimise his own deeds, Father Murphy prizes the tributes of the press, only as a token that he has been able in a measure to meet his conceptions of his public duty.

But both those who agree with him and those who do not are proud of the bouquets that are being showered upon him all over the state.

The Metropolis of the West is Undoubtedly

VANCOUVER

BRITISH COLUMBIA

The City of Vancouver, Canada's most westerly commercial and industrial metropolis, is situated on a promontory of the mainland of British Columbia, overlooking the waters of Burrard Inlet, the Gulf of Georgia, with their perenially fascinating wealth of scenic beauty, and the north arm of the Fraser.

Although the City was founded as late as 1886, it now boasts a population of 180,000 souls, and is admittedly one of the most important commercial centres on the Pacific Coast. Its commercial standing is founded on the fact that it is the terminal of three trans-continental railways, and the home port of several fleets. Trans-Pacific steamship companies, besides the railway lines already entering the city, two others are rushing construction to Vancouver, while several lines to connect the various parts of the interior of the Province with Vancouver are being surveyed.

Vancouver enjoys an ideal location, being particularly well adapted for business purposes, and at the same time possessing the best possible conditions for a place of residence. The business section of the City, together with the older residential portion, is situated on a peninsula with gentle elevation, sloping both northward and southward to the salt water chanels which all but surround it.

The inland waterways connecting with Burrard Inlet afford splendid facilities for short excursion trips to nearby camping grounds and pleasure resorts. Across the Inlet, close to the City of North Vancouver, are fishing streams, mountain trails, and splendid roadways leading to scenic features of remarkable beauty.

Vancouver is about 150 miles north of Seattle, and there are very efficient transportation connections between the two cities, both by sea and land. The sea trip is through scenery of surpassing grandeur and beauty, and for a large part of the journey by land, the shore line of the Sound is skirted, affording charming views of wooded islands and distant mountains.

A trip to the Coast would certainly be incomplete that did not include at least a week's stay at Vancouver.

Visitors' Views

"Vancouver, 'the Liverpool of the Pacific,' is a solid, well-built town, much superior in architectural display, and in appearance generally, to any of the new cities on the American side that I have seen. There is nothing shabby about it; the streets are well paved and well kept. Everything seems to wear an appearance of prosperity and permanence, and nothing is out of repair. There are no empty store-rooms or vacant houses, and wherever you go, buildings for business and residence purposes are under construction. The saw mills and salmon canneries are well built structures with a permanent look about them. The docks are solid and are kept in excellent order. Vancouver is altogether one of the most attractive and prosperous looking towns I have seen in the West."—William H. Curtis, in Chicago "Record-Herald."

"To my mind, the coming great city of the West is Vancouver. Broadly speaking, the reason is that it will be a terminus of four great railway connections—the Grand Trunk Pacific, the Canadian Northern, the Hill combination from the south and the present Canadian Pacific Railway. Add to this the tremendous natural resources of the Province and the large Oriental trade, and I see no reason why Vancouver should not be the largest city in the Dominion. I believe it will. I saw more evidence of substantial building in the shape of warehouses and factories in Vancouver than in all the other places put together."—E. F. B. Johnson, K.C., of Toronto, in "The Globe."

"Vancouver is now the recognised gateway between the East and the West, the gateway through which the double streams of commerce between the Occident and the Orient, and between Britain and the self-governing nations of New Zealand and Australia will flow in ever increasing volume, until Vancouver shall become, perhaps, the first and most important port in all the world."—Earl Grey.

"Stanley Park is the finest pleasure ground I have ever seen. I was amazed at the size of the trees and the rankness of the vegetation. The Park will prove to be an asset of priceless value."—Sir Michael Hicks Beach, ex-Chancellor of the Exchequer.

"Stanley Forest has nine miles of roadways and twenty-two miles of footpaths, with here and there benches upon which pedestrians may rest. The roads are in perfect condition. I wish the Californian Commissioners of the Yosemite Valley could see them. I do not know of a more lovely drive. In all my travels I have never seen a more unique or attractive park than this."—W. E. Curtis, in the Chicago "Record-Herald."

Facts and Figures.

Vancouver was incorporated in 1886. In the same year it was destroyed by fire. In June of the year following, the first railway train arrived. Since that time Vancouver has grown to a city of 180,000 people. Civic works valued at nearly 9,000,000 have been carried out. Of this amount, two and three-quarter millions are for sidewalks and streets; $800,000 for sewers and drains; $134,363 for fire halls and equipment; $385,000 for bridges, and $1,368,405 for schools.

The value of assessable property in the City grew from $2,630,077.00 in 1897 to $17,442,398.00 in 1907, and to $54,727,810.00 in 1907. It is now $61,703,905.00, and the assessment just made adds $10,000,000.00 to the latter sum.

An investor cannot find a better and safer proposition than the acquisition of property in a growing and prosperous community. The Scott Brokerage Company of Vancouver, B. C., have opened a branch in this city and will supply the citizens of Peterborough with any information regarding British Columbia and principally Vancouver property.

BANQUET GIVEN TO DEPARTING GUEST AT KNOX LAST NIGHT

Miss Warren, Sunday School Teacher at Knox Church, Was Presented With an Address by Members of Her Class ---Leaves for Edmonton To-day.

Church workers nowadays are a scare quality, especially in Peterborough, where they seem to be "here to-day and away on the morrow." And persons of the stamp of Miss Ella Warren, of Knox church, are a still scarcer article to find.

Miss Warren leaves for an important position in Edmonton shortly. And to give her a parting send-off, her company of boys—styled the A. S. K. class—and the teachers and friends of the church held a banquet in the Lecture Hall last evening.

To the number of about sixty, the gathering sat down to a substantial repast, presided over by the Rev. Mr. Keith, supported by the guest of the evening.

After justice had been given to the good things, a lengthy programme of toasts and musical items was gone through.

The usual introductory toast, "The King," proposed by the chairman, and replied to by Mr. R. Dickson, in a few words, was enthusiastically responded to by the company standing and singing "God Save the King." Then followed "The Church and Sabbath School," proposed by Mr. Clifford, who dwelt on the work of both organizations, and with Miss Warren's great part in both, especially the latter. Coupled with the reply was the name of Mr. Palton. Next toasts were "The A.S.K. class and "The Go-Forth Club"—both touched upon by Mr. McKenzie in a racy and interesting manner, also showing where the guest's chief and heart's work lay. Mr. Thompson replied in a reminiscent little speech for the A.S.K. and Mr. Sanderson for the Go-Forth Club.

The principal toast of the evening, "The Guest," was proposed by Mr. A. Robinson, of the A.S.K., who in a few well-chosen sentences expressed the feeling of deep regret of the boys at the departure of their teacher. They looked upon her as an associate and personal friend, and it seemed something from their lives her going away. The reply for Miss Warren was undertaken by Mr. Lou Ingram, who modestly voiced the feelings of her as leaving the class and the church in general. She wished to leave a parting wish that the class would stick together and be a power for good in the church for many years.

At this stage of the proceedings interesting presentations took place. The first was an illuminated address and group photo of the class, which was handed over by Mr. Rusk.

The following is the address:

Dear Miss Warren,—

It is with unspeakable regret our class is brought face to face with the fact that you are leaving our midst. It would be impossible for us to tell you how great we know our loss will be, but you have given yourself so keenly to the work of the class that we feel this loss will be mutual and we would not make your leaving us any harder than we can help.

Some of us recall the early days of our class when we were left without a regular teacher, and it seemed so difficult to get one who understood boys and who could hold them together.

That you have succeeded is manifest in the constant and large attendance of the Class and its present well organized condition.

You made a study of our needs, and as a result there have been many interests to occupy our attention and to keep us centred in the Church. Your constant visits to our homes have also been means of holding us. We can assure you that we see for ourselves, as a result of your year's service, the reason for centring our lives in the Church.

Your work in the classroom has resulted in our choosing the high ideals that you so fervently presented to us. Behind all your zeal and activity on our behalf, during the Sabbath afternoons and in between, we believe your love for Christ, His Church and our Spiritual welfare has been the abiding motive. We assure you of our loyalty to the Class, to the Church, and to its Head, and believe we cannot better show our gratitude to you than by remaining true to them, seeking to realize the high standard you have presented.

The souvenir that we present will ever help us and our past associations in your mind and prayers, and will keep you solicitous for our future. We pray our Heavenly Father may ever guard and protect you, and that wherever you may live your life may tell for as great things as it has in your service, as lovingly rendered to our Class.

Signed on behalf of the Class,
W. RUSK.
E. WILLIAMSON.

Then on behalf of the teachers of Knox church, Miss Ross handed over an address, couched in similar terms and a handsome gold watch, all voicing the sentiments of the donors at Miss Warren's departure.

Miss Warren feelingly returned thanks in a few words.

Rev. Mr. Keith at this stage, urged the class to stick together as an honour to Miss Warren's faithful work, as nothing would give pleasure more than to have the class in existence for many years.

The toast, "The Ladies," proposed by Mr. W. Shepherd, and replied to by Mr. Roy Lang) was treated in interesting and humourous vein by both gentlemen, both voicing the fears of the male fraternity as to what they would do without the ladies.

The various toasts were enthusiastically responded to by the company.

During the evening the toast list was interspersed with musical and vocal items by Miss Montgomery, Mr. R. Dickson and Master Frank Montgomery.

The evening, though interrupted with a touch of sadness, was very enjoyable and all going to show how much Miss Warren's departure is felt.

To chess-players: It will be interesting to watch the next move in the game of chess between the aldermen and the firemen. At last adjournment the aldermen had called "check," but I don't think it will be "checkmate".

• • • •

How the game stands now: Aldermen—black; firemen—white. White to play and mate in two moves. Solutions must be sent in before June 3rd.

These aldermen's services would be less of a loss to the city than the firemen's.

Ye splenetic Councillors,
Keep the power to expel your defenders,
Till at length your ignorance and spleen,
(Still your own foes) deliver you
To citizens more just than you
For banishment.
Despising, for you, the city, thus
We turn our backs.
There is a world elsewhere.

It wouldn't be a bad idea for the Health Association (of which we hear little nowadays) to provide cuspidors at every street corner for the use of those who cannot control their salivary functions.

Receptacles for pieces of paper, orange, or banana peel, and other rubbish placed at intervals along the sidewalks would also be a boon.

Gentlemen of the Finance Committee,—I congratulate you on your decision to make the necessary grant for the improvements to the schools. Nobody will kick at that outlay.

NEWBRO'S HERPICIDE

Did Not Disappoint

Don't become discouraged simply because your hair falls and is thin, weak and wispy until you have tried Herpicide. "I first began to use Newbro's Herpicide three years ago, after a spell of fever, which caused me to become almost bald. Herpicide soon restored the quantity and natural colour of my hair. I feel lost without a bottle of Herpicide in the house." Thus Mrs. Anna C. Layn, 821 Second Ave., Louisville, Ky., tells in her own words how she lost her hair and how she got it back. Mrs. Layn's experience has been duplicated a thousand times and can be repeated thousands more.

Newbro's Herpicide keeps the hair and scalp in a perfectly healthy condition. When the hair papilla has not been destroyed by the ravages of the dandruff germ, the hair will resume its suspended growth.

Newbro's Herpicide kills the dandruff germ and checks falling hair. The itching of the scalp stops instantly. Others imitate and make similar claims, but the original dandruff germ destroyer is Herpicide.

Applications of this wonderful remedy may be obtained at any good barber shop.

Send 10c. in postage or silver for sample and booklet to The Herpicide Co., Dept. B., Detroit, Mich.

EIGHT FEET MORE LAND

Mr. W. H. Munro was present at the meeting of the Committee of the Whole Council, last night, on behalf of the Peterborough Light & Power Co. The arrangements made regarding the strip of land for the Company's wall, as described at former meetings, were not yet satisfactory. Mr. Munro stated that Mr. Cameron re-located the old fence and there was about eight feet difference between the old fence and the new one, and the Company wanted to go out as far as the new fence, thus taking over 16 feet instead of 8 feet, as was formerly agreed upon.

Ald. Graham moved that the Board of Works go up and look at it on Monday at 4 o'clock. This was carried.

WANTS PAVEMENT

At a meeting of the Committee of the Whole Council last night, R. E. A. Peck put before the Council a request for a new concrete sidewalk from the Hunter street bridge to Burnham street. He said that it was practically the only approach to the 5th Ward, and that it should have a good concrete walk on one side of the street at least. The matter was referred to the Board of Works. He also pointed out that the flooring on the sidewalk across the bridge was also worn thin, and that it would be a good action to put a new floor across it.

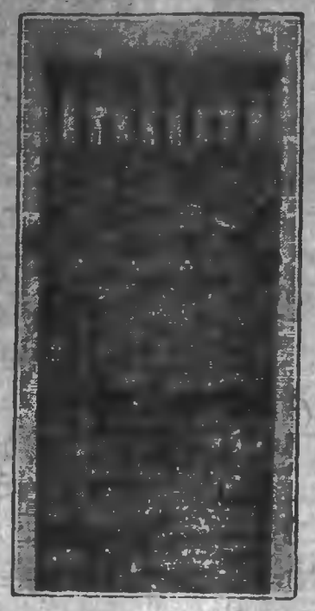
A Cool Suggestion

The Long Summer Evenings will be more enjoyable with a well decorated, nicely furnished den, with a door opening out on a cool well fitted verandah.



Now is the time to do your decorating while the house cleaning is in progress and the house is in a state of renovation. If you have a small room looking out on an upper verandah or balcony you will find it a great boon to your Summer comfort to have it fitted up as a den—den paper and den furniture, with big soft cushions so inviting and so cosy—the verandah nicely curtained and the floor covered with Japanese matting. Can you think of anything more pleasant to while away the long hot Summer. Call to-night and get an estimate in the complete wall and floor fittings.

Cressman's

What Other Cities Are Doing In Publicity Line

The Beaumont Chamber of Commerce has rendered service out of the ordinary. It has shown how substantial and effective commercial club work can be made.

As a direct result of that work Beaumont's tin bucket brigade was increased by probably three hundred factory workmen. The new investment in industrial enterprises promoted through the Chamber of Commerce will aggregate, when the one just started is completed, about $200,000.00, of which amount about one-half has been raised locally. The increased annual pay-roll will be probably $200,000.00 to say nothing of the money distributed for the raw materials used.

Added to the above industries, directly promoted through the Chamber of Commerce, the Kirby Lumber Company has established a large sawmill and planer, investing about $150,000.00, and increasing about $100,000.00 annually the city's pay-roll. Without considering various smaller plants established and others enlarged, the above mentioned show an aggregate new investment of $500,000.00; increase of $350,000.00 in city's industrial pay-roll and giving employment to about 395 or more men.

The securing of factories has only been incidental with the Chamber of Commerce, which has covered a wide scope in its efforts. The work for Beaumont's deep water project has been regarded throughout the country as one of the most brilliant campaigns ever conducted by a commercial organization in the interest of a waterway project. It is confidently expected that success will reward the efforts and that Beaumont will soon become an important inland port, the benefits of which will be shared by countless thousands of people, and the many interests distributed over the wide range of country that could best be served through the port of Beaumont.

The Chamber of Commerce has also given attention to agricultural development and with splendid results.

A state experiment station was secured for Beaumont, and the federal department of agriculture was induced to establish and maintain extensive variety test work in rice. In addition to these the Chamber of Commerce, acting in co-operation with various bureaus of the state and federal departments of agriculture, conducted interesting and effective experiments with corn, cotton, broom corn and other crops. A company was organized to establish a commercial orange and fig orchard, purposed to demonstrate the practicability and profit of commercial orcharding in the Beaumont country. The land for this orchard is well located for public observation and the planting will be completed during the present planting season, a part of the orchard having been planted last spring.

The Chamber of Commerce has covered a wonderful scope and the various committee workers and the directors deserve great credit for their unselfish and untiring efforts. The only possible fault has been that we have tried to do more than we had money to do with. Reference to our financial statement will show that we have been extremely economical in the handling of the general funds of the Chamber of Commerce. Very few commercial organizations in the country can show as small expense account and as much accomplished. Just here it may be well to show just what money has been raised for various purposes during the year:

For entertainment, six conventions	$ 4,689 52
For deep-water campaign	2,021 45
For entertainment and hearing special board government engineers	460 62
For two trade excursions	1,563 97
State experiment station	4,500 00
Site for column factory	3,568 08
Special advertising fund	1,900 00
Total	$18,803 56
Add general fund disbursements	7,523 05
Total investments through Chamber of Commerce	$175,000 00

Five hundred dollars on experiment station and $1,500 on column factory site are yet to be raised in addition to above.

Capital invested in Chamber of Commerce projects:

Subscriptions to bonds Beaumont Iron Works	$ 75,000 00
Subscriptions to bonds Beaumont cotton oil mill	50,000 00
Subscriptions to stock factory site land company	10,500 00
Subscriptions to stock Beaumont orange and fig orchard	15,000 00
Total investments through Chamber of Commerce	$175,000 00

It will be seen from the above that the grand total contributions for all purposes during the year amounted to $26,126.61, which is evidence of the liberality of Beaumont people. They respond liberally to every proposition presented for the good of Beaumont, but there is need of more funds for carrying on the general work of the Chamber of Commerce. The general funds for the organization should be increased so as to provide enough money to carry on the various lines of work without having to burden the individuals who are assigned service to perform.

Annual Convention Of The Epworth Leagues An Interesting Programme

The 16th annual convention of the Peterborough District Epworth League and Sunday Schools will be held this year on the afternoon and evening of Wednesday, May 17th, in the George Street Methodist Church.

It is the intention of the committee who have charge of the programme to make this convention one of the most profitable and helpful held in many years, and with this object uppermost in their thoughts, no trouble or hesitation has debarred them from arranging an interesting and bright bill of fare on League and Sunday School matters. With the presence of such men as Rev. S. W. Dean, superintendent of Toronto City, and the Fred Victor Mission Society, Rev. F. W. White, B. A., Rev. S. P. An excellent musical programme will be interspersed between the other items of the programme, provided by the George Street choir and other first-class local talent. There will be no monotony possible and the public are extended a cordial invitation to attend both sessions, but more especially in the evening.

At the conclusion of the afternoon session, supper will be served in the school room of George St. church.

Sunday schools and Epworth Leagues are requested to send at least two delegates and the secretaries will kindly forward the names of their delegates to the District League Secretary, also the names of their delegates who will require billeting. An offering will be taken at each session.

It is particularly desired that the convention shall be well attended, each League and Sunday school will indicate its measure of activity and prosperity in proportion to the delegates who attend.

Splendid Report On Library Association Meeting Given By Local Librarian

E. H. D. Hall, Esq.,
Chairman Library Board,
Peterborough.

Dear Sir,—In accordance with the resolution passed at the last meeting of the Board, I attended the meetings of the Ontario Library Association, which were held Easter Monday and Tuesday, April 17th and 18th, in the Reference Library Building, College Street, Toronto. I now have the honour to place before you and the members of the Board my report on the matters brought forward at the various sessions of the Association. As the addresses of the different speakers will be available later in printed form, I shall confine myself in the present instance to a resume of the more important features of the meeting.

The opening address of the chairman, Mr. Cameron of Woodstock, contained two points of special interest. The first of these had reference to the necessity for a change in the postal rates on books and the second to the propriety of asking the Ontario Government to consider the question of founding a Provincial Library. In regard to the postal rates on books Mr. Cameron pointed out that at the present time publishers were allowed to pass newspapers through the mails for one cent for four lbs. weight, whereas books for library purposes were subject to a charge of eight cents a lb. The Board may think it worth while to discuss this point with a view to passing a resolution endorsing Mr. Cameron's contention that the rate should be reduced. This would help to strengthen the hands of the Associaiton in approaching the Dominion Government on the question.

In regard to the formation of a Provincial Library, Mr. Cameron's idea was that by the infusion of the Osgood Hall Library with that of the Osgoode Hall Library and other well-known intitutions a library could be formed corresponding in design to the State Library at Washington. It was felt, however, that a Dominion rather than a Provincial institution should be aimed at and the matter was finally left in the hands of the Executive Committee to report on at the next meeting of the Association.

The addresses on the reports of the Technical Education and Public Library Committees showed that the Ontario Government is doing a great deal to foster the growth of technical education in the Province. It was the feeling of the delegates, however, that notwithstanding what the Government is doing in the way of providing technical and juvenile libraries for such sections of the community as need them the Inspector of Public Libraries is decidedly handicapped in his work by reason of insufficient assistance. Under present conditions he has far more work than he or any other man can effectively accomplish, and it was strongly emphasized that extra help should be afforded in order to enable him to devote his entire time to the detail work of his office.

On the subject of technical education, the address of Mr. S. H. Rancke of Grand Rapids, Michigan, was of very practical value. Mr. Rancke is the librarian of the Ryerson Library at Grand Rapids, where technical education in connection with the Public Library has for some time past been in active operation. Mr. Rancke stated that in his library, lectures illustrated by lantern slides are regularly given, reference books are being constantly added to the shelves, and everything is being done that will tend to interest the working man in technical study. He stated that the outlook was most encouraging, but that one factor that works against the library in that of the correspondence schools. This is a matter that is of vital interest to this city. I have it on very competent authority that two or three years ago the average amount of money that went out of Peterborough to the correspondence schools across the border was $30 for every working day, or close on $7,000 per annum. I am informed by the same authority that at the present time this has increased by at least 10 per cent., so that we are allowing at least $8,000 a year to pass out of the city—for the estimate given to me was a conservative one. What other libraries are doing most assuredly the Peterborough Library can also do, and the work can be reduced all the easier if the manufacturers and merchants of this city will show themselves willing, like their brethren of Toronto and other cities, to aid the Public Library to the full extent of their power.

Mr. Nursey's address on "Public Library Possibilities" contained much interesting matter, and was noticeable for its cheerful and optimistic tone. He stated that many libraries that had for some time past been in a state of coma had within the past year come to life again and were applying for reinstatement. One encouraging feature also was that rural municipalities seemed to be getting alive to the fact that they should help their local libraries. Mr. Nursey said that during the past year, contributions with this object in view had aggregated $39,000 more than in the previous year. In this connection it may be pertinent to ask the members of this Board to consider the advisability of bringing to the notice of the township municipalities in this county the great advantages that the Peterborough Library holds out to its patrons. With moderate assistance on their part a system could be easily inaugurated whereby instalments of books could be regularly sent to distributing centres throughout the county for the use of the agricultural community. The farmers are very good friends to Peterborough, and nothing but good could result from our making our books available to them at the lowest possible outlay to themselves. In the United States a method such as I have noted has been in existence for years, for example in the city of Cincinnati, and with the happiest results.

Work with the children, always an instructive and inspiring theme, was effectively dealt with by Miss Jessie C Potter of Dundas. She told the Association of the success attending the institution of the Children's Hour in the Dundas Library, and of the great interest manifested by the youngsters in such matters as were brought to their notice. It was brought out during the discussion that the Pittsburg Public Library publishes an annotated list of juvenile books for use by librarians and that the Finsbury Public Library, of London, England, publishes a list of the same nature. It would be a great help to our librarian, and doubtless to our Library Committee, were authority given to purchase both these lists for use in the library.

Another point of great interest that was discussed was the question of the relationship of the library to the public schools, and it was borne in on your representative that the closer the connection between the library and the schools the better it would be for the pupils. The feeling was expressed very strongly at the meeting that the library should act as a help to the schools in the matter of supplying the pupils with books, and especially with literature of a nature to assist them in their school work. I respectfully suggest to the Board the advisability of discussing with the teachers the adoption of a scheme having for its object the formation of a circulating department in each of the schools as need it.

The matter of a library school was also mentioned, and it was stated that it is a practical certainty that such an institution will be in operation this summer in this province. We shall be notified as soon as anything definite has been arranged in regard to the scheme.

I cannot close my report without referring in the warmest terms to the kindliness and courtesy with which I was greeted by the various officers of the Association. My thanks are especially due to the Inspector of Public Libraries, and to Dr. Locke and Mr. Caswell for much valuable information cheerfully given, as well as to Miss Saxe, of the Westmount Public Library, for valuable hints on library work.

I remain,
Yours obediently,
FRED. M. DELA FOSSE.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

The Liberal caucus at Ottawa decided in favor of the two months' adjournment.

Thomas W. McCluskey, who was shot by William Beaudoin at the latter's house at Woodstock, N.B., is dead.

Parry Sound Liberals nominated T. W. Morrison of Callander for the Commons, and A. E. Radwin of The Parry Sound Star for the Legislature.

Duncan J. Robertson, a prominent and highly esteemed resident of the north branch, near Cornwall, died Thursday night from the effects of a fall in one of his barns.

Gerald McDonald and Alfred Mooney were convicted of burglary and theft of furs from A. A. Allen & Co., Toronto, yesterday. They were sent to the Central Prison for a year.

In connection with their programme of improvements that the C.P.R. has mapped out for their western lines a new bridge has been built over the Kaministiquia River at Fort William.

Vincent Abel, the six-year-old son of L. Abel of Dunnville, was drowned yesterday in Sulphur Creek, a branch of the Grand River. He had been given permission to go fishing along with some other boys.

The swearing-in of Chief Justice Langelier as Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec took place today. The appointment of Judge F. X. Lemieux as Chief Justice was announced yesterday.

John Lockwood, accused of incendiarism at Burke's Hotel, was yesterday acquitted at Belleville by the police magistrate. The evidence showed that the accused had no connection with the matter.

While on her knees in prayer at the Church of the Immaculate Conception, Windsor, Ont., yesterday Mrs. Christine Janisse, aged 65, was seized with a cerebral hemorrhage and died within a few minutes. She was one of the oldest of the settlers in Sandwich East.

Free List Bill.

Washington, May 6.—Representative Warburton of Washington, a newly elected Republican member of the House of Representatives, announced his intention of supporting the Democratic free list bill, in a speech in the House yesterday afternoon.

Mr. Warburton said many of the Republican criticisms of the bill were undoubtedly well founded, but others overdrawn. He believed the bill would not do all its Democratic sponsors expected of it, but it was a step in the right direction. He urged taking off the duty on sugar.

Mr. Bartlett attacked the so-called "cotton bagging trust." He declared the southern farmers were discriminated against, in that cotton bagging which dutiable, while binding twine was free of duty, and that southern planters had paid $5,000,000 to the alleged "bagging trust," in five years.

Must Not Discriminate.

Toronto, May 6.—At a sitting of the Ontario Railway and Municipal Board yesterday afternoon it was decided not to approve of any contract between any local telephone company and the Bell Telephone Co., which prevents a local telephone company from taking or transmitting messages from any other local telephone company with which it now connects or with which it may in future connect.

"The board will not approve of any agreement which will have the effect of preventing or restricting intercommunication, joint operation or reciprocal rights between telephone companies under its jurisdiction," stated Chairman Leitch.

Too Peaceable?

London, May 6.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The Morning Post, anent American warships on the great lakes, says:

"It is easy to understand that Laurier is handicapped by the anti-militarism of sections whose electoral support is indispensable to his Government and may prefer to let the Americans continue their violation of the treaty rather than take the necessary measures counteracting this palpable menace. If this policy eventually leads to trouble, the British taxpayer has to face the responsibility of restoring the balance of power on the lakes by sending warships, since Canada will not have any ready to send."

Well-Known Character Dead.

Woodstock, May 6.—John O'Hanley, a well-known character here, who spent most of his days in jail, was found dead on the street in Elmwood, Bruce County, Thursday night. O'Hanley started on a tramp to Owen Sound a few weeks ago, to see some friends. He had fallen by the wayside and expired many miles from his journey's end. He was 70 years old, and lately had been an inmate of the Oxford House of Refuge. It was the old man's boast that he was the only prisoner in the jail who was allowed the privilege of going down town in his prison garb unattended.

Earl Grey Competitions.

Ottawa, May 6.—The judgments are in for the Earl Grey musical and dramatic competitions at Winnipeg, and are in the hands of the permanent committee here, who have also under consideration with them some protests which have been entered. It will be a day or so before the latter are decided.

McNAMARA ARRAIGNED

Will be Tried on Nineteen Indictments on June 1—Charges include That of Murder

THE DYNAMITE CASE

Los Angeles, Cal., May 6.—John J. MacNamara, secretary and treasurer of the International Bridge and Structural Iron Workers' Association, and his brother, James B. MacNamara, were arraigned late yesterday before Superior Judge Bordwell on nineteen indictments, charging murder in causing a dynamite explosion in the Los Angeles Times building, and the consequent death of 21 men. Attorney Rappaport of Indianapolis for the MacNamaras, asked for thirty days' time in which to enter pleas for the men. District Attorney Fredericks consented to a postponement till June 1, and that time was fixed by Judge Bordwell.

Expressed No Opinion.

Washington, May 6.—A telegram from San Francisco saying placards were being distributed throughout the state quoting Dr. J. A. Holmes, director of the bureau of mines, as declaring that the wreck of The Los Angeles Times plant was due to gas explosion, and not dynamite, evoked quick response last night. Director Holmes made the following statement:

"Neither the bureau of mines nor the director of the bureau possess any information that would demonstrate the cause of the explosion in The Los Angeles Times building. The director of the bureau of mines has neither given out any opinion as to the cause of that explosion nor has he authorized any person to express an opinion for him on that subject."

HURTS TWO MEN.

Montreal Youth Crazed by Drink Fires From Window.

Montreal, May 6.—Crazed by constant drinking, Jos. Belleau, a young French-Canadian residing at 287 Delisle street, seized a revolver yesterday afternoon and opened fire from a front window at passers-by on the street. Mr. D. Mallette, a neighbor, was wounded in the back, and Constable Mailleux in the arm in attempting to arrest him. Neither victim is seriously injured.

When the police finally forced their way into the house by a rear entrance they found Belleau had collapsed, and was dying in a drunken stupor on the floor. His mother, with whom he had been living, said that he had been drinking heavily, and had the idea that he was being persecuted by humanity in general.

Found the Knife.

Goderich, May 6.—The knife with which Edward Jardine is alleged to have murdered Lizzie Anderson, is now in the hands of the authorities. Shortly after Jardine's trial it was learned that a knife had been found near the spot where Jardine said he threw the weapon. It has been forwarded to Toronto for minute examination. A boy found the knife on the lake shore shortly after Jardine's arrest. It is a medium-sized, black-handled one, with two blades, and there were bloodstains on the hilts of the blades. The finding of the knife goes to corroborate the evidence of those witnesses who said Jardine had such a knife in his possession.

Power for Montreal.

Montreal, May 6.—The incorporation of the National Hydro-Electric Co. with a capital of $1,000,000, makes one more electrical company which will seek a market in Montreal.

Henry Miles is the president of the new corporation, and Mr. Louis Gosselin the secretary. The Garillion Falls on the Ottawa River, 35 miles from Montreal, will be the source of the power. This point is a strategic one in the rush for power development, was noticed in the report of the surveyors for the Georgian Bay Canal, who considered that 148,000 horse-power could be developed, of great value, owing to its proximity to the city of Montreal.

P.E.I.'s New Premier.

Halifax, May 6.—H. J. A. Palmer, K.C., member for the district of Fort Augustus in the Provincial Legislature, has been made Premier of Prince Edward Island in succession to Hon. Mr. Hassard, appointed to the Supreme Court Bench this week.

Mr. Palmer is 60 years of age, and was born in Charlottetown, his father being a former chief justice of the province. He was educated in Charlottetown and at King's College, Nova Scotia. In 1876 he was admitted to the Bar. Hon. Mr. Palmer has represented Fort Augustus in the Provincial Legislature for eleven years.

New Issue of Commerce Stock.

Montreal, May 6—The Bank of Commerce officially announced yesterday afternoon that it will issue 40,000 shares of new stock at 180 to shareholders of record of May 17th. As the shares are $50 par, this will mean $2,000,000 of new stock, bringing the paid up capital to $12,000,000.

The directors announced that $1,000,000 had been added to the rest account, which will amount to $8,000,000.

Commerce stock has recently gone up 10 points and sold yesterday afternoon at 230.

IS DIAZ TO RESIGN?

Announcement is Expected at Mexico City To-day—The Only Solution Possible it is Thought

TRAINS HELD UP

Mexico City, May 6.—The resignation of Porfirio Diaz as President of Mexico within a very short time is regarded here as certain. Should the announcement of his intention to resign be made to-day, it would cause no surprise to the members of the Cabinet.

No authoritative confirmation of this could be secured, but there appears little doubt that President Diaz, recognizing the seriousness of the situation and responding to the popular demand, will retire when order is restored.

At the President's office yesterday no statement could be secured, and the members of the Cabinet, realizing that Diaz was the only man who could give a direct answer to the demands of Francisco I. Madero, jr., the revolutionary leader, that Diaz should make known publicly his intention to retire from office, were silent.

At one o'clock yesterday, Minister of Foreign Affairs De la Barra, was peremptorily summoned to the office of the President. On arriving there, he found Senor Limantour, Minister of Finance, who likewise had been summoned. The three officials were in conference for hours. Immediately afterwards typewritten statements were issued by the Foreign Office to all the newspapers saying that the reception to the Chilean Minister set for to-day, and the banquet for the same official, scheduled for to-night, had been postponed until May 12. The reason for this change in the plans was given as "the slight illness of the President." The President's indisposition is known to be slight, but on orders from his physician, he must remain indoors.

Since the statement was issued, Gen. Diaz is known to have been out riding in his automobile. Yesterday morning he was apparently in his usual health. This, in connection with the fact that the conference was held, gives rise to the belief that the announcement of his intention to resign will not be made before to-night at the earliest.

In the event of his abdication, there will be no opposition on the part of the present Government to De la Barra assuming the Presidency.

The question of Vice-President Corral is not so simple. It is known that before leaving for Europe, he refused to resign and that since arriving there he has reiterated this statement. But this is regarded as merely incidental. The officials consider the resignation of Diaz the only solution to the trouble. Reluctantly they admit the growing strength of the rebels and realize that peace is improbable should he antagonize them further.

Railroad traffic continues demoralized. A train arriving yesterday from the north, brought a story of a hold-up by 500 rebels at Lulu, a station 50 miles south of Saltillo. The rebels searched the train but did not molest the passengers. From the express car they took some thousands of pesos, however.

The War Department is silent on the subject of Torreon, Saltillo and Durango, which are reported to have been captured by the rebels.

Canon Starr Accepts.

Kingston, May 6.—Canon George L. Starr, M.A., assistant rector of St. George's Cathedral, yesterday announced he would accept the call to the rectorship of Grace Church, Toronto. He will be inducted early in June. Canon Starr has been connected with St. George's for fourteen years, is beloved by the entire congregation, and his loss will be keenly felt. He is a native of Brockville, and a graduate of Trinity College.

Passed Second Reading.

London, May 6.—The limited woman's suffrage bill introduced yesterday, was supported by Chancellor Lloyd George, Foreign Secretary Grey, Attorney-General Isaacs, Keir Hardie and the Laborites.

The bill passed the second reading stage by a vote of 255 to 88, and was referred to a committee of the whole House.

An Aeronautic School.

Montreal, May 6.—H. A. Somerville, an old member of the staff of The Daily Witness hopes to have his aeronautic school in operation by July 1. It will be situated at King Edward Park, and will include a factory for building the machines, and a garage to accommodate their own and any outside machines. Those who care to undertake this fascinating, but expensive sport will also be given tuition.

THE MILITIA ESTIMATES

Sir Frederick Announces a Large Increase—Higher Salary for Civil Servants

FISHERIES AGREEMENT

Ottawa, May 6.—In the House of Commons yesterday, preceding the consideration of the estimates of the Militia Department, Sir Frederick Borden submitted an explanatory statement. He pointed out that the increase in the ordinary vote were: Annual drill, $150,000; clothing, $100,000; Royal Military College, $35,000, and cadet corps (new vote), $50,000. The first increase was due to provision for 4,000 additional troops, and a larger camp at Petawawa. The training establishment of the district year would total 60,000 men and 12,000 horses. The new vote for the cadet corps included $15,000 for permanent force instructors, $14,000 for expense of school teachers at military schools of instruction, $10,000 as allowances to school teachers who have qualified as instructors at the rate of $1 each cadet instructed, and $11,000 for equipment of cadets instructed. The only additional cost in the pay of the staff will be for six general staff officers, and another $20,000 is asked. If any officers are to fill positions in the Royal Naval College, examinations in certain subjects, which are to take the place of commands and staff duties, one of Kingston and one for the west—possibly in three districts west of Toronto.

Substantial increases in the pay of civil officials in the Customs and Inland Revenue Departments, and Dominion police, of the Yukon Territory and Labrador. Mr. Lemieux stated that in his opinion it is expedient to amend the Civil Service Act, by providing for increases of salaries of superintendents of city postoffices, until a maximum of $5,000 is reached. The present maximum is $4,000. Also to raise the minimum and maximum salaries of railway mail clerks to $500 and $1,400 respectively. The present minimum is $400 and the maximum $1,000. An amendment to the Civil Service Act will change the classification of the clerks in the city postoffices, offices of the postoffice inspectors, offices of the superintendent of railway mail service, and in the money order exchange offices, by abolishing the stampers and sorters class and fourth-class clerkships, and substituting third-class clerkships, ranging from $500 to $1,000, and divided into two classes to be known as third-class "A" and "B."

It is also proposed to abolish junior and second-class clerkships and substitute classes "A" and "B" of the second-class, and increasing the number of the class formerly known as junior second, to $1,200, and increasing the maximum of the former senior second-class to $1,400. First-class clerkships will be divided into divisions "A" and "B," with salaries of $1,600 and $1,800 respectively. The minimum salaries of first-class clerkships will be increased from $1,200 to $1,400, and a new class of clerks, to be known as chief clerks, will be created in city postoffices, subject to certain restrictions.

J. D. Taylor in the Commons yesterday discussed the fisheries treaty with the United States. He said the Congressional records at Washington showed that so far, from the size of the meshes of the nets being the limit of the proposed alterations, as Hon. Mr. Brodeur had stated to Parliament, the American Senate had made the most drastic alterations in the regulations. Indeed the fate of the treaty was problematical.

Mr. Taylor declared that the Minister was being played with by the other parties to the agreement. There had been a breach of international honor. There had been a gross breach of the written pledge of honor in striking out clauses of the agreement. One of the most valuable considerations Canada had received was the agreement to regulate fishing on Puget Sound, where Canadian salmon were being wantonly destroyed with traps without any regulations whatever to control the destruction. This regulation had been stricken out. He had no doubt the same was going on in Lake Erie.

Mr. Taylor said the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was confronted with the most serious duty, namely, to see that in an affair of this kind honor was observed. The time had passed, he said, when sharp practice should be allowed to continue.

Hon. L. P. Brodeur explained that the delay in bringing the regulations into effect was due to the fact that in the United States the treaty making power was vested in the Senate, which had not yet seen fit to pass upon them.

President Taft had sent a message to the Senate recommending the ratification of the regulations, with the exception of certain provisions relating to Lake Huron, and not Lake Erie, as had been stated.

Hon. Mr. Foster argued that the treaty itself, having been ratified by both Great Britain and the United States, it was therefore, binding and neither country had a right to vary the terms of the treaty, except by joint revision. Mr. Foster declared that the Minister had defended the attitude of the American Government. At any rate, he had not entered a protest on behalf of Canada. Mr. Brodeur denied this.

Mr. Brodeur could not see what right the American Senate had to revise the regulations under its treaty making powers, although it might have the right under its legislative. The American contention, he said was wrong, from the standpoint of common sense.

Kingston, Yes.

Kingston, May 6.—Hon. Adam Beck has consented to address a meeting here next week on the power question. He has a proposition to offer, the city in the way of cheap power, and wishes to give it before leaving for England. He says he has closed arrangements with a Washington, N.Y., company to deliver 60,000 horse-power to eastern Ontario. The report that the Seymour Co. made another offer to the city like unto the Hydro-Electric Commission look keenly after its interests.

In discussing the power question The Whig says that the city should put the offer of the Hydro-Electric Commission before an expert and see if it is better than that of the Seymour Co.

A Generous Offer.

Brantford, May 6.—The Massey-Harris Co. has come to the fore with an offer of $10,000 toward the Y.M.C.A. $100,000 fund campaign, which will open next week. In case the full amount is not realized the company will donate one-tenth of the total amount.

Fire Follows Them.

Montreal, May 6.—Fire shortly before noon yesterday caused $70,000 loss to six firms on Colborne street, Point St. Charles. The Canada Furniture Co. and the Ives Modern Bedstead Co. had just moved into the new premises after a fire several months ago.

A Probable Suicide.

St. Catharines, Ont., May 6.—Robt. Wheeler, a Hamilton man who had been working at the Reo motor-car works here, is believed to have committed suicide.

He was boarding at the Grand Central Hotel. One day about two weeks ago he left, saying he was going for a walk.

Yesterday the wife of the proprietor found a letter to the effect that he intended to do away with himself.

LOCAL MAN WAS CHARGED WITH ASSAULTING CHILD, IN POLICE COURT

Harold Hudson Arraigned Before His Worship, Magistrate Dumble, Charged With Assaulting the Three-year-old Child of Mr. and Mrs. Holt.

Harold Hudson was arraigned in the police court this morning, before His Worship Magistrate Dumble, charged with assaulting Spencer Holt, the 3-year old son of Mr. and Mrs. B. Holt, of 497 Patterson street. He pleaded not guilty to the charge, so the evidence was taken in the case. After considering the evidence, His Worship dismissed the case. It appears that the two families live opposite each other on Patterson street and they had had trouble regarding the children on several occasions.

Little fourteen year old Annie Cook who was an eye-witness of the present trouble, gave evidence. She stated that she saw Spencer Holt throw a stone across the gate into Hudson's yard and then Hudson came out and slapped the boy's face, hitting him with his hand pretty hard. She stated that she had never seen the little boy throw stones across there before. The little fellow went in and told his threw them. He said that he went over to Hudson and said something to him about slapping her child. He told her that he would slap her face, too. She then went in and told Mr. Holt.

Gladys Gaele, another little girl gave evidence also, and corroborated the evidence given by the former little girl.

Hudson then gave evidence himself. He stated that on Thursday evening he came home about 5 o'clock, and while in the yard he saw stones coming over the fence. He stated that he saw four come over while he was watching and it was Spencer Holt who threw them. He said that he went over the fence and told the little boy to stop throwing stones over the fence and he just put out his tongue and went over to the road and picked up another stone and shied it over the fence. Then he went over and slapped his ears. He stated that he told Mrs. Holt a week ago to keep her boy from throwing stones over into his yard, and she said that people shd to take a lot of dirt in this world, but did not try to stop the boy.

His Worship thought that it was rude for Mr. Hudson to strike the boy on the face with his hand, but he thought that they should try and fix the matter up at home and dismissed the case accordingly.

The above is a good half-tone of the steamer "Geneva," lately purchased by the Peterborough and Lake Simcoe Navigation Co., Ltd., which will run between Peterborough and Rice Lake, and was purchased from Mr. Wm. Thompson of Orillia, one of the Company's Directors.

TRIP ON "MANITA"

The Peterborough and Lake Simcoe Navigation Company extended an invitation to a number of the business and professional men of the City to a trip down the Otonabee river yesterday on the Company's trim little steamer, "Manita". The weather, very fortunately, turned fine and a very delightful sail was made as far as Benafort Bridge and return.

Mr. E. F. Mason, President of the Company, and Mr. R. Pinchin, the Managing Director of the Company, were present, and saw to the comfort of their guests, amongst whom was Mr. Thompson, of Orillia, who, until recently, was sole owner of the steamer "Geneva," on Lake Simcoe, but which has been taken over by the local company. Mr. Thompson is now a director in the Otonabee Navigation Company, and he had come to Peterborough to look over the Peterborough and Lake Simcoe Navigation Company's fleet.

The party returned about 5 o'clock.

BUT

if it happens to be a Buckley, he can get another without it costing him a cent.

You've seen "guarantees" before—but you never yet heard of a hat guarantee that guaranteed the owner even against accident.

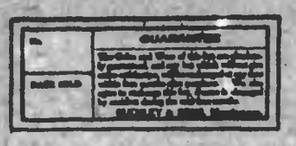
Here's one that does—the sweeping Buckley guarantee—provides for such cases as that shown in the picture — provides for a new hat within 4 months from date of purchase, if, for any reason — accident or otherwise — your Buckley hat has not in every sense "stood the racket." Read carefully the broad, all-embracing guarantee.

Why, you ask, should the guarantee be made so far-reaching?

Well, in the first place, the makers of the "Buckley" have absolute confidence in their product—they feel sure it will give satisfaction in 999 cases out of 1,000.

But there's always that thousandth man—even he must be satisfied.

And, in order that he may get a new Buckley hat from any Buckley dealer, without having to answer questions or give a lengthy explanation, it has been thought well to provide that, whatever his reason, if the Buckley he's been wearing has not lasted four months, it will be cheerfully, promptly, unquestioningly exchanged.



Don't let this remarkable guarantee feature of the Buckley overshadow the style pre-eminence of these hats. The quality is English, but the styles are American and up-to-the-minute. There's a Buckley shape to suit every type of man.

Buckley hats are made by Union workmen—there's high grade material and honest workmanship in every hat that bears the Buckley name. Price, $3.50, at all the best hat shops.

The Collegiate Institute Ball League Opens

The Collegiate Institute Baseball League was opened yesterday afternoon, when Managers Craig and Cresswell's teams met in a seven-innings' battle at Riverside Park, the decision being very strongly in favour of the latter aggregation, who had the big end of a 19-to-4 score. Cresswell did the twirling for his team and did it so well that the losers were never in the running. His slants were too much for the Craig combination, no less than fourteen going out by the strike-out route. On the other hand Armstrong was batted freely and the safeties were mixed up with a saffron-hued bunch of errors, the outfield being particularly full of holes. The fourth innings was prolific of ten runs for the Cresswell squad, who broke up the game there and then. Cresswell's pitching was the feature of an otherwise ragged game. Mr. J. H. Ferguson umpired to the entire satisfaction of both teams. The line-up was as follows:

Craig's team—Hayes, c.; Armstrong p.; Pearson, 1b.; Stuart, 2b.; Craig, s.s.; Ray 3b.; Eastwood, l.f.; Carlisle c.f.; Taylor, r.f.

Will Guelph Take Tire Company That Peterborough Rejected?

A Smaller Loan Is Sought, Half of What Peterborough Was Asked To Advance---To This Will Be Joined A $5,000 Loan By Private Citizen.

GUELPH, MAY 5.—The City Council put through a by-law authorising the city to make a loan of $20,000 for twenty years at four and one-half per cent. interest to the Independent Tire Company of Toronto. This loan is in addition to a loan from Mr. J. W. Lyon of $5,000. In return, the Independent Tire Company are to erect in this city on or before the first of July, 1912, a factory which will cost at least $50,000, and in which at least fifty and probably one hundred hands are to be employed. The two loans are both to be on first mortgages, but Mr. Lyon is to be paid back before the city. The by-law will go to the ratepayers to be voted on the 29th of this month. The new industry, of which Mr. H. H. Hastings is director, and General Manager, will manufacture automobile tires, inner tubes, truck tires, carriage tires, rubber hose and other similar goods. It is on the building which they are to erect, with its heating and lighting apparatus, as well as other equipment, that they are agreeing to spend $50,000, and as the city, with Mr. Lyon, has a first mortgage on the whole building, land and all, as well as the plant, including all machinery, and as they have the company tied down to Guelph, making them agree not to start another factory in Canada, except a small branch factory in the West, for five years, those who have been working on the proposition are of the opinion that they have arranged for first-class security and have protected the city's interests.

BUSY SPECIAL MEETING OF THE CITY COUNCIL BY-LAWS WERE PASSED

A resolution was read from the Retail Merchants last night at a special meeting of the Council, requesting that Mr. Duggan the City Industrial Commissioner, be re-engaged for the coming year. The matter had been dealt with previously by the Committee of the Whole Council, so the communication was laid aside. The Power Report also came up, but it also was laid over, until after the lecture of Hon. Adam Beck, on Wednesday.

Other communications were read as follows:

From Dr. McPherson, Medical Health Officer, re examining milk in the city. It was stated that he would have to get an apparatus for testing. It was moved and carried that it be referred to the Property and Health Committee, with power to act.

From the Good Year Tire and Rubber Co., thanking them for the order for hose and requesting to be informed when the testing of the said hose would take place. This will be done.

From R. E. T. Pringle, representing a street lighting post manufacturing concern, requesting patronage. The matter was referred to the Fire, Water and Light Committee.

From C. W. Hatton, on behalf of Rutherford Bros., requesting that they be given the $350.00 due them, and in the event of a refusal a suit will be entered. Mr. Armstrong, City Clerk, was instructed to communicate with them, and inform them that the $300.00 is being withheld until the posts of the Public Library are straightened, according to the contract.

From Dr. McCullough, Provincial Medical Health Officer, requesting that the City send their Medical Health Officer to London to the Tuberculosis meeting to be held there in a short time. It was decided that he will be sent.

From H. H. Hastings, on behalf of the Rubber Tire Co., requesting that the $250.00 surety given by them, be returned, since the by-law did not carry. The money will be sent to him directly. He stated in his communication that the company had purchased a site in Guelph.

The Committee reports were then read and adopted.

Some of the Aldermen complained that some of the streets were improperly watered or oiled. It was decided that the matter would be looked into.

It was requested that the fence at the corner of Park and Charlotte Sts. be torn down, and that seats be put in, and the place used as a park. This will be done.

Regarding the action taken by his Worship, Magistrate Dumble, in the Police Court, a few days ago, re dumping ashes and refuse on Water street, it was decided that the Council recommend to the Chief, that ashes and such stuff as clean refuse, be dumped there, as it was filling in the waste.

The following by-laws were then read:

In conversation with the Mayor Mr. Beck stated that he had no intention of ignoring the city council, and regretted any embarrassment and misunderstanding that may have arisen from his late visit. He also stated that it was the first time during his public career that any trouble had arisen out of any official action on his part.

CANNOT USE NET WITHOUT LICENSE

Fishery Inspector Watt received the following letter from E. Tinsley, Superintendent of Fisheries, which explains itself. Under the circumstances there is nothing for Mr. Watt to do but see that the law is carried out, and after Wednesday next he will insist that all nets be removed.

Toronto, 2nd May: 1911.

Mr. John Watt, Game and Fishery Overseer, Peterborough, Ont.—

Sir,—One of the Peterborough papers had an article last week, stating that Fishery Inspector Watt gave his views on the Fisheries Act and it ended as follows: "The suckers have begun to run and Inspector Watt states that it is permissible to use dip nets to capture these fish. Of course, the permission to use nets will be rescinded when the game fish make their appearance."

I should like to know what authority you had for having an article like that published, when such is not the case. No one is allowed to use dip nets, or any other kind of nets, excepting under authority of a license from this Department, and any one so doing subjects himself to a fine of from $5.00 to $50.00 for every fish so taken.

Yours truly,
E. TINSLEY,
Superintendent.

Injured Bird Returned To Its Benefactor

Mr. Oke of the Peterborough Furniture factory who lives at 1 Engleburne Ave., East City, has about as interesting a bird story as the Examiner has heard for some time. Early last summer a robin had his leg broken in Mr. Oke's yard and afterwards fell into the river. The current carried the poor little sufferer back to shore, and it was rescued and cared for by Mr. Oke. It rapidly grew well although it had lost for ever the use of one leg, and hopped around the yard all summer. When the fall migration commenced the crippled robin took his departure with the rest of the summer visitors and Mr. Oke thought he had seen the last of him. To his surprise a few days ago "Redbreast" arrived to take up summer quarters with Mr. Oke again, and he was not alone, either, for accompanying him was his lady love, a very pretty bird. The two have begun nesting, and he has evidently determined to remain near his benefactor.

Last night saw the final basketball game of the season between the Y. M. C. A. Intermediates and the P. C. I. The game was featured throughout by the superb playing of E. HAS OTONABEE POWER COMPANY BEEN PURCHASED?--A REPORT SAYS IT HAS No Confirmation is Forthcoming From Mr. Hall or the Otonabee Power Company in Regard to the Matter.

WHAT DESPATCH SAYS

The following despatch from Toronto to the Examiner to-day is brief, but all important:

"Reported here to-day that there has been an important change in the ownership of a power plant in the Midland district. It is stated that the Otonabee Power Company property has been purchased by the Electrical Power Company, Limited. Mr. R. R. Hall, ex-M.P., of Peterborough, is here to-day completing the transaction."

This is the property that Hon. Adam Beck, the Chairman of the Hydro Electric Commission, in his report, given before the Citizens' Committee here some weeks ago, advised the City of Peterborough to buy as the best possible solution of the power problem.

On inquiry from the Otonabee Power Company this despatch in regard to the sale of their plant to the Electric Power Company was not confirmed.

Hon. Adam Beck is coming to Peterborough on Wednesday night to talk on the power question and if the reported purchase is correct, and there seems something in it, his remarks should be of especial interest.

McMANIGAL TO PLEAD GUILTY TO CONSPIRACY

Special Wire to the Examiner.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., MAY 8. — District Attorney Fredericks said this morning that when arraigned, Ortie McManigal would undoubtedly plead guilty to conspiracy. It developed that in giving his evidence before the grand jury, McManigal gave the names of two prominent and wealthy men in California, who he said were conspirators connected with the matter.

NO DATES SETTLED FOR THE ADJOURNMENT YET

Special to The Examiner.

OTTAWA, MAY 8.—This promises to be a most interesting week in the Commons. Despite the announcement that an agreement had been reached between the two parties for an adjournment over Sir Wilfrid's absence there still exists a very strong opposition to such an arrangement among a very large number of Liberal members. It is stated by his friends that Hon. W. S. Fielding is putting up a very strong protest against any adjournment at all, asserting that he is quite able to look after business while the Premier is away. Thus far no actual dates have been arranged for adjournment. As the Premier leaves on Thursday afternoon some definite arrangement will doubtless be come to by that time. This will eventually mean a further conference between the leaders before the dates as finally agreed upon.

SENATE COMMITTEE TAKES UP RECIPROCITY BILL

WASHINGTON, MAY 8.—The United States senate to-day began the consideration of the Canadian reciprocity bill in earnest, when the Finance committee took it up and commenced hearing deputations against it. On Thursday the Chambers of Commerce of Buffalo, Rochester, Detroit, Cleveland and other border cities will be here by train load. The farmers are coming strong from Michigan, Ohio and the New York states. The farmers' free list bill comes up in the House of Representatives this week.

BUCKINGHAM DAMAGED BY A BAD CONFLAGRATION

LINDSAY VISITED BY $8,000 FIRE SATURDAY

LINDSAY, MAY 7.—A somewhat serious fire occurred at the Baker Lumber Company's yard, in the East Ward, at about 5.30 Saturday evening, by which over a quarter of a million feet of beech and hemlock lumber and half a million shingles were destroyed. A G.T.R. car filled with shingles was also destroyed. The fire which is supposed to have started from a spark from a passing steamer, proved a stubborn one to fight, and, although under control during the night, the firemen were not released until 4 o'clock on Sunday morning. The loss is roughly estimated at $8,000, and is covered by several companies.

Children Said To Have Been Kidnapped By Mother

A mild case of kidnapping took place in the city yesterday, when Mrs. C. M. Boiler is alleged to have taken her two children from the home of her husband's mother. Some trouble, it is said, arose in the family some time ago, when the couple separated, Mr. Boiler taking the children. He left them with his mother out at the south-east suburbs of the city and went to Toronto, where he has been ever since. Yesterday the children were taken away from the mother and the wife is blamed. A message was sent to Mr. Boiler yesterday, and the local police authorities await an answer. It is expected that he will return to the city this afternoon.

Well Known Surveyor Is Dead In Toronto

Alexander Niven, one of the best known surveyors in Canada, and well known in Peterborough and vicinity, passed away yesterday, after a brief illness, at Victoria Hospital, Isabella street.

Mr. Niven, who was 75 years of age, was probably the oldest land surveyor in the province, having begun government work in 1863, and during his 53 years' work had covered most of Ontario. He surveyed the boundaries of Ontario, Manitoba and Quebec. His base lines, as surveyed for this province, have been followed by subsequent surveyors throughout Ontario. He was prominent in the Dominion and Provincial Land Surveying Association.

Born at Niagara-on-the-lake in 1836, Mr. Niven occupied several important positions of trust. He was formerly stipendiary magistrate and warden of Haliburton county and served for a number of years on the Dominion examining board of surveyors, and was recve of Dysart.

Mr. Niven leaves a widow and two daughters.

"Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unparalleled"

MONDAY, MAY 8, 1911

LIBERAL AND UNAFRAID.

The Massey-Harris Company is to be commended for its generosity. It offers to give $2,0000 of the $100,000 asked from Brantford for a new Y. M. C. building. Evidently their great manufactory of agricultural implements is not afraid of the effect of a reduction of 2 1-2per cent. in the duties on agricultural implements, as proposed under the reciprocity agreement. It has had a prosperity under the existing tariff that has enabled it to make splendid benefactions in the public interest. If "money talks," then the money of the Massey-Harris Company has nothing to say in the way of fears for their prosperity in the future under a 2 1-2 per cent. reduction of duty.

NOT YEARNING.

Mr. Richard McBride, Premier of British Columbia, at a little decoy dinner given at Ottawa, condensed his idea of public duty in these words "Whenever Canada calls I answer." He doesn't evidently consider that the Conservative party as represented at Ottawa is "Canada," for he didn't rise to many alluring baits, verbal and otherwise, that were held out to him to come to the rescue of party, but he held aloof. He will carry out his idea of "answering." Canada's "call" in some other way than sacrificing himself upon the altar of party expediency. Evidently outside Conservatives of brains and mark do not see much to contribute to the element of successful political warfare in a policy of negative obstruction and self-evident office seeking for its own sake.

FOOT-BRIDGE WANTED.

It will be seen by reference to our news columns that Mr. Dodd, C. P. R. station agent, has received instructions to prosecute, before a Magistrate, all persons trespassing upon the premises, or lines of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The instructions have been issued, not in any obstructive or exclusive spirit, but in the interests of the safety and lives of the public.

Everybody recognizes the terrible danger that is incurred every day by persons using the C. P. R. bridge across the river as a thoroughfare. Only the other day Mr. Dodds, station agent, saved the lives of three persons by holding an engine that was about to cross the bridge. Two women, with a child in a carriage, were seen on the middle of the bridge. If the engine had crossed at speed, or crossed at all, these three would have been trapped without any chance of escape, except by the alternative of leaping into the river.

Now, the use of the bridge will be forbidden, and this prohibition, while preventing danger of accident, will be a great source of inconvenience. A large proportion of the employees of the Dickson Company's mills on Burnham's Point, live on the west side of the river and south of the bridge, and use it for crossing and recrossing the river. With the law against trespassing enforced, as it will be enforced, these persons will have to go north and cross by the Hunter street bridge, go round the lake, or cross in boats.

This shows the necessity of the city taking advantage of the opportunity of throwing out from one side of the bridge a footway extension. Some time ago—about two years—the C. P. R. gave the city permission to do this. It can be easily done by bolting an extension of the bridge girders and covering them with planking. This would render crossing the river at this point perfectly safe, save citizens a long round-about tramp, and save risking their lives, or incurring prosecution by taking a short way home after a hard day's work. With prompt action a few weeks would see a foot-way bridge erected to the great accommodation of the residents of the southern part of East City, and of a large number of citizens south of the bridge on the west side of the river. These have their rights, and in providing a foot-bridge the city would not be doing them a favour, but granting them a right.

THE AIR CURE.

The Montreal Star, though it talk never so much heresy on the reciprocity agreement, is sound in sentiment and correct in statement, when it says in relation to the benefits of pure air, as follows:

"It is not the climate that causes tuberculosis; it is our fear of the climate. The Indians were not troubled with it when they lived in tents and breathed good air all the year round, though at times they were hungry enough and never escaped the rigours fo the weather. But when we taught them to live in "civilized" houses and keep the cold out of their unventilated rooms, tuberculosis fell on them like a plague, and to-day it menaces their existence as a race.

The only way the climate affects the spread of the plague is by adding to our pampered softness of body. The cold days close our doors and nail down our windows. They, furthemore, drive us within the house and keep us there. In a milder climate, we might sit out of doors more, and the perpetually open window would replace the open grave. This is the true reason why northern climates seem to be especially afflicted with tuberculosis.

On the other hand, there is no more curative atmosphere than our bright, dry and bracing air of winter. People come here from the south to get cured. Dr. Trudeau, of the Saranac Sanitarium, had been all over the world seeking relief; but he never found it till he climbed, faint with exhaustion, up into the freezing altitude of the Adirondacks. We ought, in this climate, to be practically immune from the white plague; and we would be if we lived in the climate and not in cowardly hiding from it. The cult of the open window would banish tuberculosis in a generation."

There is no doubt of the truth of the statement that health and pure air in abundance are practically the same thing. Science has proved that pure air, breathed in the right region, is a specific for the cure of tuberculosis, and pure air, and plenty of it, is a preventive of tuberculosis, that is, assuming that infection is not too direct and too often permitted. We spend a third of our lives in sleep, and the vast majority of persons spent that, time in self-vitiated sleeping rooms, re-breathing the tainted air expelled from their lungs, and preventing the depurative effects of blood circulation, that can only result, to the fullest extent, by bringing pure air into contact with the air cells of the lungs. Ventilation, so as to insure to homes, sleeping rooms, workshops and other places, a constant supply of pure, fresh air, if not a lost art, certainly is not a found art. It is inviting ill health to occupy a sleeping room, hermitically sealed so as to exclude a requisite supply of pure fresh air, one of the absolute and absolutely indispensable necessities of health. Then, again, if we had proper ventilation to this end, we do not always have pure air as the other condition. If we have dirty, foul, uncleaned back premises around our homes, how can we have plenty of pure air? Persons sleeping in the central part of the city, in apartments, with windows opening on the lanes, run two risks; if they keep the windows closed at night they suffer from foul air of their own creating; if they open the windows they let in the polluted air of the filthy and rubbish choked lanes. We must be clean inside and outside homes and working places, if we would get the benefit of the greatest and purest gift of Heaven, pure air. In pure air, night and day, pure water, and a reasonably clear conscience, consist the main conditions of happy life.

THE DYNAMICS OF ADVERTISING.

Advertising is to business what electricity is to the city—light and power. It is at once a gentle force that makes things clear and an irresistible force that makes things go.

Advertising has sent the selling methods of the past generation to the scrap heap to keep company with the tallow dip and the horsecar. Founded on the most abstract of sciences, it concerns itself with the most concrete of facts. Wasteful and haphasard in its crude beginnings, it has revolutionized business because in its later development it has proved the most economical and efficient method of selling goods. To-day manufacturers split pennies to find profits and split hairs to find costs. The old idea that an article is more expensive because it is advertised is exploded. As infallibly as water seeks the lowest possible level, modern business seeks the most economical method of marketing its products. An advertised article is cheaper than one which is sold to consumers by tallow-dip, horsecar methods.

Advertising is a salesman that is always at work, but never wearies a customer; that calls on the same man until he is convinced, but never annoys him with its insistence; that wastes no time, wastes no words, and that can always give an audience and a hearing. Alone among salesmen, advertising has free access to the homes of the poorest and richest; it marches unchecked past the secretary of the big merchant and enters without hindrance the store of the retailer. When it cannot tell its story to a man in his office it can always gain his attention in his home. The door of the housewife is never slammed in its face. No country is so remote, no village is so dead, that it does not go there for orders and get them.

Sentimental And Practical Relations Of Good Motherhood To Good Manhood

(Ottawa Citizen.)

The custom of appointing certain days for the special consideration and advancement of various reform movements is one of the happiest thoughts of modern times. The psychological principle of this method of emphasis is wonderfully fine, and sets to the benefit of the movements so treated. As a result of the custom, the unity of the race, or of the community at least, is developed by the fact of many minds being brought to bear upon a common, central thought, and so being related to one another.

This custom finds its climax of wisdom in the inauguration and observances of what is known as Mothers' Day. It is a recognition of the fundamental formative forces of both personal and civic character, besides being a filial and chivalrous tribute to those whose maternal love and care place us under eternal obligation. It signifies that we are at last getting very near the primal sources of human power and purpose.

Most promising is the growing interest being widely manifested in the subject of eugenics. It is an evidence of a long-delayed consciousness that character is formed before life is given; that a man's destiny is partly fixed before he draws his first breath of human existence; that education for citizenship must begin with the grandmother of the future citizen.

The culmination of this interest will mean a veritable transformation of life, when it finds tangible and practical result in legislation and social custom. It will be a new era in the history of evolution when we discover how great a formative power is exerted upon the race by the mothers of men. This is perhaps the deepest significance, and one, doubtless the least considered, of Mothers' Day.

Of the other debts and obligations to motherhood, we are all familiar. The mother-hand and the mother-heart have received their deserved tributes in verse and song. The man in whom the loyalty to his mother ceases to be an active or dominant force is abnormal indeed. One of the first requisites and proofs of real manhood is filial devotion.

But in our observance of Mothers' Day, it is not well to confine our tribute or our observance merely to words of sentiment. These spring spontaneously from our lips and hearts, requiring no effort on our part. And however dear the words, or however adequately they may express our sentiment, there is much more to be done. To wear a flower in memory of a mother loved is a graceful appreciation, but it hardly reaches the level of the practical.

The truest tribute of appreciation that we can possibly give is our whole hearted attempt to secure the attainment of the desires of motherlove, and to guard against all those social and industrial obstacles which prevent the aspirations of motherhood from reaching their fulfilment in the achievements of manhood.

Every mother dreams of great things for her child. Never yet did any mother bend over her sleeping child but she dreamed dreams of sternth of manhood, of largeness of attainment, of some uniqueness of effort. Ever has come to her maternal sight the fair vision of a life strong, noble, helpful, good. No cloud of doubt has ever crossed the fair sky of her radiant dream.

No one can rightly compute the subtle influence of the mother's aspiration for good and greatness in her child. It is a very font of evolution, stimulating to diviner things. It is not in the power of human mind to reckon the good that has come to the world by the wishing of motherlove.

If mother-love could but have the willing as well, we might safely prophesy a speedy evolutionary culmination. But other influences have crept in, destroying the possibility of fulfilment. And with the removal of these, is to be found our best observance of Mother's Day.

The greatest tragedy of human life is the throwing of a mother's child, cherished and cared for and planned for with infinite tenderness and devotion, into the maelstrom of the modern world, to be tossed about like a chip upon an angry sea, and too often cast high upon the barren sands of failure. There is no greater descent than that from the mother's arms to the ignoble clay.

It is impossible to regard a wasted or a ruined life without memory or vision of a mother standing dimly behind it. One cannot forget the fact of all her dreaming and prophetic ecstacy. And one cannot view such ruin without glimpsing these ruined hopes as well.

This, then, must be our task,—to give to every child the chance to realize the wish and dream of the mother; to give to every mother the care-free environment wherein she shall dream highest and noblest dreams of success and attainment and goodness for her child; to give to every home that assurance of safety and comfort whereby mother-love shall be able to exercise most fully the privileges of willing good to her child.

It is a pitiful commentary upon our civilization that so many homes exist where the normal processes of the maternal influence are practically annulled by adverse circumstance. In every slum of every city are scores and thousands of mothers, each with the primal love for her children, but who are dragged to the lowest level by poverty and ill. But there can be no civilisation worth the name until the mothers, and every mother, is cared for with tenderest solicitude by us all.

Shall we not wisely make this our Canadian ideal? In this new nation let us build rightly by safeguarding the mother-source of greatness and goodness. When every Canadian child shall be born rightly and bred rightly, there will be but little fear for our future. For let it not be forgotten for a single instant that the mothers of Canada hold its destiny in their charge.

CARELESS SMOKERS.

(Ottawa Journal.)

A cigarette stub caused the three million dollar Bangor fire. A cigarette stub caused the fire that destroyed the top floors of the western block on Parliment Hill some fourteen years ago. In fact, hardly a city of any size but has had fires caused by carelessness in smoking. A pipe or cigar, if accidentally dropped, will usually go out of its own accord; a cigarette, on the other hand, will burn itself entirely away. The cigarette smoker has reason to display extra care in the disposition of his stubs, as the various fires attributed to this cause well prove.

A VOICE FROM THE PAST.

(Montreal Herald.)

When Sir John Macdonald decided to appeal to the country in 1891, Sir John Thompson was, probably, his principal adviser. It was Sir John Thompson who made the speech in Toronto by which the campaign was opened, and in which the country was told about the probability of getting a treaty of reciprocity with the United States. Sir John Thompson was a candidate for election in Antigonish, Nova Scotia, and very naturally he issued an address to the electors, the terms of which have been preserved. Part of it is worth quoting to-day, considering the reputation in which Sir John Thompson was held. He wrote:

"The Government of which I am a member is appealing to the country with a policy, which we believe will be heartily endorsed by a great majority of the electors. We have made to the Government of the United States, through the Government of Great Britain, proposals for reciprocity in trade, which, we have good reason to believe, will result in an arrangement by which the markets of the United States will be reopened to the products which our people desire most to send there. A fair measure of reciprocity is what we desire, and we have no doubt that that can be obtained without undue sacrifice."

And what, might one ask, was the Macdonald-Thompson idea of a "fair measure of reciprocity?" Would they have rejected such an arrangement as Mr. Fielding and Mr. Paterson have been able to effect? Not likely, for it conforms almost exactly to the standing offer which stood so long on the statute book, kept there at their own instance.

What Sir John Thompson wanted was "an arrangement by which the markets of the United States will be re-opened to the products which our people desire most to send there." Isn't that just what we are now getting?

FIGHTING AGAINST OPPORTUNITY.

(Montreal Herald.)

Some official figures which have just been published by Mr. Archibald Blue, the chief officer of the Canadian census, in an English periodical, have a suggestive bearing on the reicprocity discussion now in progress.

In the year 1910-11 Canada exported sixty-one million bushels of wheat. The home market consumption during the same period amounted, on an estimate of 6.24 bushels per capita, which is considered a high estimate, to 48,576,000 bushels. The figures show the value of existing markets under present conditions to the Canadian wheat producers, and they must be rather disappointing to the opponents of reciprocity who have dwelt with great emphasis, on the magnitude and growth of the home market. The growth will continue in proportion to the population and feeding requirements.

The conclusion seems irresistible that what Canada needs now and will need more and more as her wheat production expands with the influx of population and the inflow of capital, is larger markets for the ever-increasing surplus. The British market is no doubt always open, but it is not always as remunerative as the market close at hand. The wheat producing countries of Europe, especially Russia, which pour into English ports supplies from ports so widely separated and so different in climatic conditions as Odessa and Archangel, have their effect on prices, and there are Australia, India, and the Argentine Republic sending an ever-increasing surplus to the same market, all competing with each other and bringing down the price to a considerably lower basis, at times, than is to be found in the United States with a small tax in the form of transportation.

Having regard to these facts, it is rather surprising that a great political party should be so keen to spend the summer in Ottawa, perspiring and fighting to close up a proffered market which will take at good prices a surplus that cannot always be disposed of to equal advantage in present markets.

"THE BLACK CROSS"

By OLIVE M. BRIGGS

She moved her head uneasily on her hands, and hid her eyes for a moment against the leaves of the ivy, as if blinded by the sun-beams.

"Sooner or later he was sure to come here," she murmured, "All musicians come here; but when I saw his face on the billboard to-day—and his name—!" She crouched closer against the sill, and the leaves of the ivy fluttered from the hurried breath that came through her lips, shaking them as with a storm.

If he were there on the promenade" she said "and I saw him walking, with his violin, his head thrown back and his eyes dreaming—Ah!" She drew in her breath quickly and a little twist came in her throat, like a screw turned. She half closed her eyes.

"Ah—Velasco? My arms would go out to you in spite of my will; my lips would cry to you! I would clinch my teeth—I would pinion my arms to my side. I would hide here behind the casement and gaze at you between the leaves of the geraniums—and you would never know! You would never—know!"

She put both hands to her bare throat as if to tear something away that was suffocating, compelling; then she laughed: "He is an artiste," she said, "a great musician, feted, adored, he is rich and happy. He will forget. Perhaps he has forgotten already. It would be better if he had. forgotten—already." She laughed again strangely, glancing about the garret with its low eaves, and the cob-webs hanging; at the pallet, and the cracked basin, and the pitcher with its handle missing.

The doves came flying about the sill, twittering and chirping as if seeking for food on the sill; clinging to the ivy with their tiny, pink claws, looking at her expectantly out of their bright, roving eyes, pruning their feathers. The girl shook her head:

"I have nothing for you," she said "No—not a crumb. The last went yesterday. Poor birds! It is terrible to be hungry, to have your head swim, and your limbs tremble, and the world grow blind and dim before your eyes. Is it so with you, dear doves?"

She rose slowly and a little unsteadily, crossing the garret to the peg where the clothes hung.

"There may be a few Pfennigs left" she said, "without touching that. No—no, there is nothing!"

She felt in the pockets of the cloak—pressing deep into the corners with the tips of her fingers, searching. "No," she repeated helplessly "there is—nothing; still I can't touch the other—not to-day! I will go out and try again."

She took down the cloak from the peg and wrapped it about her in spite of the heat, covering her throat. There was a hat also on the peg; she put it on, hiding her yellow curls, and drew the veil over her face.

"If I could only get a herring!" she said to herself, "There must be someone in Ehrestadt, who would listen to my voice and give me an opening. I will try once more, and then—"

She buttoned the cloak with her fingers trembling, and went out.

"Is the Herr Kapellmeister in?"

"Yes, Madame."

The rosy cheeked maid hesitated a little, and her eyes wandered doubtfully from the veil to the cloak and the shabby skirt.

"Kapellmeister Felix Ritter, I mean."

"He is in, Madame, but he is engaged."

"May I come in and wait?"

The maid hesitated again: "What name shall I say, Madame?"

"My name," said Kaya, "is Mademoiselle de—de Poussin."

The German words came stumbling from her lips. She crossed the threshold and entered a large salon, divided by curtains from a room beyond. There was a grand piano in the corner of the salon, and about the walls were shelves piled high with music; propped against the piano stood a cello.

Kaya looked at the instrument; then she sank down on the divan close to the piano, and put out her fingers, touching it carelessly. From the next room, beyond the curtain, came the sound of cups rattling, and a sweet, rich aroma as of coffee, mingling with the fragrance of cigars freshly lighted.

The girl threw back her veil, scenting it as a dog the breeze when it is thirsty and cannot drink. She smiled a little, still caressing the keys with her fingers. "It is strange to be hungry," she said, "The Countess Mezarpin was never hungry!" Then suddenly she started and turned white to the lips, swaying forward with her eyes dilated.

From behind the curtain came voices talking together; one was harsh and rather loud, and the other—Kaya's eyes were fixed on the curtain; she rose slowly from the divan and crept forward on tip-toe, a step at a time. The other!—the listened. No, it was the harsh voice talking rapidly, loudly in German, and what he was saying she could not understand; then came the clatter of cups again, and silence, and a fresh whiff of cigar smoke floating, wafted through the curtain.

She crept closer, still listening, her hands clasped together, the cloak flung back from her shoulders.

"The other—there!"

She put out her hand and touched the curtain, pulling it aside slightly, timidly, and pressing her face, her eyes to the opening. She was faint for a moment and could see nothing; there was a mist before her eyes and the smoke filled the room; then, gradually, out of the mist, she saw a grey-haired man with his back to the curtain, and he was bending forward with a coffee cup to his lips. Beside him, facing her, leaning far back in his chair, with his cigar poised and his eyes half closed, his dark head pressing restlessly against the cushion was—

"Oh, my God!" she breathed, "My God, it is Velasco!"

For a moment she thought she had screamed; and she covered her eyes waiting, sick, frightened, her heart throbbing. Then she forgot where she was and thought only of him, and a strange little thrill went over her; she shivered slightly, and it seemed to her as if already she was in his arms; and when she heard his voice, it was calling to her, crying her name.

"Yes—yes, it is Kaya!—I am here!" she was saying, "Come to me—Velasco! Velasco!"

Already she was stumbling into his arms; she was clinging to him—and then she awoke. Her brain cleared suddenly and she knew that she had not moved; no sound had come from her lips. She was standing like a statue, dumb, with her hands clasped, gazing; and Velasco lay back in his chair with his eyes half closed, blowing a wreath from his cigar, watching it idly as it floated away, listening as the harsh voice of his host talked on—not five feet away! If she stretched out her hand, if she sighed—or moved the curtain— Ah!

She struggled with herself. She was faint; she was weak with hunger; she was alone and desolate—and he loved her. She fought madly, desperately. It was as if two creatures were within her fighting for life; and they both loved him.

When the one grew stronger, her eyes brightened and her pulses quickened: it was as if she would leap through the curtain, and her heart was sick for the touch of his hand. Then she beat down the longing and stifled it, and the other self came to the front and gripped her scornfully, pointing to her hands with the blood her that loved him the most crushed. Was her life to mingle with his and ruin it, and bring it to shame?

"Never," she breathed, "Never!" So long as I live!" And the self of her that loved him the most crushed the other self and smothered it—strangled it.

She gazed at him through the curtain, and it seemed to her that something within her was gasping and dying. And suddenly she turned and ran from the curtain, clasping her cloak to her bosom and running, stumbling, out of the room, the house the street.

The promenades were gay with people and crowded. The men strutting along in their Sunday clothes, the women hanging on their arms, the children toddling behind. The band was playing on the square. It was warm and the sun was shining; the air was sweet with the scent of the rose buds.

Kaya fled past them all like a wraith. They turned and stared after her, but she was gone. She climbed the stairs of the mill to the roof, and opened the door, and shut it again, and fell on her knees before the box. The pitcher was there without a handle, and the basin cracked. She lifted them away and opened the box.

In it lay a velveteen jacket folded, a scarf, scarlet and spotted. Inside the scarf lay a mass of coins, copecks—ten, twenty—hundreds of them, and roubles round and heavy. She

Imitation Cough Cures

Is an Imitation Cough Medicine Good Enough for Your Children?

When you are sick and send for the doctor you don't want him to send a young medical student he has in his office. You would rather have the young fellow experiment on some body else.

No more do you want imitations of the medicine you know to be of proven value in the cure of disease.

The remarkable success of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine in the cure of croup, bronchitis and colds has proven too great a temptation to imitators. They expect you to take chances with their medicines because the price is a few cents less.

Imitations are never sold on merit, but depend on the merit of the article they imitate. You don't want to be experimented on, and for this reason will insist on seeing the portrait and signature of A. W. Chase, M.D., the famous Receipt Book author, on the bottle you buy.

As it is made of simple ingredients of proven value, it is well suited for as a treatment for children. That it is effective in the cure of croup, bronchitis, whooping cough and the most severe coughs and colds is attested by its many years of continued success and enormous sales. 25 cents, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

and say, "I want to get a suit of clothes for my little boy," you'll stand a much better chance of getting exactly what you want if you specify "Sanford Juvenile Brand." This children's clothing is made especialy for children, from patterns designed for children. They are not, as is most cases, made in a rush to fill up a temporary slack season, but are made regularly all the year round, just the same as the clothing in our men's department. The men who make Sanford Juvenile Clothes are specialists in children's clothing.

Designing, cutting, shaping, trimming, sewing—each operation is in the hands of a master craftsman, a spcialist whose whole attention is centered on making one part of the suit. That's why Sanford Juvenile Clothes have the simple, easy grace—the soft, loose lines and extra strong fabrics—that distinguish these childish styles from the common run of children's clothing.

The new Spring and Summer models are now ready at the leading clothing or dry goods store in your town. Call and examine them. Select the pattern that pleases your taste and let the youngster try it on.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

THE good thing about our neighbour's troubles is that they never keep us awake nights."

Did you ever hear that old saying?

It flashed into my mind the other day when someone came in with the news that Mr. R., a neighbour who had been engaged in the rug and carpet business, had just failed, and that his bankruptcy sale was advertised in the papers.

"Poor Mr. R.! He is so wrapped up in that business. What will he do?"

"What a blow it will be to Mrs. R.!"

"I wonder if they will have to take Rachel out of college?"

So the regretful and sympathetic comment ran for a moment or two—no longer—and then the inevitable thought came and was put into words:

"Wouldn't that sale be a good chance to get that new rug we've got to have for the dining room?"

No, other people's troubles certainly don't keep us awake nights.

The sore throat that had been bothering one of the neighbour's babies was diagnosed as diphtheria day before yesterday. The one who brought the news into another neighbour's home was greeted with "Isn't that a shame?" and then quick as a flash, "How did you hear of it? You didn't go there, did you?"

The lightning rapidity with which any information about our neighbours, any calamity, any good fortune, anything at all that had befallen him is turned inside out and upside down by our minds to find that in it which directly affects us with a very big U. is—well, shall I say amusing or saddening?

Either, I suppose, according to the angle of vision. Amusing to the cynic. Saddening to the idealist.

Everyone of us has listened to—probably taken part in— conversations like the one I quoted.

"The good thing about other people's troubles is that they don't keep us awake nights." Of course, it's mighty fortunate that they don't. Most of us have enough of our own to do that.

And, of course, it's part of the absolutely necessary egotism, the self-interest, that is needed to keep the race of men a-going, that we should make everything a mirror in which to see ourselves and our interests.

But can't we be a little more graceful, a little less obvious about it, than most of us are?

Can't we take more care that the velvet glove of sympathy with which we cover the iron hand of self-interest shall not get worn too thin?

I'm sure the effort would pay in making us more beloved.

Perhaps it would even result in creating in us the sympathy that we simulate and making us more lovable.

Who knows?

Ruth Cameron

fingered them tenderly, one after the other, then thrust them aside.

"To-morrow—" she said, "I have come to that—to live on a gypsey's wages! I can sing no longer; I can only dance and pass the cap—and give the copecks for bread—for bread! I thought some day when I was old—when we were both old, I would show them to—Velasco, and he would remember and laugh: 'Ah, that was long ago,' he would say, "when I was a boy, and you were a boy, and we tramped together through the cold and the snow—and I loved you, and you—loved me! Ah—it was sweet, Kaya! I have lived a long life since then, with plenty of fame, and success and happiness—and the years have been full; but nothing quite so sweet as that! Nothing—quite so sweet—as that!"

She was sobbing now and staring into the box: "To-morrow," she said, "I will buy some bread and feed the doves—and soon it will be gone!" She began to count the coins rapidly, dropping them through her fingers into the scarf; and as she counted she smiled through her tears.

"We earned it together—he and I" she said, "he played and I danced. He would like me to live on it as long as I can, and then—after that—he will not—blame me!"

Her body swayed slightly and she fell forward against the box. The sun shone on the geraniums; and on the sill, the doves pecked at the worm-eaten casement, clinging to the ivy with their tiny claws, gazing about with their bright, roving eyes and cooing.

Below the water splashed against the wheel; but it was silent.

CHAPTER XV.

The stage of the Opera House was crowded with the chorus. It was ten o'clock in the morning, but the day was rainy and the light that came from the windows at the back of the proscenium was feeble and dim, and the House itself was quite dark. The seats stretched out bare and ghostly—row after row; and beyond a dark cavern seemed yawning, mysterious and empty, the sound of the voices echoing and resounding through spaces of silence. In the centre of the stage stood the Conductor, mounted on a small platform with his desk before him; and around him were the chorus, huddled and watchful as sheep about a shepherd. He was tapping the desk with his baton and calling out to them, and the voices had ceased.

"Meine Herren—meine Damen!" he cried, "How you sing! It is like the squealing of guinea-pigs—and the tenors are false! Mein Gott! Stick to the notes, gentlemen, and sing in the middle of the tone. There now, once more. Begin on the D."

Kapellmeister Ritter glanced over his chorus with a fierce, compelling motion of his baton. He was like a general, compact and trim of figure with a short, pointed beard, and hair also short that was swiftly turning to grey. The only thing that suggested the musician was the heavi-ness and swelling of his brows, and the delicacy of his hands and wrists which were white, like a woman's, of an extraordinry suppleness and full of power; hands that were watched instinctively and obeyed. The eyes of the entire chorus were fixed on them now, gazing as if hypnotized, and hanging on every movement of his beat.

"Na—na!" he cried, "Was that F,

Most Canadians Have Catarrh

Our Changeable Climate is Responsible.

Where the atmosphere is damp, with sudden changes in temperature, almost everybody has Catarrh, in some form or other. The ordinary cold in the head inflames and weakens the membranes lining the nose and throat, and starts a discharge. The next cold is more easily caught, and soon the patient is never quite free of it.

As Catarrh develops the discharge increases—drops into the throat, especially at night—and takes on an offensive odor. Besides being exceedingly disagreeable, there is great danger of the disease extending to the lungs, stomach, or bowels.

Though it is very difficult to cure, Father Morrisey devised a combined internal and external treatment that has cured thousands. The Tablets tone up and invigorate the system, and assist Nature in throwing off the disease, while the salve, applied up the nostrils, clears out the discharge and heals the membranes. Combined treatment, 50c at your dealer's, or from Father Morrisey Medicine Co., Ltd., Montreal, Que.

I ask you? You bellow like bulls! Again—again, I tell you! On the D and approach the note, softly.

Ha-ah!—Pianissimo!"

He stamped his foot in vexation, and the baton struck the desk sharply: "Again — the sopranos alone! Ha! Piano—piano! I say! Pedantsaus-end!"

The chorus glanced at one another sheepishly and a flush crept over the faces of the sopranos. The Kapellmeister was in a temper to which nothing suited him, and he beat the desk as if he would have liked to strike them all and fling the baton at their heads.

A COMMENDATION

Of a "Splendid Sermon" Preached Last Night in St. Paul's Church

That was a splendid sermon 'preached' last night,
"Pogue" couldn't have done any better.
It was Bible truth—call it what you may,
He pictured that which remaineth.

We hear too much of the Prodigal Son
Spending his time with Harlots;
And too little said. When he came to himself—
I'll go Home to my Father that's calling.

There is too much said about Hell and the Devil
And too little said about Heaven,
Let us bury the past, and don't let us forget
What He said to those that remaineth.

It's not what we spend or have spent in the past;
It's what can I do in the future;
To-morrow, to-day, is mine if I live—
There's a blessing for those that remaineth.

So don't forget what the preacher said,
We are living in days much brighter
Than "Paul or Peter, James or John"
Or any of the other disciples.
So, played out men, like my-self—"cheer-up"—
There's a fat calf still to be Roasted—
It's for you and me. Whoever will see,
And return to our Father that loveth me.

CELESTIAL PHENOMENON BRIGHT METEORIC VISITANT

A meteor of exceptional size, brilliancy and duration, was observed on Saturday night, about 10.15. When first seen it was apparently not far from the North Star, and flew almost due South, traversing about three-fourths of the heavens before bursting into a shower of blood-red sparks.

The meteor—if such it was—was pear-shaped, and appeared to be in close proximity to the earth, and must have been in view quite twenty seconds. Its predominating colours were red and blue, the moon appearing quite dull and yellow in contrast.

POST CARD COLUMN

Editor Examiner:

While millions to-day are believing in the infallibility of a mortal man now living on the earth, there are professed Freethinkers and Christians who with unblushing effrontery are denying the infallibility of our Lord Jesus Christ, the great head of the church. They tell us that Christ was as liable to make mistakes and err as were His poor brethren whom He came to redeem. The Holy Ghost, through the pen of the Apostle John, nails that lie, where he says, "In the beginning was the word and the word was with God, and the word was God. . . and the word of God was made flesh and dwelt among us, and we beheld His glory. The glory as of the only begotten of the Father full of grace and truth." St. John, 1, 1-4. Because the teaching of our Lord Jesus Christ gives the straight lie to the teaching of modern higher critics, His august authority must be degraded in order to glorify these infallible (?) theologians. In the language of Prof. Geo. Jackson they say "a man may not do violence to his intellectual conscience at the bidding of any authority, however august." What audacious impudence. Higher Criticism! I should say it was, when the Most High Himself is criticised and His teaching and authority denied.

JNO. CARLISLE.

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—There was a letter in the Morning Times, signed Veritas, asking how is it that we have so many cases of contagious diseases in our midst. Is it any wonder when our back yards and lanes are never clean.

Just to think, in a city like Peterborough, we have never had any one to collect the garbage; while in other cities they call regularly each morning. House-keepers can manage pretty well in winter, when they have their ranges going, but now that the time for the gas stove is here, what are we to do? It would not cost the city much to have a couple of men collect all refuse and draw it outside the town and burn it. I think our city was cleaner fifteen years ago than it is now.

This is work our new Council should look into at once before the warm weather sets in. It is a great shame to be so careless about the health of the community, but I suppose it is the Doctors' harvest. There is so much said about beautifying the city. Better start at the back yards. It is a disgrace for any Council to neglect such a duty, or if something is not done we will have worse than small-pox—we will have a plague.

Thanking you, Mr. Editor, I am
Sincerely yours,
A Disgusted Housekeeper.

DO YOU FEAR GROWING OLD?

There is probably no fear that is held more generally than that of old age. The love of life is so strong in us that, even if we have no other reason, we dread to realize that we are losing our hold upon it. But there are lots of other reasons why we dislike to think of old age as a personal possibility, for whether we look at it from a social or a business point of view, there is no denying the fact that the prospect is anything but an agreeable one.

When we are young and have the greater part of our life before us, the years seem very long and old age appears like a vague, shadowy something so far in the distance as to be scarcely tangible. We know that other people are growing old. We see the signs of age marked in the faces and forms of those we love, but for some reason the possibility that we, too, are travelling the same road, and have the same goal ahead, does not seem to occur to us.

Still, time goes on, and then come the signs that we have learned to dread—perhaps they have not been delayed so long—the lines in the face, the gray hairs, the weakening faculties. We find that we are unable to do some of the things we used to do, and so the truth dawns upon us, we are beginning to grow old, too.

As a matter of fact, every person has the power to postpone the ravages of age for many years if he wills to make use of it. Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey is the elixir of youth.

The scientist that discovered the formula of Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey fifty years ago also discovered by experiments and research that man was dying too young, either through thoughtlessness or ignorance. He also discovered that old age could be combated successfully by a certain mode of living and the use of a pure tonic stimulant which is necessary to keep the tissues young and the entire system in a normal, healthy condition similar to that of a person in good health at 25 years of age.

Death and premature old age come from different causes but mostly all start from a deranged stomach, and imperfect digestion, resulting in constipation and fermentation in the larger intestines and the formation of putrefactive bacteria or old age germs which poison the blood and cause premature death.

When a dose of Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey is taken at mealtime it stimulates the mucous surface and little glands of the stomach to a healthy action, thereby improving the digestion and assimilation of the food and giving to the body its full proportion of pure nourishment. With perfect digestion no fermentation will take place, and no death germs can be generated. This is the secret of success of Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey in prolonging life.

The Ladies' Aid of St James Church will hold a talent concert in the church on May 9th, admission 15c. A good programme will be rendered. 24-153

ST. ANDREW'S ANNIVERSARY SERVICES CONDUCTED BY REV. J. G. POTTER

Large Congregations at Both Services Yesterday---Mr. Potter Preached Very Eloquent Sermons---Choir Rendered Special Music, Assisted by Master Wilfrid Morison.

The 78th anniversary of St. Andrew's church was celebrated yesterday, Rev. J. G. Potter of Montreal, and former pastor of St. Andrew's officiating morning and evening. Mr. Potter was welcomed by a very large congregation at both services, who were delighted to hear their much beloved friend and former minister once again, in the church where he officiated for a large number of years in such a successful manner. Mr. Potter expressed his pleasure at being present and thanked them for the warm invitation they had given him; also for the kind invitation they had tendered Mrs. Potter, whom, he regretted to say, could not be present.

At the morning service Mr. Potter chose his text from the 1st and 2nd verses of the 4th chap., of Micah, "But in the last day it shall come to pass, that the mountain of the house of the Lord shall be established in the top of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills, and the people shall flow into it. And many nations shall come and say, Come let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths; for the law shall go forth of Zion and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem."

"The prophet was much concerned about the people's burdens and needs and takes views of the past, and cannot see anything but God's great hand and nothing that can be looked back on, but with joy, and he wants them to note that all will work out for God's great glory," said Mr. Potter. The nations will realize more and more the benefit of the work of the Lord. The prophet grasped the two essentials of holy religion. Probably the most important of the two is basing himself with the people. This makes the true prophet and true religion. He finds he must fling himself upon the life of the people. God yearns for the love and salvation of the people, but He could not attain this end, without flinging himself upon their side, so to speak, bleeding for them and dying for them. In return for this have we been living as we should and as He would have us? Are we loyal to truth and righteousness? Are we worthy of the name of God's people, for whom God has died? Very few of us can say yes, and yet we will want to find that place of freedom that God has prepared for us. Men want freedom, and the holy church of God. We should put ourselves in the path with God for His great love. The work of the Lord is progressing wonderfully. In China and other heathen European and Asiatic countries, we see rapid progress in Christian work, and we recognize that Micah has set forth a solution, which will solve all our problems in missionary work. With the enlightening influences of the gospel, there is the highest class of people and Christians even in China.

"Lift up your eyes and see the fields of corn," saith the Lord. You will also see the needs of humanity to make life world better. This is a task that cannot be left to a class or to an individual. If we get into our minds the visions of a glorified world, we will most surely concentrate ourselves to the work. What pattern are we going by? What future are we working for? What design? God gives us power to see what we are going to make out of the future. You and I are asked today to look at the great work of evangelizing the world and work with greater hope than in years gone by. "It is not by might, nor b power, but by My spirit," saith the Lord. The victory is assured to every one of us, as men and women, if all along the line of Christian service will push ahead. All the big work of your congregation, is not going to be done by one person, but all must give their whole life and soul to the work of God. As a people, to those who teach us, we owe a great deal. There is a great hope, and the time will come when the world shall be moved and Christianity will reign supreme. There was a time in the world's history when Christianity was practically banished, but after the death of Christ it sprang up with new life and has flourished with increasing power until the present.

Master Wilfrid Morison, the wonderful boy soprano, who is to take part in the anniversary concert tonight, sang at both morning and evening services, his splendid singing being greatly appreciated by the congregation.

ANNIVERSARY SERVICES AT ST. PAUL'S CHURCH

Inspiring Sermons Were Delivered Morning and Evening by Rev. Dr. Eakins, Ph.B., of Toronto---Large Congregations Were Present During the Day.

The sixteenth anniversary services of St. Paul's Presbyterian Church were attended by large congregations yesterday. Excellent music was rendered by the choir, under the able leadership of Mr. Crane, while Miss Helen Davies, the talented soloist, sang with great sweetness of tone and expression in a number of the leading parts. The Rev. Dr. Eakins, Ph. B., of Toronto University, delivered inspiring and scholarly sermons at both services.

"Except I shall see in His hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails and thrust my hand into His side, I will not believe."—John xx:25.

This man belongs to the great army of the misunderstood, whom wise people dismiss with an epithet. Doubting Thomas we have called him and thereby have done him an injustice. He was cautious with the reasoned caution of one who would not make his judgment blind. There was some ground for his reserve. This Man, around whom their hopes had gathered, was dead. Thomas wanted certainty, and the facts seemed fatal to his faith. The text was taken as an illustration of a principle which contains the essence of practical Christianity, and for the enforcement of a statement that is becoming increasingly persistent. What ever theories of the Atonement men may have, on one thing they are united; that is, that the cross means sacrifice. But this sacrifice is not simply an act but an universal law. It is the symbol of the life of God, an illustration of what God had been doing from all eternity. It is also a symbol of the life of Jesus. Calvary was not the only hill that Jesus climbed, nor the cross of wood the only cross that Jesus bore. His was a living sacrifice, and there were blood drops all the way. If this be true, the cross comes to us as a tremendous moral obligation, and furnishes us with a rule by which to order our lives. It will not do to cling to it to win a heaven by and by; we must take it up. Discipleship consists in shaping the mind and purpose to this Master of men, and in accepting the social good as the end of life. It has been said that God and one man could make any other religion in the world, but that it takes God and two men to make Christianity. We see this law of sacrifice in operation everywhere and recognize it as the law of normal human life. That is why we regard Christianity as the Crown and Glory of manhood, the Norm and Pattern of all that is highest, and the Moral Emperor of the world. It is on this account that we give our admiration to men like Father Damien, and to multitudes who have toiled up their Calvaries in the service of their fellows. Then we are here as Christ's representatives. Our only business in life is to carry the incarnation along. It is time that we gave the cross its true place in our lives; for men know that when we make the law of the jungle the ruling principle, giving the ape and tiger ample verge and scope enough, that is the contravention of the Christ Spirit. The motives appealed to in life are, in the main, selfish, and men may live in utter selfishness without incurring reprobation. It is on this account that multitudes are watching our churches with ominous reserve. "Where is the print of the nails?" they say. "Have you attempted to save yourselves and forgotten Him who could not do that because He must needs save others?" The world may err in vision and stumble in judgment, but its vision and its judgment are clear enough to recognize the marks of a Christian. It is not enough that Jesus died on His cross long years ago. If the love of God is to be manifested to-day, if society is to be born again into a higher life and nobler, it must be through the ministerial effort of those who hear the voice of the Master saying: "We must together, you and I, redeem the world physically, mentally, spiritually, and lift it out of its welter of sorrow and of sin."

WHITE THE SUMMER FAVORITE

In Women's Wash Dress Materials

It's a well known fact that white is more comfortable for summer wear than any colour on the index of colours. White reflects light and retards heat while darker shades generally absorb it, and to absorb heat means that the object clothed in the dark fabric will suffer from over heat while the person in white will be most comfortable on the hottest day.

This feature, attending the wearing of white, has, as in past seasons, made white this year, a prime favorite in wash fabrics.

We have the most comprehensive range of white material yet shown in Peterborough—from the ordinery 12 1/2c muslins of medium fine texture to the sheer muslins, heavy silk finished vestings and dainty thread stripe dimities from 25c to 45c the yard. Vestings are a favorite, as usual, for all kinds of outer garments for summer wear.

THE DAINTY SOISETTE

A most useful dainty fabric, fine soft finish, in shades of mauve, Adriatic blue, grey, shell pink, brown, tuscan and white; 29 to 33 inches wide. A fabric suitable for either dresses or suits.

PRICED AT 35c to 45c

PRETTY COTTON VOILES

Sometimes called cotton linen and marquisettes, all much the same texture; all shades in plain and fancy, some by the yard and others in exclusive dress lengths. This is a very pretty fabric for summer dress

C. P. R. TRESPASSERS WILL BE PROSECUTED

Mr. W. B. Dodds, C.P.R. station agent, has received a copy of the following circular, issued to all station agents on the line:

Canadian Pacific Railway Company.
Office of the Superintendent
Refer to fyle 131.1
Toronto, May 1st, '11.

Subject: Personal accidents to trespassers.

Mr. Code.
Mr. Malloy.
All Agents.

The number of personal accidents to trespassers on our property is assuming such proportions that we will have to adopt stricter measures to stop it, and the only effective way of doing this is to prosecute before a Magistrate each and every case of trespass.

If the parties are known, and are habitual offenders they should be served with summonses. If tramps, etc., they should be arrested.

Last year on Easter lines, out of a total of 123 casualities, 93 or over 75 per cent. were to trespassers.

Representatives of the local newspapers should be informed as to the course the Company proposes to pursue in this matter, so that the same will be given publicity.

R. KING.
Superintendent.

All persons concerned in this matter are requested to heed the above notice. Mr. Dodd's instructions are explicit and in case the company's premises are trespassed upon, he has no alternative to doing his duty by procuring prosecution of the offenders against the company's orders.

B. F. Ackerman & Co's Fine Plant In Regina

The Daily Standard of Regina, says:

A five storey warehouse of liberal dimensions and of a class calculated to place it in a class of its own, will be constructed during the present year by the B. F. Ackerman, Son & Company. Plans have been drawn and accepted with some minor changes, and the contract for the work has practically been let to the Parsons Construction Company. The building will not only be one of the largest in the city, but being situated on lots 19 and 20, in block 208, will be one of the most central warehouses in the city. Storey & Van Egmond have arranged the plans, which call for an approved style of warehouse, and although the external appearance will be of the usual type characteristic of warehouses, it will be of the highest efficiency. Some slight alterations are being made to the plans at the present time to comply with suggestions made by the Ackerman Company. The original intention was that the warehouse be four storeys in height, but that has been changed, it being deemed advisable to have it five storeys.

The warehouse when completed will easily outclass everything of the kind in the city. It will be five storeys in height, and while the plain design usually characteristic of warehouses will be in evidence, its efficiency will be first class. The building will be 80 ft. by 180 ft. in dimensions. The construcion is of the most approved type for such buildings, the slow burning heavy mill type.

The original intention of the Ackerman Company was to erect a four struction is of the most approved type It was later deemed advisable to add one storey and have the type of construction changed to the heavy slow-burning mill construction, which has been largely adopted in this city of late. In place of the ordinary joists as supports, originally planned, the flooring will be of heavy construction and depend entirely on the steel girders for support. The flooring will be six inches in depth, with a wooden flooring covering it one inch in thickness.

The plans for the new building have been practically completed, although some of the minor details of the changes advised by the B. F. Ackerman Son & Company, have not yet been completed. Until the plans have been completed in every detail the contract for the erection of the building will not be let. It is understood that the Parsons Construction Company is the lowest tenderer.

The new warehouse will be erected on lots 19 and 20 in block 208, on Dewdney street, between Cornwall and Scarth street, or in the very centre of the warehouse and wholesale district. The proposed warehouse when completed will have a much greater capacity than the other warehouses, and will be at least one storey higher than any of the other warehouses either erected or contemplated in this city, so far as is known.

Work on the excavation will be commenced without delay in order that the building may be completed at the earliest possible date. The B. F. Ackerman, Son & Company will continue to occupy their present warehouse apartments in the Ellis Buildings on Dewdney street until the proposed new structure is completed.

A still hunt was at once instituted and the wayward one was rounded up about six o'clock, apparently none the worse for its experience. The child belonged to Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Thompson, who reside at 474 Donegal street.

Found Dead Body.

Toronto, May 8.—As Policeman Scott was making his rounds through St. Enoch square, an alley running south from 11 Shuter street, early on Sunday morning, he came suddenly upon the body of a man wedged tightly in between a brick wall and some old doors. At first he thought the man might be still alive, and he sent a call for the police ambulance, which hurried what proved to be a corpse to St. Michael's Hospital. Here it was found that he had only been dead a short time, however, and, as there were no marks of violence on the body, the cause of death could not be ascertained. The body was then taken to the morgue.

The man was 5 feet 5 inches tall, and weighed 170 pounds. His hair and moustache were of steel gray color. He wore a blue serge suit, a white stiff shirt, and a polka dotted tie with red flowers.

To Minimize Accidents.

New York, May 8.—A nation-wide movement to minimise the number of industrial accidents, placed at 1,000,000 annually throughout the United States, will be inaugurated, it is announced, at the sixteenth convention of the National Association of Manufacturers to be held in New York from May 15 to 17. Three thousand manufacturers, it is expected, will attend.

Steamer Stormount Safe.

Montreal, May 8.—The steamship Stormount of the Montreal Transportation Co., which grounded early on Saturday morning between Longue Pointe and Pointe Aux Trembles, was hauled off the mud bank on which she came to grief early Saturday night by the combined efforts of four tugs. She has sustained practically no injury.

To Discuss Mixed Marriages.

Quebec, May 8.—Some interesting questions are to come before the coming session of the diocesan synod of the Anglican Church, which meets here on June 6.

Among the notices of motion given is one of the dean, to the effect that a committee to consist of three clergymen and three laymen be appointed to prepare a memorial to the general synod of the Church of England in Canada at its next session, on the subject of mixed marriages and the grave danger which threatens the whole community if the civil courts are allowed to annul marriages, which have been solemnized in strict accordance with the laws of the land.

SPRING HAS COME

It is without a doubt that the citizens of Peterborough are glad that Spring has dawned once more. Spring with all its beauties and blemishes, makes one feel joyful and happy after the cold and chilly days of winter. It makes everyone cheerful and feel glad that they are alive. The spectator observed the cheerful and smiling countenances of those who were enjoying a nice walk through Jackson Park yesterday afternoon. Many were taking the opportunity afforded them by nature, of enjoying the beautiful fresh air and sunshine. They were either walking around the park or sitting in the shade of the beautiful trees that spread their branches far and wide. The children seemed to enjoy the glorious afternoon and were laughing and playing around to their hearts content. Sweethearts were enjoying a pleasant walk in the park and seemed to feel glad that the cold and dreary days of winter have passed. Some were taking advantage of the day by using their Kodaks and claiming for themselves views of Mother Nature. The beautiful day seemed to bring about a feeling of friendship among everyone, and seemed to bring all in touch with one another. Spring seems to open up a new field to everyone after the wintry months, which compelled many to stay indoors. To see the people coming to and going from the park showed that they were glad that Spring had dawned and the summer days were coming. The birds filled the air with songs of gladness and their twitters and whistles mingled with the laughter and shouts of the young people as they were basking in the sunshine or cooling in the shade of the trees. The beautiful stream of water running through the park seemed to show life and activity after being frozen for some months past. The trees, which have been naked and barren during winter, are now budding forth and together with the green grass they make Spring joyous to all.

Well Known Hockey Player Dead

EDMONTON, ALTA, MAY 7.—The death took place this afternoon of John Winchester, the well-known hockey player. The deceased had been ill only two days, but the end came suddenly of acute diabetes. His father, Judge Winchester of Toronto, was wired for on Sunday and is now on his way here.

The deceased came to Edmonton two years ago, and played goal on the Edmonton Stanley Cup team. He had also played with the Maple Leafs, Winnipeg, Pittsburg, Toronto, Belleville and Montreal Shamrocks hockey teams. He was one of the most popular of the young men of the city. He leaves a wife to whom he was married only a little more than a year ago.

The deceased was well known in this city. His great playing as goalkeeper for the Belleville team in the "injunction" days was at once the admiration and despair of Peterborough fans.

Death Of Lady Ritchie

OTTAWA, MAY 7.—The death occured this morning at 8 o'clock of Lady Grace Vernon Ritchie, wife of the late Sir William Ritchie, former Chief Justice of Canada. The deceased was in her seventy-fifth year and was known as one of the most prominent women in the Capital. She was born in St. John, N.B., in the year 1836, and was the daughter of the late Mr. T. L. Nicholson. In the year 1856 she married Sir William Ritchie in St. John, and came to Ottawa in 1875, when her husband was appointed a judge on the Supreme Court Bench, and she has lived here ever since.

The deceased was the mother of Mr. Hazen Ritchie, of the Canadian General Electric Company, whose many friends will sympathize with him in his bereavement.

ARRESTED, CHARGED WITH ATTEMPTED GRAND LARCENY

NEW YORK, MAY 6.—Charles W. MacDonald, a well-to-do contractor of Camden, N.J., and the owner of a string of race horses, not only nipped what he regards as a plot to fleece him out of $21,000 by "wireless wire tapping," but caused thirteen newfound friends to be lodged in jail here last night, charged with attempted grand larceny.

Trailing MacDonald and one McCormick, alleged promoter of the scheme, detectives raided a house in the Tenderloin, made the thirteen arrests including McCormick, confiscated a number of telegraph and telephone instruments, whose wires, they say, led only as far as the walls, and seized alleged worthless cheques aggregating $159,000 and $245 in currency, wrapped about fifteen bundles and giving the appearance of a large amount.

MacDonald notified the police on Wednesday that he was to keep an appointment with McCormick, who had met him in Camden and Philadelphia, he said, and represented himself as the manager of a telegraph company and able to get first returns of the races. McDonald drew money from the bank and led McCormick to believe, at the detectives' suggestion, that it was $21,000 to be placed in the raided house "for making a clean-up of $200,000."

McCormick, according to the police, a William Crane, well known to them, and among the other men who were posing in the alleged fake pool room are several characters whom the police have down in the rogues' gallery as wire tappers.

Madero's Forces to Concentrate on the Cities—United States Ready to Advance—Orders Have Been Sent

UNREST INCREASING

El Paso, Texas, May 8.—General Francisco I. Madero, provisional president of Mexico, has ordered all the insurrecto troops to abandon positions they hold along the U. S. border and to concentrate their attack on cities in the interior. The cry among the insurgents now is "on to Mexico." Madero's decision is due, it is said, to a desire to avoid intervention, and also to a hope that such action will bring about the recognition of the insurrectos as belligerents by the U. S. and other powers.

The peace negotiations have been a hopeless failure. The political chiefs gathered for a final talk, completed the organization of the provisional government and bid farewell to their leader. Two committees were appointed on the executive council in Junta and to receive any new proposals from the Mexican Government and the other to direct the diplomatic or commercial relations of the revolutionists with the U. S.

In a statement issued Saturday night, when it became clear that the negotiations would be fruitless, Gen. Madero attributed the failure was due to the "inexplicable ambition" of Gen. Diaz."

"He alone will be responsible before the civilized world and in history for all the misery which the war may cause."

While admitting that the Government has agreed to practically all the demands of the insurrectos, Gen. Madero says:

"While Gen. Diaz is in power all laws will be fictitious and all promises tricks of war.

"To Mexico City within a month" is the program set forth by the rebel leaders, as they prepare to march. They have 4,600 men in the State of Chihuahua, and hope to recruit 2,000 on the march. Gen. Rabago with 1,000 federals is reported on the march from Terrazas, and an engagement with him is expected soon.

At the time of filing the despatch foreigners were not being molested by the mobs. Foreign Minister de la Barra and Minister of War Cosio are directing operations against the rioters.

Following the alarming despatch from Ambassador Wilson, Secretary of War Dickinson, Major-General Wood, chief of staff, and Representative Hay, chairman of the house military affairs committee, held a brief conference with President Taft at the White House.

Gen. Wood informed President Taft that plans to move additional troops to San Antonio have been ready for nearly a month, and the War Department needs only orders to despatch 9,000 more troops to Texas.

Warning orders were telegraphed yesterday to Major-Gen. Carter, commanding at San Antonio, instructing him to hold the troops in readiness for an instant forward movement.

The War Department for several weeks has had complete plans ready for the mobilization of the National Guard, which will, in the event of intervention, be called out simultaneously with the orders to the San Antonio troops to cross the border.

President Taft, after the conference yesterday afternoon, reiterated to Congressional callers his statement that he would not send a special message to Congress for authority to intervene unless it became absolutely necessary, and that under no circumstances would he order intervention without authority of Congress.

Ready to Advance.

New York, May 8.—The Washington correspondent of The American writes:

"Ambassador Wilson telegraphed the State Department Saturday that continuous fighting is going on in Mexico City, which is being quelled with great difficulty by the police and militia.

"Ambassador Wilson also informed President Diaz that all Americans in the city should be ordered out of the country at once; but the President refused to accede to their demands.

Says He'll Retire.

Mexico City, May 8.—Gen Porfiro Diaz last night issued a manifesto to the people of Mexico declaring his intention to resign the Presidency as soon as peace is restored. In this manner the President has virtually acceded to the demands of Fransico I. Madero that he make announcement of such intention.

As to when peace is actually restored, Gen. Diaz reserves the right to be the judge. In the words of the manifesto it will "when," according to the dictates of his conscience, I am sure that my resignation will not be followed by anarchy.

The President made it clear that he has no intention to abandon the Presidency while his country is at war and that he would not do so at any time under compulsion.

Unless the shipping federation, the shipowners' organization, gives a satisfactory reply to the demands of the National Seamen's and Firemen's Union of the United Kingdom, an attempt will be made some time in May to bring about a world-wide strike of the crews of both steamers and sailing ships.

Three bylaws were carried at Owen Sound on Saturday by large majorities. The first is to lend the Knitting Company $15,000 for twenty years; the second, to lend $25,000 to parties connected with the Adams Furniture Co. of Toronto, and the third to lend C. S. Lloyd & Co., Toronto, $25,000, all to erect new factories.

At the special invitation of the Federal member, Major Currie, the Minister of Agriculture for Ontario, Hon. J. S. Duff, was present to discuss the issue from a farmer's standpoint.

Friction Between China and Japan.

St. Petersburg, May 8.—The newspapers report fresh friction between China and Japan. No Man is Stronger Than His Stomach

A strong man is strong all over. No man can be strong who is suffering from weak stomach with its consequent indigestion, or from some other disease of the stomach and its associated organs, which impairs digestion and nutrition. For when the stomach is weak or diseased there is a loss of the nutrition contained in food, which is the source of all physical strength. When a man "doesn't feel just right," when he doesn't sleep well, has a uncomfortable feeling in the stomach after eating, is languid, nervous, irritable and despondent, he is losing the nutrition needs to make strength.

Such a man should use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It cures disease of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. It enriches the blood, invigorates the liver, stimulates the kidneys, nourishes the nerves, and so GIVES HEALTH AND STRENGTH TO THE WHOLE BODY.

You can't afford to accept a secret nostrum or a substitute for this non-alcoholic medicine of KNOWN COMPOSITION, not even though the urgent dealer may thereby make a little bigger profit. Ingredients printed on wrapper.

Mourning for Late King Edward Now Concluded—British House to Have a Long Session

MUCH BUSINESS IN SIGHT

London, May 8.—Court mourning ended Saturday with a memorial service at St. George's Chapel, at Windsor, for King Edward.

Queen Alexandra had returned for it. She is in impaired health and with little heart for the festivities of the coronation year. There was a full muster of the royal family at the Albert Chapel, with a small group of the late King's personal attendants.

The service was conducted by the Archbishop of Canterbury and the corresponding clerics of the memorial service for Queen Victoria, which King Edward had attended year after year.

The Dean of Windsor and Canon Dalton were with the archbishop, and the regular choir of St. George's was strengthened by voices from the chapels royal. The hymns had been selected by Queen Alexandra, and the royal mourners subsequently visited the burial vaults, which were illuminated by an electric plant recently installed by the King's orders.

The second year of the new reign opens brilliantly next week with two "souris" and a state drive of the King and Queen to Crystal Palace for the Festival of the Empire.

Westminster pointers indicate a long vacation during June, with a prolongation of the session until the middle or close of August. The Parliament bill will pass its final stage in the House of Commons Thursday night, and there will be an abundance of time for prolonged discussion in the House of Lords after the coronation.

The insurance bill, "made in Germany" with the exception of the tentative proposals respecting unemployment in a few carefully selected industries, will be deferred until another year. The finance bill will not arouse contention, except the clause for the payment of members, and a few bills relating to shops, coal mines and copyright ought to be easily enacted.

Court influence is being quietly exerted in favor of the acceptance of the Parliament bill, which was submitted to the people in December.

Lloyd-George's insurance scheme, while too complex to be understood without a campaign of education, has caught the imagination of the masses, and whatever befalls in the bye-elections it is a vote making scheme of constructive legislation. Perhaps the employers' votes will be lost by it when it comes into operation and creates antagonism between classes, but the main body of wage-earners will be attracted by it, especially as they will thereafter administer the sick, invalidity and unemployment funds.

Speaking at Manchester Saturday, Premier Asquith took the opportunity to dispose of the reports that there were dissentions in the Cabinet over the subject of Home rule for Ireland. "There is not a syllable of truth in, nor the shadow of a foundation for the statement," he said, and went on to remark that there had been an enormous change in public opinion on this question, adding:

"For the first time there is a really good understanding between the democracies of both islands. Material ties quite apart from all questions of sentiment bind them together in indissoluble union. During the last few years the Irish question has come to be regarded more and more as the most urgent part of Great Britain's great imperial problem."

Work on Cornwall Canal.

Cornwall, May 8.—Fallon Bros., who have just finished a contract above lock 17 in record time, have been awarded another contract for work in the north side of the canal above lock 19. It includes 200 yards of elevator crib work, of the same general character as that put in above 17. The bottom will be dredged to make a bed for the cribs, which will be filled with stone to near the water level, with concrete above. The work will go on at once and will be finished this summer.

Senator Scott McCurdy.

Washington, May 8.—A three-mile aeroplane race between Aviators J. A. D. McCurdy and Lincoln Beachy was the feature which aroused enthusiasm Saturday at Washington's aviation meet. Beachy won from his opponent in the fast time of five minutes, ten seconds.

In bomb dropping at a marked spot, representing the deck of a battleship, McCurdy hit the mark three times out of six.

The fifteenth anniversary of the first successful flight of a heavier-than-air machine, that of the late Dr. S. P. Langley, which was made over the Potomac River, was commemorated last night by a reception, known as Langley night at the University Club.

Moslems Were Incensed.

London, May 8.—A letter received from Jerusalem states that the Moslem Sheik, the guardian of the Mosque of Omar, was given $25,000 to permit the explorers of the Anglo-American syndicate to excavate beneath the sacred rock upon which the mosque stands. The Turkish governor, the writer says, received a far greater sum. The Moslems were so incensed that they threatened to lynch the sheik.

The excavators are supposed to have obtained sacred relics hidden by the Jews before Jerusalem was sacked by the Romans.

Offered a Judgeship.

Quebec, May 8.—C. E. Dorion, K.C., ex-batonnier of the Bar, received a telegram yesterday from Sir Wilfrid Laurier offering him the position of judge of this district, which is necessitated by the elevation of Sir Francois Langelier to the Lieutenant-Governorship.

A Special Ale For A Special Purpose

O'KEEFE'S Special Extra Mild Ale is a distinct and special brew. It is more than a light ale. It is Special Extra Mild—so light that it agrees with the most delicate stomach and will not cause Biliousness or Headaches.

The O'KEEFE Brewery originated this delightful Ale and gave it the very descriptive name—Special Extra Mild Ale.

If you have been drinking a Special Extra Mild Ale at all, you have been drinking O'KEEFE'S. Thus, you are familiar with the richness and delicious flavor of this masterly brew.

As there are now other ales bearing the title Special Ale, we caution you to specify O'KEEFE'S whenever you order Special Extra Mild.

Don't merely ask for Special Ale or Special Extra Mild—but give the full title—

FIXING STATISTICS.

Canadian and U. S. Figures Made on Different Basis.

Washington, May 8.—There will be a statement made in the Senate tending to reestablish the correctness of the figures of the farm board on farm labor cost in the United States and Canada. When Senator Stone of Missouri, in an argument for the Canadian reciprocity agreement, showed that the cost of farm labor was in many cases as much in Canada as in the United States, and sometimes more, the opponents of the bill attacked the accuracy of the figures. Now the figures will be place in their right light in the Senate, and probably the best argument which the hostile Senators can find will be that the statement of the comparison was a trifle awkward.

It appears that in making up its farm labor cost estimate the Canadian Government included an estimate of board. The United States in preparing its estimate did not include board, so when the comparison was made it was necessary for the Canadian Government to deduct its estimate for board, and this was what puzzled the Senators.

FIRE AT BROCKVILLE.

Ten Thousand Dollars' Damage Done in Blaze on Saturday.

Brockville, May 8.—A fire which broke out Saturday morning in J. M. McLennan's laundry on Buell street, for a time threatened the heart of the business portion of Brockville. The absence of a wind averted a conflagration that would have caused thousands of dollars worth of damage.

McLennan's Laundry and the adjoining livery stables of H. B. Sopers were completely destroyed. In addition to these buildings, the shoe shop of Thomas Bobier, W. H. Moore, the Central Hotel Stables, the carriage making shop of E. J. Kirst and the Brock Theatre were also damaged to a certain extent.

The damage is estimated at $10,000, with about half covered by insurance. Hundreds of dollars worth of laundried goods and carpets and rugs left for spring cleaning at the owners' risk were burned.

The fire is supposed to have originated in the boiler-room of the laundry.

An Anarchist Plot?

Paris, May 8.—Yesterday afternoon newspaper published a report that the police have discovered an anarchist plot to commit dynamite outrages against the prefecture of police, the Hotel de Ville or town hall, and the Ministry of the Interior. The authorities have refused to make a statement.

Failed to Elect Senator.

Denver, Colo., May 8.—The joint assembly of Colorado was dissolved on Saturday night without electing a United States Senator.

Ottawa, May 8.—Premier McBride of British Columbia and Hon. Mr. Bowser have gone to New York, whence they sail immediately for England.

A WOMAN'S BACK.

Not One Woman In Twenty Has a Stong Back.

The kidneys are to blame nine times out of ten.

When the blood isn't properly filtered the poisons that ought to be carried off by the kidneys are sent back through the system, and it's hardly to be wondered that backaches and lame backs come to make life miserable.

Doan's Kidney Pills are a specific for all kidney troubles. They begin by expelling all the poisonous matter from the kidneys, and then heal the delicate membranes and make their action regular and natural.

Mrs. A. H. Hutton, Jr., McCreary, Man., writes:—"Two years ago last spring I had a very severe pain in the small of my back. When I would rise it seemed as if my back would break. My kidneys were very badly out of order, and I would have to get up three or four times during the night. I took one box of Doan's Kidney Pills and they effected a cure."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50 cents per box or 3 for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by the T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

If ordering direct specify "Doan's."

Government Enables Canadian Northern to Link Up Lines—Interchange With the Intercolonial

A 1000 MILE LINK

Ottawa, May 9.—The Minister of Railways has given notice of the intention of the Government to guarantee the bonds of the Canadian Northern Railway over the completed and uncompleted portions of the company's line between Montreal and Port Arthur. This will enable the company to connect up its different sections east and west and carry out its scheme of a third transcontinental railway.

(1) Montreal to Port Arthur, including the part already constructed, to the extent of $35,000 per mile at 3 1-2 per cent. intefest.

(2) That the company shall give the Government a first mortgage on the line from Port Arthur to Montreal, except on the completed portion from Hawkesbury to Rideau Junction, near Ottawa, 62 1-2 miles, and about 10 miles of the company's Hatton branch south of Sellwood Junction, the trustees to be the British Empire Trust Co. and the National Trust Co., with which trust companies the company is to deposit bonds to the amount of $55,000 a mile, being approximately $2,565,500.

It is provided that at the request of the Canadian Northern Railway Co., the Government may pay interest on the bonds for the first two years, charging the company therefor at the rate of 3 1-2 per cent.

It is made conditional to the guarantee that the company shall carry traffic destined to a Canadian port over its own line; that the through rate on export traffic from the point of origin to the point of destination shall at no time be greater to a Canadian port than to a United States port; that all such traffic shall be carried to Canadian ocean ports and that the company shall not advise or encourage transportation to foreign ports. The Canadian Northern Railway is bound to construct terminals in Montreal and make arrangements for an interchange of traffic with the Intercolonial Railway.

BIG MARINE MERGER.

Deal Involving Lake Companies Through at Last.

Montreal, May 9.—The big steamboat merger, involving the R. & O., Northern & Inland Navigation Companies is through at last. All that is necessary now is the authorization from the Government to increase the R. & O. capital to $10,000,000. This will in all probability be put through the House at Ottawa on Friday next.

The executive will be in Montreal, with divisional points at Toronto, Sarnia and perhaps another western point. It is probable that the management of the combined companies will fall on R. & O. officials, although several changes may be made.

According to a director, the Furness people receive 12% for their holdings in the Northern Navigation, or the figure at which they acquired control. The Inland stock held by these interests will be taken over at the valuation of the appraisers, plus the amount decided upon as due the company for vested interests in the way of contracts for freight and as a running concern.

Chairman of Bridge Commission.

Montreal, May 9.—N. Monsarrat, bridge engineer of the C.P.R., has received a telegram from Ottawa announcing that an order-in-council has been put through, appointing him as successor to H. E. Vaultelet, the chairman of the Quebec Bridge Commission.

RAVAGES OF FIRES IN SEVERAL DISTRICTS

Rainy River District Again Threatened by Flames—Village of Ailesford Visited by Blaze.

MASSACHUSETTS SUFFERS

Fort Francis, May 9.—Owing to the extremely dry weather, the forest fires have started again, and unless rain sets in soon will be serious to the standing timber as well as to the lumbermen and loggers who have timber cut and ready for the drive. On the Duluth branch of the Canadian Northern between Kristasburg and Virginia, the fires have been raging with disastrous effects. The Village of Ray was within an ace of being wiped out on Saturday, while Bush, a little farther south, was completely burned. Fires are also raging south of International Falls and along the Minnesota border, which threaten to be a repetition of those of last fall. At Hannaford, a settler who was burned out last fall, was burned out again the end of the week, and with a strong wind blowing, the fire will sweep along the river.

No great damage was done on the Canadian side, although fires are reported at Frog Creek, north of here. Timber cruisers who have returned from the Quitico forest reserve, Hunter's Island, say fires are again breaking out there, and unless rains come soon, great damage will be done to the big timber, which is held by the Government as a protection to the game reserve.

Fire-Fighters Have Hard Work.

Dauphin, Man., May 9.—Bush fires have been raging on the Riding and Duck Mountains for the last few days, with everything most dry as tinder and a hurricane blowing day and night. Fire-fighters have had a hard task, but to-day the situation is practically under control. In the Riding Mountains, two outfits are fighting the biggest fire, working in from east and west towards a central point, when this fire will be under control. Another fire was sweeping down southwest of Grandview, but has been checked. Although these fires have swept a considerable area, they were checked before really getting into the standing timber. This town has lain under a pall of smoke some days, and all are praying for rain.

More fires are just reported at Roblin in the Riding Mountains. Forest Ranger W. A. Davis reports fire in Duck Mountain successfully coped with, though there is still a very bad bush fire at Birch River. The same conditions prevail at Bowman, where the Canadian Northern Railway bridges burned and being rapidly repaired. Every man capable of handling a pick and shovel has been pressed into service. Traffic is suspended, the train from Winnipeg having been sent back, and around to Prince Albert via Warman, Sask.

Until rain comes, fires are apt to break out anywhere at any time. The situation is grave throughout a very wide area. Most settlers have been forced to flee their homes.

Two Lost Their Lives.

Boston, May 9.—In various sections of Maine, Massachusetts and Rhode Iseland, tired hands of firefighters were able yesterday to relax their labors, secure in the belief that their troubles had succeeded in bringing under control the blazes that had destroyed thousands of acres of valuable lands, and in some cases, houses and farm buildings.

So far as known only two persons lost their lives in combating the flames. An unknown French-Canadian wood-chopper was burned to death near South Kingston, and the badly burned body of Albert Eldert of Winthorp, was found in a fire swept tract of woodland, near Marlboro, Mass.

Bad Fire at Buckingham.

Ottawa, May 9.—Fire, which broke out in a restaurant, kitchen in the town of Buckingham at an early hour yesterday morning destroyed a large section of the business centre, entailing a loss estimated at $125,000, only partly covered by insurance. The buildings burned were:

Cosgrave block: Loss on building, $10,000; insurance, $4,000; occupants, E. Johnson, jeweler, loss $1,000; insurance, $275; E. Pommier, jeweler, loss $3,000; insured $1,700; J. E. Gagnon, restaurant, loss $1,000, insurance $600; E. Fournier, barber, loss $600; Mrs. L. O. David, dressmaker, loss $500.

Grenier's livery barns, loss $1,000, no insurance.

McCallum and LaHale's three-storey brick house, loss on building and general mercantile stock, $75,000, insurance $30,000. Also occupied by Bank of Ottawa, loss $1,000, insured.

There were many narrow escapes, several persons having to jump to safety in their night clothing. Three children of the Gagnon family had to be dropped from upper windows by their parents.

Village Suffers.

Halifax, May 9.—Fanned by a strong westerly wind, a raging fire destroyed 16 buildings at Ailesford yesterday afternoon. Fully one-third of the village was swept away in two hours. It was the worst fire ever known in that part of the province. The fire raged with terrific fury. Men, women and children worked to save their valuables, many of them not having time to save anything, so fierce and swift was the progress of the flames.

Struck Wall of Canal.

Port Colborne, May 9.—The steamer Donnacona, which passed down the canal yesterday, bound from Fort William to Montreal with oats, collided with the stone wall near Ramy's Bend, causing a bad leak. Tugs pulled her back to the elevator here to unload. She is owned by the Inland Lines.

Boards as Tribute to Edward.

London, May 9.—Among the many suggestions for fittingly commemorating the reign of King Edward VII., perhaps the quaintest is that now put forward by Captain MacIlwaine, R.N. His suggestion is that the men of the British Empire, following the example of the late King, should put their razors aside and proceed to grow beards.

"King Edward," said Captain MacIlwaine, "not only grew a beard, but encouraged the growth among members of his personal staff. His brother, the Duke of Edinburgh, who was a naval officer, grew a beard. The present King, sharing the views of his father, grows a beard and make his staff do the same."

Intercolonial Postage.

Ottawa, May 9.—By agreement with the postal administration of the Union of South Africa, newspapers and periodicals published in Canada may be sent to all of the four provinces comprised in the union, viz.: Cape of Good Hope, Natal, Orange Free State, and Transvaal, at the same rates of prepayment, and subject to the same conditions as are applicable to that class of matter when posted for delivery within Canada.

Found Dead In Bed.

Kingston, May 9.—Thomas Lyons of Portland was found dead in bed. Heart disease was the cause. He was 69 years old, a widower and leaves a large family.

When James Palfner, a driver, came home from work, he found his wife dead. She was comparatively well when he went to work. She was 49 years of age.

Aviator Injured.

Issy Les Moulineux, France, May 9.—While taking an early morning flight yesterday Aviator See collided with a telegraph pole erected on the top of a residence. He fell to the roof and was seriously injured.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

The St. Mary's River is choked with ice.

The Democratic free list bill passed the House of Representatives by 230 to 109.

The T. & N. O. Commission is to send out a party this summer to explore the Moose River country.

James Emerson, a respected citizen of Belleville, was arrested on a charge of robbing the Methodist parsonage.

Margaret Anglin, the Canadian actress, was married last night in St. Patrick's Cathedral, New York, to Mr. Howard Hull, a magazine writer.

It is expected that by the end of the week tenders will be called for the new departmental block in Ottawa, to cost between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000.

The awards in the Earl Grey musical and dramatic competitions have been made public. Edmonton wins the dramatic and Winnipeg the musical trophy.

Two heavy fines were meted out by Supt. Smith of the Indian Department at Brantford on Saturday to Messrs. Preis & Armour of Onondaga for the removal of timber from the Indian Reserve.

The only criminal case on the Kenora docket, the Crown v. Berillo, opened and closed in the space of less than an hour yesterday, when the jury returned a verdict of not guilty at the time of the murder, owing to insanity.

Julia Davis, who disappeared from her home in Hamilton, leaving word that she was going to commit suicide, was found last evening on the Dundas road in a dazed condition and evidently suffering from the effects of some drug.

Talked 2,000 Miles.

New York, May 9.—For the first time in the history of mankind the human voice carried 2,000 miles direct last night, when New York found Denver over the long distance telephone wires. A group of Manhattan newspaper men in one of the top floors of a downtown skyscraper threw their voices across the plains and the mountains of nine states to another group awaiting the message in the Rocky Mountain cliff, picked up Omaha on the way and also gossipped with Chicago.

"The next stop is San Francisco," declared J. J. Carty, chief engineer of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. "We are on the right tract, and before long will have our wires clear through from New York to San Francisco."

For Poor of Montreal.

Montreal, May 9.—A big fortune has been left by an English gentleman to be used for the benefit of the poor of the City of Montreal. This was the news received by Mayor Guerin yesterday from a prominent firm of London solicitors. The document stated that there recently died in London a gentleman named Gustave Mertin. In his will, which the solicitors hold, it is stated that $105,000 worth of property in London is to be disposed of in a manner that will benefit the poor of Montreal. In addition to this it is shown that the deceased owned considerable property in Paris, and that this property is also to be used for the benefit of the poor of Montreal.

Aged Engineer Dead.

Montreal, May 9.—Thomas Pringle, milling and hydraulic engineer, and one of the best known engineers in the world, died here early yesterday morning after an illness of ten years, aged 81. His engineering feat of harnessing the Lachine Rapids, establishing an electric company to sell the product, was the means of the establishment of electricity for all purposes in Montreal. He was a most successful engineer for 40 years. Two sons survive him—Alex. Pringle, one of the four promoters of the Lorne-McDougall group, and R. E. T. Pringle.

Cost $60,000 to Rebuild.

Kingston, May 9.—Perry Jones of Cleveland, representing the Underwriters' Association, and Hugh Calderwood, surveyor, of Toronto, are inspecting the steamer John Sharples, wrecked off Galloup Islands. They report that it will cost $50,000 to rebuild the boat. The wreckage bill is over $20,000 and the steamer is now in the hands of the underwriters, having been abandoned by her owners.

THE ADDED ESTIMATES

Supplementaries Brought Down Total $17,020,900—Well Under the Revenue—Millions to Spare

WAS A QUIET DAY

Ottawa, May 9.—Supplementary estimates for the current fiscal year, totalling $17,020,900, were tabled in the Commons yesterday afternoon by the Minister of Finance. Of this total the amount charged to revenue is $8,746,261, and to capital account $8,274,062. Added to the main estimates the total amount to be voted for the year is $156,227,180, of which $46,462,621 is on capital account, leaving the amount chargeable to income $109,774,559, or some eight millions less than the revenue of the past year, and at least twenty millions less than the estimated revenue for the current year.

The capital expenditure provided for in the total vote of $46,462,621 is largely made up of four items—namely, $27,000,000 for National Transcontinental Railway construction, $2,000,000 for Hudson Bay Railway construction, $2,550,000 for the Quebec bridge, and nearly five millions for improvements and extensions of the Intercolonial Railway, principally in Nova Scotia.

A quiet sitting with private bills and supply was the order of Parliamentary business yesterday. There was just a breath of reciprocity when Hon. George E. Foster called the attention of the Government to a newspaper despatch from Berlin, Germany, which stated that an arrangement had been come to between Canada and Germany that as soon as the reciprocity agreement with the United States had been carried through Parliament, better trade relations would be brought about between the two countries.

Hon. W. S. Fielding said there had been no negotiations between Canada and Germany, and there was no understanding. He had no doubt, however, that the German Government would be willing to open negotiations, but there had been none so far.

A long discussion ensued over the Senate bill to incorporate the Grain Growers' Grain Co. Mr. Foster claimed that the powers of the company went far beyond the purpose indicated by the designation of the company, including manufactures, lumbering, coal mining, publishing, shipbuilding, holding of bank debentures and the authorization to lend money generally. Such legislation might be dangerous.

Mr. Bstan said that these powers could have been got by incorporating the company under the Companies' Act.

A. S. Meighen (Portage la Prairie) remarked that the place to curtail the power was in the companies' Act itself. The gravest point of danger was in chartering a company with indiscriminately wide powers with such a name.

Liberals Hold Barnstaple.

London, May 9.—In the Barnstaple division of Devon Sir Godfrey Baring (Liberal) was elected Saturday with 6,339 votes. C. S. Parker, Unionist, had 5,751.

The vacancy was caused by the appointment of Sir E. J. Soares (Liberal) to be Assistant-Comptroller of the National Debt Office—a post which carries with it a salary of $4,000 a year, increasing to $5,000. The Unionists were hopeful of capturing the seat, and during the contest had the assistance of Gen. Sir R. Pole Carew, M.P., Mr. A. Shirley Benn, M.P., Capt. Morrison Bell, M.P., Capt. Jas. Craig, M.P., Mr. J. W. Shear, M.P., Sir C. Hunter, M.P., Mr. Lionel Rothschild, M.P., and Mr. F. Mildmay, M.P.

In December the figures were: Soares (L.) 6,047; Parker (U.) 5,155.

Marriage Was Legal.

Montreal, May 9.—Judgment has been given in the court of review maintaining the marriage as having been legally contracted between Napoleon Tramblay, farmer, St. Victoire, Richelieu, and Albini Des Patie.

The parties were married on Oct. 25, 1904, and five years afterwards the husband took an action to have the marriage declared null and void on the ground that they were first cousins and that previous to the wedding the submitted necessary dispensation had not been obtained from the church.

The Superior Court of Richelieu gave judgment on Oct. 4 last granting dissolution of the marriage, but against this the wife appealed, and the Court of Review, Judges Tait, Fortin and Mercier have just reversed this judgment.

Opium Agreement Signed.

Pekin, May 9.—The Anglo-Chinese opium agreement was signed yesterday, and becomes operative immediately. It provides that China shall annually diminish its production of opium proportionately with the Indian export, until its extinction in 1917. Great Britain agrees that the importation of Indian opium into China shall ceases earlier, if the native production in that country ceases.

Great Britain is to be granted facilities for investigating this diminution, and China is to have similar facilities with reference to the sales and packing of opium in India. The Indian exports to China shall not exceed 30,000 chests in 1911, and they will be reduced 5,100 chests annually.

THE BLACK CROSS

By OLIVE M. BRIGGS

"Sheep!" he said, "Oxen—cows! You have no temperament, no feeling—nothing — nothing! Where are your souls? Haven't you any souls? Don't you hear what I say? Piano! P-i-a-n-o! When I say piano, do I mean forte?"

He shrugged his shoulders, and his eyes flashed scornfully over the stage and the singers. "Now ladies, attention if you please! Look at me—keep your eyes on my baton! Now—piano!"

The voices of the sopranos rose softly.

"Crescendo!" They increased.

"Donnerwetter! May the devil take you! Crescendo, I say? Crescendo! Do you need all day to make crescendo?" He shrieked at them; and then, in a temper of rage, heffung the baton down and leaped from the platform.

"Enough!" he said, "My teeth are on edge; my ears burn! Sit down.—Is Fraulein Neumann here?"

A stout woman in a red blouse stepped timidly forward.

"Oh, you are, are you? Well, Madame, you haven't distinguished yourself so far; perhaps you will do better alone. Have you the score?"

"Yes, Herr Kapellmeister".

"Begin then."

The soprano took a long breath, and her cheeks grew red like her blouse. She watched the eyes of the leader, and there was a light in them that she mistrusted, a reddish glimmer that boded evil to any who crossed him.

She began tremulously.

"Stop."

She started again.

"Your voice quavers like a Jews' harp. What's the matter with you?"

"I don't know, Herr Kapellmeister. it was all right when I tried it this morning."

"Well, it's all wrong now."

The soprano bit her lips: "I am doing my best, Herr Kapellmeister," she said, "It is very difficult to take that high A without the orchestra." Her tone was slightly defiant, but she dropped her eyes when he stared at her.

"Humph!" he said, "Very difficult! You expect the orchestra to cover your shake I suppose. Go home and study it, Madame. Siegfried would listen in vain for a bird if you were in the flies. He would never recognize that—pah!" He waved his hand:

Where is the Frauwein who wanted her voice tried?" he said curtly, "If she is present she may come forward". He took out his watch and glanced at it. "The chorus may wait he said, "look at your scores meanwhile, meine Herren, meine Damen—and notice the marks!

"Ah, Madame."

A slim figure with a cloak about her shoulders, bareheaded, approached from the wings; her curls, cut short like a boy's, sparkled and gleamed. The Kapellmeister surveyed her coldly as she drew nearer, and then he turned and seated himself at the piano.

"Your voice," he said shortly. "Hu—what?"

"Soprano, Monsieur."

"We have enough sopranos—too many now! We don't know what to do with them all."

The girl shivered a little under the cloak. "Oh," she faltered, "Then you won't hear me?"

"I never said I wouldn't hear you, Madame; I simply warned you. If you were alt now—but for a soprano there is one chance in a thousand, unless—" He struck a chord on the piano.

The chorus sat very still. The trying of a new voice was always a diversion; it was more amusing to watch the grilling of a victim than to be scorched themselves; and the Kapellmeister in that mood—oh Je! They smiled warily at one another behind their scores and stared at the slight, girlish figure beside the pianoforte.

She was stooping a little as if near sighted, looking over the shoulder of the Conductor at the music on the piano rack.

"Can you read at sight, Madame?"

"Yes," said Kaya.

"Have you ever seen this before?"

"I studied it—once."

"This?"

"I studied that, too."

"So," he said, "Then you either have a voice or you haven't, one or the other. Where did you study?"

The girl hesitated a moment; then she bent lower and whispered to him "St. Petersburg, Monsieur, with Helmanoff."

"The great Helmanoff?"

"Yes, Monsieur."

"You are not French then, you are Russian? They told me Mademoiselle Pou-Pou—"

"That is not my real name."

"No?"

Kaya quivered a moment: "I am—Russian," she said, "I am an exile. Don't ask, Monsieur—not here! I am—I am afraid."

The Kapellmeister went on improvising arpeggios on the piano as if he had not heard. He seemed to be pondering. "That name—" he said. "Pou-Poussin! Some one called on me the other day of that name. I remember it because when I came in she was gone. Was it you?"

The girl stood silent.

He turned suddenly and looked at her: "You are young," he said, "and too slim to have a voice. Na—child! You are trembling as if you had a chill, and the House is like an oven. Come—don't be frightened. The chorus are owls; they can stare and screech, but they know nothing. Sit down here by me and sing what you choose. Let your voice out."

"Shall I sing a Russian song, Monsieur?"

"Very well."

The Kapellmeister leaned back in his chair with his arms folded. He gave one fierce glance at the chorus over his shoulder. "Hush!" he cried, "No noise if you please. Attend to your scores, or go out. Now, Fraulein—sing."

Kaya pushed the chair to one side and moved closer to the piano, leaning on it and gazing out into the darkened House, at the rows of seats, ghostly and empty, and the black cave beyond. A Volkslied came to her mind, one she had heard as a child and been rocked to, a peasant song, simple and touching. Her lips parted slightly.

For a moment there was silence: then the tones came like a breath, soft and pianissimo, clear as the trill of a bird in the forest wooing its mate. It rose and fell, swelling out, filling the spaces, choing through the vault:

"On the mountain-top were two little doves;
Their wings were soft, they shimmered and shone.
Dear little doves, pray a prayer — a prayer
For the son of Fedosjen, Michael—Michael,
For he is alone — alone."

With the last word, repeated, half whispered, the voice died away again and she stood there, still leaning against the piano and clasping her hands, looking at the Kapellmeister with her blue eyes dark and pleading, like two wells. "Will it do?" she said with her voice faltering. "Will you take me, Herr Director—in the chorus?"

The Kapellmeister shrugged his shoulders: "You have no voice for a chorus," he said roughly. "Try this."

"I know," said Kaya, "My voice is not as it was. Helmanoff—" she laughed unsteadily, "he would be so angry if he heard me, and tell me to study, just as you told the Mademoiselle who went out; but I will do better, Monsieur, believe me. I will work so hard, and my voice will come back in time after—" She gazed at him and a mist came over her eyes. "Do take me," she said, "I beg you to take me—I beg you."

The Kapellmeister passed his hand over his face: "Tschut, child!" he said, "What are you talking about? Be quiet now and sing this as I tell you. You have heard it before?"

"Yes, I have heard it."

"And sung it perhaps with Helmanoff?"

"Yes—Monsieur."

"Yes, Monsieur."

He handed her the score, running his fingers over the bird motive of 'Siegfried,' giving her the key. Then he leaned back again and folded his arms.

Kaya gave her head a little backward movement as if to free her throat, and threw off the cloak, standing straight.

The tones came out like the sound of a flute, high and pure: they rose in her throat, swelling it out as she sang, pouring through the arch of her lips without effort or strain.

"Bravo!" cried the Director, "Um Himmel's Willen, child, you have a voice like a lark rising in the meadows, and you sing—Bravo! Bravo!"

He put out his hands and took the girl's trembling ones into his own.

"You will take me?" she said, "you see, when I am not so nervous it will go better."

The Kapellmeister laughed and took a card out of his pocket: "Write your name here," he said, "Your real one. I won't tell—and your address."

Kaya drew back suddenly: "I live in the mill," she said, "You know, the Nonnen-Muhle by the promenade? You won't let any one know, will you, Monsieur, because—"

"Are you afraid of spies, child? Tut, the chorus can't hear. I won't tell a soul."

"No one?"

"On my honour—no one. Now, your name?"

She looked away from him a moment; then she took the pencil and wrote on the card in small, running letters: "Marya Pulitsin."

"So that's your real name, is it?"

Her eyes were clear and blue like a child's. "No," she said, "—no." And she glanced back over her shoulder with her finger to her lips.

"Never mind," said the Kapellmeister. "You are white, child, what are you afraid of? There are no spies here! Give me the card. That is a strange place to live in—the Nonnen-Muhle! I didn't know anyone lived there, excepting the old man who takes charge of the mill. Well, in a day or so—perhaps towards the end of the week you will hear from me." He waved to the chorus. "Stand up, meine Hefren, meine Damen!" he said, "Get your scores ready. Good-bye now, Fraulein.—Donnerwetter! What ails you?"

"If you want to try my voice again' said Kaya timidly "would you mind, sir, trying it to-day?—this afternoon or even this evening.

"Now by all that is holy, why, pray? I have the solos to-night, and this afternoon a rehearsal for 'Siegfried.'" The Kapellmeister frowned: "Do you think I have nothing on earth to do, child, but run after voices?"

"Oh!" cried Kaya, "I didn't mean that! I beg your pardon. It doesn't matter—I beg your pardon, Herr Director." She flushed suddenly, and started away from him, as if to put the piano between them and flee towards the door.

He looked at her narrowly, and the harsh lines came back to his face. "A pest on these singers!" he muttered under his breath, "They want coddling. She thinks perhaps she is a Patti and is planning for her salary already. Potztausend! Bewahret He turned on his heel curtly and mounted the platform, taking up the baton.

"Now," he cried, "The D again—all together! Pia—no!"

Kaya stole across the stage swiftly on tiptoe, threading her way through the scenery that was standing in rows, one behind the other, in readiness for the performance that night, and disappeared into the wings. It was dusty there and deserted. An occasional stage-hand hurried by in the distance bent on some errand, and from the back came the sound of hammering. The chorus was singing forte now, and the sound filled the uttermost corner, drowning the noise of the hammer. Kaya stood still for a moment, clinching her hands: "My God," she said, "I have tried the last and it has failed! The end of this week" she laughed to herself in readiness for the performance that means. Helmanoff used to get rid of new pupils that way: 'You will hear' he would say; but they never heard.'

Cold Upsets the Kidneys

And Uric Acid Poisons Bring Pains and Aches to Back and Limbs

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS

You feel pains in the back, find the urine heavy and unduly coloured, have indigestion and irregularity of the bowels and these may be the rheumatic twinges.

You wonder what has gone wrong until you recollect that you have been exposed to sudden changes of temperature, perhaps sitting in a draft or passing from a very warm room to be chilled by the outdoor air.

The kidneys are most susceptible to cold, and a sudden lowering of temperature throws an extra burden on them by closing the pores of the skin, which are ordinarily a great aid to the kidneys in removing poisons from the blood.

The danger lies in not understanding the meaning of the symtoms given in the first paragraph. Once you know that the kidneys need assistance you can help them promptly by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

Every day you put off treatment you are taking the risk of developing Bright's disease, dropsy or rheumatism. Because of the inactivity of the failing kidneys your system is being loaded with poisonous impurities, and that means pains and suffering.

Get Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills to-day. One pill a dose; 25 cents a box, all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

I have a fine strong baby daughter now, which I did not have before taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound." — Mrs. A. A. Grimm, Route 44, Dewittville, N.Y.

The above is only one of the thousands of grateful letters which are constantly being received by the Pinkham Medicine Company of Lynn, Mass., which prove beyond a doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, actually does cure these obstinate diseases of women, and that every such suffering woman owes it to herself to at least give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial before submitting to an operation, or giving up hope of recovery.

Mrs. Pinkham of Lynn, Mass., invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health and her advice is free.

MOTHERS!
DO YOU KNOW -

That when you put a salve onto your child's skin, it passes through the pores and enters the blood, just as surely as if you put it into the child's stomach?

You would not put a coarse mass of animal fat, colored by vegetable mineral poisons (such as many crude salves are) into your child's blood by way of the stomach? Then why do so by way of the pores?

Take no risk. Use always the pure herbal essences provided in Zam-Buk. Zam-Buk contains no trace of any animal oil or fat, and no poisonous mineral coloring matter. From start to finish it is purely herbal.

It will heal sores, ulcers, abscesses, eruptions, varicose ulcers, cuts, burns and bruises more quickly than any other known preparation. It is antiseptic, quickly stops the spreading of a sore or cut, cases pain, inflamed nerves and blood-poisoning. It is a combination of healing power and actual purity. Ask those who have used it.

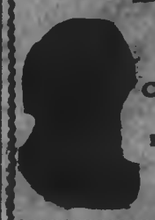
ADVERTISE IN THE EXAMINER

PEOPLE'S PULPIT.



Sermon by CHARLES T. RUSSELL Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle.

"Lazarus, Come Forth"

"With What Body Do They Come?"—Texas Viewed as a Large Cemetery.

New York, May 7.—Pastor Russell preached yesterday at the Academy of Music to an overflowing house. Crowds were turned away. The text was "When they heard of the resurrection of the dead some mocked" (Acts xvii, 32.) Pastor Russell made some prefatory remarks, explaining that although he had accepted the pastorate of the London Tabernacle congregation, this should not be understood to imply that he had any thought of leaving America permanently. He greatly appreciates the reverential spirit of the British, but this does not signify greater love for the land of his fathers than for the land of his birth. He accepted the London pastorate with the clear understanding that he must not be expected to serve there more than four months in the year. More and more he feels that his ministry is a general one. He specially thanks God for the privilege of addressing ten million readers through the press of America and Great Britain.

Pastor Russell remarked that he was not preaching for popularity, but to re-establish "the faith once delivered to the saints," which, in a marked degree, had been lost during the Dark Ages. He stood on the broad platform of the Word of God, unrestricted by any creed tenets made by men. He was answerable to no sect or party. He had already discussed the Resurrection subject for three Sundays and assumed that his interested hearers had kept in touch with him during his absence, through the press reports.

As some who heard St. Paul preach the resurrection of the dead mocked, so, quite likely, many have mocked as they read Pastor Russell's sermons. Nevertheless, the Word of the Lord standeth sure: "There shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust." It was the great Teacher Himself who said, "All who are in their graves shall hear the voice of the Son of Man and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life—perfection—they that have done evil unto the resurrection of judgment," crisis. Astor (John v, 28, 29; Acts xxiv, 15).

To those that believe that the dead are more alive now than when they were alive, the doctrine of the resurrection must, of necessity, be foolishness. And whoever logically believes in the resurrection of the dead must, of necessity, consider the popular views on man's condition in death absurd in the extreme. There is no middle ground. Either man is dead when he is dead, as the Bible declares, and can have no further knowledge or [illegible] or else man does not die at all when he seems to die—a theory with which the Bible is at war and which we claim has no foundation in fact or reason. It is a mythology. The entire heathen world believe this theory to-day. The doctrine came into the Christian Church in opposition to the "resurrection" doctrine long centuries ago — about the fourth century, when hordes of heathen were baptized and called Christians, with but slight appreciation of "the faith once delivered to the saints."

Numerous objections to the resurrection are raised. It is claimed that it would be impossible for God to resurrect the dead, if they were really dead. It is claimed that, if our Lord's words were fulfilled and all that are in their graves should come forth, the earth would be so densely populated that if stood on each other's heads several rows deep all over the earth there would not be room for them. It is claimed that it would be impossible to provide food and raiment for so many. The resurrection is denounced as contrary to the laws of nature, according to all the history of the past.

The latter claim we admit. The resurrection of the dead will be something out of keeping with anything in man's experience. Only those who have an implicit faith in the Creator and in His promise will be able to receive this doctrine, which credits the Almighty with a Divine power exceeding anything else that could be imagined.

As to the other points, let us see: Many who men in public positions are very unscientific, even when called scientists. They sometimes jump at conclusions in an astounding manner. For instance, we all know how some of these scientific gentlemen laugh at the Bible's records and declare that humanity has been upon the earth millions of years. If we ask for the proof they are astonished that their omniscience should be questioned. They knock a chip from a block of stone, look at it wisely, and declare it so many millions of years old. But a new school geologists is arising which takes note of the fact that many of the rocks were evidently formed just as we to-day set our concrete blocks and turn them to stone within a few days.

Let us take the Bible as our authority. Let us believe what it says: that man was created about six thousand years ago. Let us note the gradual progress of the race. A reasonable and, we believe, liberal estimate of the entire number of the race since Adam is twenty thousand millions. Let us figure out how many square feet it would require to lay them each full length in graves. Then turn to the atlas. Look at the number of square miles in the State of Texas. Divide this into square feet, and what do we find? We find that more than twice the number of our large estimate of all who have ever lived could be buried in separate graves in that one state alone.

As for clothing, Mr. Edison tells us that new inventions are in progress which, ere long, will make clothing wonderfully cheap — "dirt cheap." "Mineral wool" is the first step in this direction. It sells cheaply by the ton. Further development is expected to make this fit for man's use as clothing. The supply is inexhaustible. The [illegible] Divine provision for the human family during the Messianic reign that "the earth shall yield her increase" and "the wilderness shall blossom as the rose," etc.

From every direction information is coming of new species of wheat and corn much more prolific than what we have been using. Additionally, there is recently an announcement of a method of magnetizing grains before they are planted, which will permit the raising of at least three crops a year in the temperate zones. Additionally, nitrogen is being extracted from the atmosphere and used to enrich the worn-out soils.

Furthermore, we may be sure that He Who provided Eden for our first parents is abundantly able, as He has promised, to make of earth a Paradise, in which the blessing of the Lord will be upon humanity; and the earth, as the Divine footstool, shall be made glorious. Moreover, be it remembered that the Scriptures distinctly declare that the propagation of the species is intended merely for the present time and that those who will attain, in the New Age, to the resurrection will "neither marry nor be given in marriage." The propagation of the human race is intended to proceed only until the earth shall be filled. But over and above all this, the great Creator, Whose Plan is being worked out in man's creation, man's redemption and man's restitution, knows the end from the beginning and is fully able to do all that He has promised. If necessary, how easy it would be for Him to still further sink the bed of portions of the oceans and to raise up continents in the Atlantic and Pacific larger in extent than the present land surface!

However, we have nothing to say to those who "mock" at the Divine promise of a resurrection of the dead and who, because of a lack of faith in the Almighty, prefer the vain imaginations of the human mind to the positive promises of the Creator. We have merely thrown out some suggestions helpful to the faith of those who are really seeking Divine wisdom and who are in danger of being side-tracked by "science falsely so-called."

It is in full accord with the promise of a resurrection that in the Bible teachings we read that "Abraham slept with his fathers"; and similarly read of kings, good and bad, and of Prophets, Apostles and others. Thus St. Stephen, the first Christian martyr stoned to death, we are told, "fell asleep." St. Paul tells us that some will be alive at the remain to the coming of Messiah; and he remarks, "Behold, I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed" (I. Corinthians xv, 51). Again he tells us that for our comfort ourselves and [illegible] respects our dead friends and neighbors, that they all "sleep in Jesus" and are to be brought from the dead by Him. The whole world sleeps in Jesus, in the sense that their resurrection hope—their hope of awakening in the resurrection morning, is based upon the work which Jesus accomplished as the world's Redeemer.

No one will dispute that the Bible declares that the dead are asleep. It is, therefore, a proper and pertinent question that every Bible student should be prepared to answer—Where do the dead sleep, waiting for an awakening? Surely not in heaven, where all is life and happiness! Surely not in the Purgatory which our Catholic friends feel so confident is somewhere. And surely not in the fiery hell of which Protestants generally tell us. Surely the dead sleep in the Bible hell — sheol, hades, the tomb, the state of death. Thus it is written, "Many that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake" (Daniel xii, 2).

Reurtrn to the Master. Mary, Martha and Lazarus of Bethany were His particular friends. Lazarus took sick and the sisters sent word to the Master, "He whom Thou lovest is sick." Jesus gave no outward heed to the matter until the third day after, and then said to His disciples, "Our friend, Lazarus, sleepeth." They replied, "Lord if he sleep he will do well." Then Jesus said plainly (coming down to their ordinary use of language), "Lazarus is dead." With His disciples He then went to Bethany.

The sisters were greatly disappointed. They had not thought of the possibility of their brother's dying, because they so thoroughly believed in the power of Jesus. Mary did not even go to meet her dear Friend, the Lord, when He came. Martha met Him with the chiding remark, "If Thou hadst been here (if You had come even when we informed You) our brother had not died." Jesus did not dispute that Lazarus was dead, nor tell her that he was more alive than ever. He merely promised that her brother should rise again.

Martha replied that she knew that Lazarus would rise in the resurrection, at the Last Day. Jesus assured her that He would be the One Who would resurrect the dead, and that He was then present with her, intimating that she might ask even them for her brother to be revived. But Martha's faith was insufficient. When the Master asked, Where have ye laid him? she replied that it was now too late, because putrefaction had set in—it was now the fourth day since his death. When Jesus finally went to Lazarus' tomb, He did not call him from heaven, nor from Purgatory, nor from a fiery hell, but from the tomb, saying, "Lazarus, come forth!" And the dead one came forth.

This wonderful exhibition of His power the Lord gave, to the intent that His disciples then and since might realize that in Him is vested the resurrection power, by Divine arrangement, and that there is to be a resurrection of the just and of the unjust; that all who are in their graves are to hear His voice and come forth. The Christ shall will come forth to gathering of His on the spirit plane. The world of mankind will come forth from the tomb imperfect, as they went into it, and still all have a test, to prove whether they are worthy or unworthy of restitution blessings and eternal life on the earthly Paradise.

St. Paul held an imaginary discussion with doubters of the resurrection in his day. He has them inquire, With what body will the dead return? He replies that, as each kind of seed that is planted reproduces its own kind, so it will be in the resurrection of the dead. Whatever kind of seed is planted in death—of the same kind and nature will be the resurrection crop. The Apostle elaborates, showing that the whole world of mankind are of one kind of seed—human stock—and that therefore, in the resurrection time, they will come forth the same—humans. And they will come forth in practically the same condition in which they died.

But if we shall suppose rye to represent the human stock and can imagine a special treatment of some of that rye grain before sowing—changing it into wheat, then we would know that those changed grains would sprout and develop, not as rye, but as wheat. Thus the Apostle illustrates the resurrection of the dead — the Church. All are of Adamic stock, but some, a few — the spirit-begotten Church—experience a change of nature from earthly to heavenly. Hence they, in the resurrection, will come forth heavenly or spirit beings. He says, Some, the world at large, will be members of the earthly Adam; others, a few, a "little flock," will be members of the second Adam — the heavenly Lord. The standard to which the world may expect to be awakened and, later, raised, will be the earthly standard represented in the perfect Adam. Like the earthly, one will be the earthly ones" (the world). And "like the heavenly One will be the heavenly ones" (the saintly Church, the Bride) (I. Cor. xv, 45-48).

It was not necessary that the Apostle should more particularly describe, at that time, the resurrection opportunity provided for the world of mankind, but it was very appropriate that he should give to the Church a more detailed explanation of the Divine provision for the resurrection of the Bride. Explaining this, St. Paul says, "Thus is the resurrection of the dead; It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption. It is sown in dishonor; it is raised in glory. It is sown in weakness; it is raised in power. It is sown an animal body; it is raised a spirit body. For there is an animal body and there is a spirit body. As it is written, The first man, Adam, was made a living soul; the last Adam was made a quickening spirit" (I. Corinthians xv, 42-45).

The Apostle declares of these who are begotten of the Holy Spirit and who make their "calling and election sure" and who, therefore, will have part in the First Resurrection—"As we have borne the image of the earthy we shall also bear the image of the heavenly. • • • Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God; • • • but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump" (I. Corinthians xv, 49-52).

The resurrection of the Church is called a "life-resurrection," because all those experiencing it will be perfected in life—will be instantly and completely lifted out of death conditions. The world in general, on the contrary, will not come forth to a life-resurrection, but will come forth still partly dead, as mankind in general are to-day. The coming forth or awakening to them will be merely the beginning of their resurrection, their anastasis. Their raising up completely out of sin and death will follow, gradually, if they conform to the Kingdom rules. In the Divine appointment the thousand years of Messiah's reign are set apart for their resurrection—their gradual raising up to human perfection. The experiences of Messiah's Kingdom will all be helpful, whether they be chastisements or rewards. They will all be reformatory. Only deliberate and wilful transgressors will be annihilated in the Second Death.

CHIMES AT MIDNIGHT

A Short Story

On those dark winter mornings before the dawn Joan was glad when the stars appeared above the black house-tops as she went to work. In a vague instinctive way it made her less forlorn, and the wild laments of the factory sirens, wailing round the town lost much of the supernatural terrors with which rain or fog usually invested them. This particular morning there were not only stars but a waning moon also, which, like a boat, lay anchored in that dark sea amidst mysterious island clouds, and the thoughts which the glimpse began in Joan remained with her throughout the day. It was Saturday, and she was early released from work, but yet more, when darkness fell again she could go to the library to change her books, with the radiant prospect of a Sunday in front of her.

Joan's father was killed at the factory when she was a child of six, and as he had been a valuable and intelligent workman his employer naturally kept an eye on the man's widow. So when her school time was up, Joan herself entered the mill. But this was some years ago, and the bright little girl had developed into a comely and quiet young woman. On account of her retiring, self-possessed ways, she had been christened by her more reckless, boisterous companions "I, Sister o' Mercy," out of unconscious compliment to those silent, devoted fig-

"FANCY" RISKS ARE TAKEN IN LONDON

Underwriters Charge Ten Per Cent. on Chance of Coronation Being Postponed—Elected and Other Risks

These underwriting members of Lloyd's, of London, who make a business of "fancy" risks, have begun turning their attention to insurance covering the next Budget as well as the Coronation.

The last rate quoted to pay a loss in the event of the duty on sugar being abolished was 20 per cent., whilst several policies to cover reduction in the tea duty have been taken out at 25 per cent. The equivalent premium for coffee and cocoa being 35 per cent. The possibility of an increase in the cost of licenses is apparently considered remote, seeing that a policy for this risk can be got at 20 per cent.

By far the largest amount of speculation has, however, been done in connection with the income-tax, and a rate as high as 50 per cent. has been charged on a policy to pay a total loss in the event of no alteration being made in the present charges.

During the past few weeks some large insurances have been effected by traders whose interests are bound up with the Coronation, and 10 per cent. has been paid to cover a claim should the ceremony not take place before the end of the year. In one or two cases policies have been taken out on the joint lives of the King and Queen until the end of the year at the rate of 4 per cent., whilst a "Royal Family" risk has been accepted, insuring the lives of the King, the Queen, and their children for the same period, the premium in this instance being 10 per cent. A possible change of route for the Coronation processions has also come within the speculative scope, though the premiums are small.

To pay a loss if there is a general election before March 31, 1912, 25 per cent. is quoted, and 5 per cent. has been accepted to cover the payment of a claim should Mr. Lloyd George become Prime Minister on or before December 31 next. This risk has been written several times, but the amounts involved are not large.

As he had rendered some little services to the marquis, he could not see the harm in assuming the title.

GIN PILLS Brought Relief

"I suffered untold misery even when under treatment from the best doctors for over ten months, and nothing seemed to do me any good or relieve my painful condition. My trouble was Inflammation of Kidneys and Bladder.

I finally determined to go to the Victoria Hospital, Halifax, for treatment.

Two days, however, before my intending departure, a neighbor called and happening to have a GIN PILL in his pocket, insisted on my taking it. I did so and six hours after taking it, the results and benefits I derived were simply nothing more or less than miraculous. CARELESS AS TO HATS

Have Eminent Men Been—Comparisons of England's Headgear

Speaking of hats, an English writer says: It is astonishing how careless many eminent men have been about their headgear. The great Duke of Wellington is credited with wearing one hat until it was so bad that a tactful friend persuaded him to give it away to a servant. Some days afterwards, we are told, the Duke saw this same hat, newly brushed, on a chair in the hall, where the servant had that moment placed it. "A nice hat, that," observed the Duke. "Yes," replied the servant; "it's the one your Grace gave to me. I've had it done up." "What did it cost you?" inquired the Duke. "One shilling," was the answer. "Here's half a crown. I'll have it back," and Wellington is reported to have taken it, and worn it again till his friends protested against its shabbiness.

Perhaps the remaining most remarkable historical comparison in hats is between the plain, steeple-crowned, broad-brimmed hats of the Puritans and the flat, broad, feather-bedecked hats fashionable with the Cavaliers of Charles II.

Nowadays the most striking fact about fashion in hats is that while our women vie with one another in carrying the largest artificial garden-beds and beehives on their heads, our men are eager for the lightest and most easy-fitting felts. The demand for a comfortably-fitting felt has led to the invention of machinery that has numbered the days of the orthodox sizes—the 7⅛ worn by the late King Edward, the 7¼ of Dickens and John Bright, the 7⅜ of Mr. Gladstone, and the enormous 8½ of Daniel O'Connell, etc.

BRITISH IMMIGRANTS

J. Bruce Walker Speaks of the Enormous Increase

"When Hon. Mr. Sifton sent me to Scotland in 1902 to supervise the work of the Government in immigration in that country," said J. Bruce Walker, Commissioner of Immigration, "the complete list of the immigrants to Canada in a year was about 3,000. When I left in 1907 to go to London for the Government, it had increased to 30,000 per annum. Since the year 1907 the advance is 100 per cent. This year we will get from that country 40,000 people.

"The Welsh immigration is also developing in an extraordinary manner. Thousands of residents of the principality are removing to the Dominion. There have been numbers of people from the mining districts of Wales, but the great majority have come from the farming regions, and the immigrants are the sons and daughters of Welsh people who have lived on the land for many generations. In the principality splendid service for Canada has been rendered by John Williams, formerly M.P.P. for Melita.

"From Scotland, at the period of my work there, there were but four steamers making monthly voyages to Canada. Now there are eight sailings per month, and sometimes ten. The total immigration for this calendar year will be 400,000 people, and of this number 45 per cent. will be from Great Britain."

Puppy Goes to Hospital

Among the patients who received attention at the London Hospital was a puppy-dog. It was brought by its owner, a small boy, in a fish basket, and a kindly house-surgeon diagnosed the trouble as a sprain and sent the anxious owner away happy with a prescription of soap liniment.

HUNGRY ATMOSPHERE

Smoke-Laden Air of Old London is Eating Stone and Marble—Electric Remedy

All great cities, but more especially London, are engaged in a constant warfare with their atmosphere. It is a losing fight. The air wins.

Westminster Abbey, which has seen dozens of Coronations and is now about to add another to the list, is generally regarded as the most venerable and one of the most ancient buildings in England. But in one way it is a sham. In the huge building the visitor gazes at so admiringly he does not see a stone a hundred years old. The outer walls of the Abbey suffer so terribly from the London air that the re-building process is always going on. Stonework only fourteen years old is already going bad. Work done when Queen Victoria came to the throne is softer than dried putty several inches deep.

The trouble, of course, lies in the smoke—in the various sulphur acids that smoke carries. They convert the stone into sulphate of lime, and this process expands the stone and breaks it up gradually into powder. The older statues in St. Paul's keep constantly losing fingers for the same reason.

Marble suffers terribly. The Elgin marbles in the British Museum kept their almost transparent surface for over two thousand years in the sunny climate of Greece. Half a century in London has given the marble a dull, putty-like appearance.

Good timber, curiously enough, stands city air practically for ever. The great beams in Westminster Hall are as old as the Hall itself, and still sound. In one of the London parks, the original oak posts that were preferred to the usual iron railings are still stout, though the iron bands that originally clamped them have disappointed utterly, the air having devoured them thoroughly that nothing is left but rust-stains.

Steel indeed, is peculiarly antagonistic to city air. When the great roof of Charing Cross Station fell in a few years ago, it was because the huge girders (unpainted) had been eaten into by the clouds of smoke from the engines below. The old Underground Railway was proverbial for its smoky atmosphere, and at one station at least there were iron girders into which playful travelers used to poke their umbrellas six inches deep. Except at the heart, they were practically powder.

The bronze base on which Cleopatra's Needle stands is at present being renovated, though it is only about forty years old. The stone Needle itself stood the air of Egypt unharmed for at least three thousand years. When it came to England, its weight was almost exactly a hundred tons. According to a recent estimate, it is now quite two hundredweight lighter. The outlines of the hieroglyphics are crumbling away.

But if many civilized countries have to fight their climate, they sometimes win points in the fight. A thick fog multiplies by six the amount of sulphur in the atmosphere, and probably attempts will soon be made to clear off fog by electrical discharges.

And it is quite possible that before many years science will have succeeded in the teeth of climate in reclaiming to civilization many tracts that are now rainless desert. It has been seriously proposed that the Sahara—whose soil would be fertile if it could get moisture—should be turned into a great grain-growing region by planting its coasts with eucalyptus-trees to attract rain.

A DEAF AND DUMB JOKE

"The most laconic person I know of is a deaf and dumb chap in our neighborhood," said a man who was travelling by train to the city. "He never writes on his little pad more than enough to convey his meaning. He is a good euchre-player, and one night he won a watch and chain from a young man. The latter's father met the mute. The deaf and dumb man produced his little pad. On it the irate father wrote, 'I understand you won Bob's gold watch the other night.'

"He handed it to the deaf and dumb man, and expected to see him offer to give up the spoils. Not so however. Instead, he took the pad, wrote two words carefully on it, and restored it. Underscribed thereon were the words, 'Good game.'" urns in black and white that they saw going about the dusky byways of the town doing good. Most nicknames affect the character of the recipient, and Joan's reflective nature had no doubt been deepened by this reputation amongst her associates. Associates, they scarcely were, except in the most trivial of senses, for she chose none of them for spare-time friends and exchanged but few words with any during the hours of employment.

CHIMES AT MIDNIGHT

It caused her a thrill of dejection, therefore, when on the very steps of the Mechanics' Institute that night she met face to face one of the least congenial of these work-day companions called Loo. With a laugh of greeting that echoed mockery, the latter snatched the book which Joan was carrying and proceeded to look at it under the big lamp hanging over the doorway.

"Sermons, I'll bet," was the girl's remark as she ran her fingers over the pages, adding in an altered tone, "'Silas Marner.' Is it a tale?" Joan nodded, and the other shut the book, and returned it to her. "Here, Sister,' she then said, "I want to speak to you." And the two walked out on to the pavement.

"You come every Saturday night, don't you?"

"Yes," said Joan in a flutter of uneasiness as to what this unsought confidence might mean. "I come for a book."

"That's all, of course," laughed the other still in an ironical way, and Joan made no response. Then her companion took her by the arm and went on, "Look her, don't you tell me. Do you know that you'll get Mr. Braithwaite dismissed if you go on like this? He's just been talking to me about you."

If the Town Hall bell, tower, and all, instead of just then solemnly striking the hour, had fallen from their dark height at the feet of Joan it could not have caused her a greater shock. She did not attempt to speak. With the last vibrations of the deep bell her heart began again to beat and it is possible Loo felt it against her arm. She at any rate resumed her part in a vigorous manner.

"Everybody's astonished at you, lass. I shouldn't wonder if Mr. Holcroft won't 'sack' you from the mill and all, for you know he's one of the committee, and he'll hear of it. You're not half deep enough for a trick like that. Do you think nobody's got eyes? I'll bet they've been awtching us to-night. I don't care for myself, but if they talk like that of you what'll your mother do?"

"But lots of girls fetch books," said Joan, who was getting her thoughts arranged a little. "I've never done—"

"Of course they do, but they don't lean over the counter and talk to Mr. Braithwaite about them for half an hour, and come early when nobody's about. People don't believe in lasses going courting on their own account. Of course I don't believe half that they're saying about you, but then they only go by what they see, and who can blame them? I should stop away a bit if I were you."

"Stop away!" cried Joan, "I'll never go there again."

"Nay, you needn't do that."

"Let me go!" The excited girl tried to release her arm, but her companion held it.

"Wait a bit. Don't make such a din. Where are you going to?"

"Home, of course."

"How'll you get your book back?"

"I can send it. I can—can—" But unable to say more Joan tore herself away, heedless, indeed ignornt, of the fact that the book of which she had meant to say so much to the sympathetic librarian remained in the hands of her discreet friend.

The pavement upon which the latter stood to look after the retreating figure was vacant, a lamp-post was at hand, so with two or three deliberate steps Loo was in the light. There the young woman scanned the book intently for some time, turning page after page as if making a cursory estimate of the contents. At length she had done and at an easy pace returned to the Institution.

As she entered the library the room was empty. She knocked peremptorily on the counter, and in a moment a figure issued from an inner doorway. Mr. Braithwaite took the book from her, glancing at it and then at her.

"My friend Joan couldn't come to-night. She's got a cold. She asked me to leave it." The other nodded.

"What does she want out?" he asked. The girl hesitated, blushed and laughed, and in an instant the

Could Not Walk Ten Yards Without Resting.

WEAK HEART WAS THE CAUSE.

Mrs. Robinson Collette, Rogersville, N.B., writes: "I am now enjoying the best of health after having used your Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. I was troubled with a weak heart and was afraid to draw a long breath for the pain it would cause me. I could not sleep at night, and it was impossible for me to walk ten yards without resting myself. I cannot speak too highly of your Heart and Nerve Pills, for they are the greatest pill I have ever used and I can recommend them to all sufferers."

Thousands of people go about their daily work on the verge of death and yet do not know it.

Little attention is paid to the slight weakness of the heart for the simple reason that one thinks it will right itself, but there is where the mistake is made. It is only when a violent shock comes that the weakness of the heart becomes apparent.

On the first sign of any weakness of the heart or nerves, flagging energy or physical breakdown, the use of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills will soon produce a quick and permanent cure.

hand of hers which lay on the counter was covered and held down.

"What are you going to do to-morrow?" said the man quickly, his eyes fixed upon hers. "Be at the bridge about nine," he added. There were steps at the door, and Mr. Braithwaite was engaged with the book as someone entered.

Even Loo was startled at the result of her prank. Who could have expected this to be the man's way? You may throw your line day after day upon the water with every assurance of a bite, and yet the tug never came without a thrill. As the boy without another word or look Loo escaped from the room.

Joan in the meantime was hurrying home. Anger, shame, and confusion possessed her; all familiar ground quivered beneath her feet. She simply told her mother that she didn't feel well, and sought the refuge of her bed. She was unable to sleep, she was astir again very early in the morning. Joan had never had such a time. Certainly never before had she spent such a Sunday. Every landmark of the day failed her. From an oasis it had become a desert, to which the barren week-day toil seemed green and invigorating. She went to church, but came back restless and unsatisfied. It was inclined to snow, so she had a ready escape from her intolerable moorland walk—that little stock of sunshine which had to make her rich for a week as a rule. Her tongue failed before her mother's love. Her favorite book, her father's collection of mosses and flowers, all crumbled into dust before her eyes.

A whirlwind of thought demolished them all without affording sustenance of its own. It was ten-time before Joan flashed upon what she was in need of, and then it came in the form of the words, "It's all true." With that light all her previous confused meditations fell into order and ranged themselves as a rampart of humiliation and alarm.

Yes, she saw clearly that every accusation was true. She went through all details of her connection with the library and saw what in her criminal ignorance she had done. She had gone there early to find Mr. Braithwaite alone; she had sought his guidance in choosing her books. Most horrible of all, she did like the man himself very much. All this Joan could no more so clearly and bitterly, and yet—never before had any kind thought come to warn her what it meant.

Her mother had gone to church at night alone, leaving Joan to discover all this in solitude. There came suddenly a knock at the door, and, going to open it, the girl looked into the face of Loo. Joan was glad. She quickly drew the visitor in. It was only against herself that Joan was angry. This girl, whom she had never liked, had suddenly become her kindest friend. From what had she not saved her? Even Loo was surprised at the torrent of thanks that overwhelmed her. She couldn't at all talk in the way she had intended, and had very soon to go, muttering to herself on the pavement, "Well, that caps all."

This was at the end of November, and for the next two or three weeks Joan took herself in hand. It was not an easy task, for she had never been conscious till then of what a part that connection with the library had played in her life. One night on her returning home from the mill it burst from her heart that that connection alone was her life, that nothing else was any real part of it. She sat down in tears to the tea which her mother had prepared, and could eat none of

As she lay awake that night, Joan heard the wind moaning and the soft whispers of the snowflakes as they were whirled against the window. She covered her head and got to sleep at last. When she went off early in the morning she had to shovel the snow away from the doorstep before she could get out. It was a dark, chill morning, the sky nothing but a black canopy above the dim snow-covered roofs beyond the lamp-posts. Although hundreds were on their way to work, not a footstep was to be heard on the muffled pavements. Oh, how the "hummers" wailed and the whistles shrieked in that blank world of desolation! The notes made Joan tremble and draw her thick shawl tightly about her head and shoulders, more as it seemed to shelter her from imaginary terrors than to exclude the cold. She kept to her own side of the street, all others by custom keeping to one another's footsteps down the opposite pavement. But their light-hearted laughter came over to her as the boys and girls snowballed each other, and it had never sounded so strange. She has never felt so far from it, so hopelessly shut out from the glad world of her fellows.

Suddenly a snowball hit her, then a whole shower of snowballs came about her head with derisive cries of "Sister o' Mercy!" But this was followed by a loud shout of "Stop it!" And Joan was persecuted no more.

But she did not take the turn to her factory. She had disappeared from the pavement, and was threading a by-street in the entirely opposite direction. She was accustomed to banter, and the snowballs would not have dismayed her. It was that voice of command freeing her from persecution that had confounded her with such powerful effect. She knew even if she had not recognized the tone of it that it was Loo's voice. The touch of kindness again from this girl she disliked so much had quite unnerved Joan. Weeping silently she flitted on and on without any regard to her footsteps.

All around this manufacturing town arose bold hills and moorlands. It was not until Joan was out in the country quiet that she began to think of what she was about. Sirens and whistles had stopped. She was already late for her work. By the time she could get back she would be later still. Never in her life had she been late. An instant's reflection was enough to decide her not to return. The thought came as an inspiration. Why should she ever go back? Why not go on and on over these kind, solitary, snow-clad hills to a world free from the agonies she had been suffering for so long? She stood to give one good look at the weird light that hung about the town, looming so mysteriously through the darkness and dimly revealing in the upheaving world of snow, then she gave in to her impulse an dset her face to the hills.

That was Friday. More snow fell in the course of it, and yet more on the following day. It chanced that Mr. Braithwaite had been looking forward to this Saturday night with peculiar interest, and so he turned the key inside the library door, to allow people to enter, he did it somewhat nervously. Then he seemed to stand expectant. It wanted ten minutes of the hour for opening. The gas remained low and he did not turn it up immediately. Indeed there was some indecision in Mr. Braithwaite. He stood where he was, turning his eyes from the bookshelves to the door, from the door to the bookshelves again. They were kindly eyes, and there was an expression of marked intelligence in his face. Evidently he was young, without doubt short of thirty, and in his way he was a man of note. He had begun life as a miner in a coalpit, but through the assiduous cultivation of imaginative tastes he had engaged the attention of the more enlightened about him. All his wages and spare time he had devoted to drawing and to reading. Through this he had been advanced to his present post of caretaker and librarian at the Mechanics' Institution, which he had held for nearly two years. But he had not yet married. To many this was a matter of note also.

As the door opened Mr. Braithwaite was aroused from his reverie. Loo came in, but as the man stepped forward radiantly to embrace her, her hand was held out to repel him, and he stood still in surprise. Her face meant more than any arch caprice. It was a bold and striking face, and perhaps in this way looked its finest.

"You were made for a queen," he muttered.

"And what was Joan made for?" she said, fixing her eyes on him. "What do you mean to make of her?"

"What riddle is this?"

"Loose me!" she retorted, shaking him off angrily.

"I don't understand you," said the librarian with a dignified calm, as he drew a step backwards.

"Come with me in the morning," said Loo, "and you will understand me. Do you promise?"

"Certainly, if you also promise to explain this change in you. Where?" The place was fixed and Loo was gone.

Mr. Braithwaite locked the door again and paced to and fro across the floor.

He was not deeply versed in such matters, so could not pretend to analyse the girl's behaviour. He only felt the shock resulting from it. Her words seemed to hint at suspicions with regard to his attitude towards Joan. But they had before talked freely of that and she knew his friendly curiosity in the "Sister of Mercy." Perhaps she didn't believe it.

Loo's notion was, however, not quite so simple as that. She did not distrust Mr. Braithwaite any more than she had ever suspected Joan of trying to entrap him. It was only that she had been following her own mischievous fancy, and found astonishment at the result. She had been in for a practical joke and discovered that it had all been taken seriously. Loo had never in the least desired Mr. Braithwaite for herself. What on earth could she do with such a man? What life could she have had with him? To be shut up in the cellars of that great building all day—to keep those rooms clean all the year round! The prospect had not any attractions for Loo. In going home through the snow she laughed aloud at the thought of it. What fools people were!

But her discovery, had not aroused mirth in the girl merely. Happily the worst of us are very much better than we seem. And this prank had penetrated to the very best in Loo's nature. At one step had she passed into the secret recesses of deep womanly feeling without in the least knowing it. She longed to protect and comfort the weaker Joan.

Next morning the sun arose in an unclouded sky, and was throwing his beams across the snow as Mr. Braithwaite went to the place of meeting. He was plunged in thought, and as he came up to her Loo could not escape a sense of triumph at her easy conquest of such a man. This made her give him a more gracious reception.

"Now for your promise," he said impatiently.

"Don't be in a hurry," she answered.

"Why are you angry with me? I have never wronged you or Joan or any woman. Joan herself will. I'm sure, tell you that I never hinted of love to her in any way. I never loved any girl till I saw you."

"Then you ought to have done," said Loo, petulantly.

"That you might have escaped me? That means you wish I had never—"

"It doesn't."

To such unreasonable behaviour Mr. Braithwaite's pride declined to submit, and he took the exact course calculated to arouse the feelings which Loo was struggling to suppress. With a dignified protest against such wayward inequalities he apologized for the advances he had made to her and asking her to consider them as undone took his leave.

The girl stood in the snow to look after him, but he never turned round. A thrill of admiration arose in her, and for the first time in he life she felt the tremulous joy of subjection to another's will. Had the librarian established to her caprices she would have been quite safe. Now, unfortunately, his was the triumph. She was in love. This caused Loo an hour's painful indecision. It had all seemed so easy before. Now she did not know what to do. But at length she went on.

After a long trudge through the snow she came to a farmhouse and went up to the door. She was admitted, and in a minute or two was sitting at Joan's bedside. Coming upon her thus and also looking no doubt through her own altered eyes she was struck by the beauty of Joan. Such a style of face had never appealed to her before. Loo wished after all that she had brought the man. She felt now that she could have done it all. Before these earnest, pathetic eyes the stronger girl could have crushed every mad impulse of her own.

"Why have you been so kind to me?" asked Joan. "I always thought you disliked or despised me. You have told my mother?" Yes, Loo had got the note and had done all that had been asked of her. "But kind to you!" she added sternly. "Don't talk like that to me. I've been kind to you like a cat's kind to a mouse. Listen and I'll tell you."

So Loo confessed her fault. How she had wanted a lark, had watched Joan, had lied to her and the librarian, had done this, had done that—But with a touch Joan silenced her.

"Don't say that! It is all true. I did do all you said, but I didn't think of what I was doing. You have saved me. I shall never go back there. I shall never go back into the town at all. I shall give up the mill and get a place in a farmhouse out here." Loo's eyes were fixed immovably on the speaker's face, but they did not betray the struggle that was going on within.

"Yes, that'll suit you better," said she quickly, and with the words she gave in. After all she could not have done what she had thought. Very soon she escaped.

No, Loo could not sacrifice this new and precious possession for anybody at all. The common daily duties of Mr. Braithwaite's wife did not now appear to her. All such small and worldly considerations had been suddenly extinguished by the glow of light which had burst upon her path. She had risen at a bound to an altogether higher life. She was at last a woman.

But it wa by no means all triumph that she had found. Those eyes of Joan's haunted her, and as she looked into them they brought her a sense of guilt. This grew towards evening, and she wandered out into the dirty streets to try and escape it. She didn't go to church as a rule, but to-night in passing the gates of the principal one in the town Loo saw the people entering, and without a single thought she went with them. She drew to a side aisle and when she had taken a seat she found the solemn atmosphere of the place begin to affect her. She was gathering herself into a composed and quiet frame of mind with her gaze fixed intently on the hymnbooks lying before her (but which to her became a vague framework for the face of Joan) when a slight movement disconcerted her again. Sounds and movements had been going on around all the time, but she had not looked. She now discovered that it was Mr. Braithwaite sitting beside her. It was so incredible that, trembling, Loo had to glance again. His eyes met hers and smiled.

They were complete strangers to each other through the service, but when it was over Loo's first impulse was to escape. Clearly Mr. Braithwaite did not intend to allow that. What looked like so providential an accident stirred him to the depths of his heart again. Following her surely through the crowd and out on to the pavement he took her arm.

"Forgive me, dearest," he said quietly.

"It is you must forgive me," she replied, quivering with agitation.

"No; I have nothing to forgive. I was impatient and unkind."

"You don't know how much you have to forgive," said Loo rapidly. "What a creature I am! I have deceived and injured you all, and you all talk kindly to me. You, Mr. Braithwaite, I have wronged deeply. I ought never to have let you talk like that, for I have no love for you and never can have. I—I'm in love with somebody else just as you are."

"My darling, it must be a mistake. Don't be in a hurry," he ejaculated.

"I can never alter. I ought to have told you at once. I only met you this morning to tell you. Ask Joan and she will tell you the truth of it. I should never have done for you."

Loo was immovable and they soon parted, Mr. Braithwaite returning home in abject depression. But he could not stay there. He went out again and hurried to the by-street in which Joan lived. He must be doing something. The mother had just got back from a visit to Joan, and knowing Mr. Braithwaite slightly, she asked him in. The absence of her daughter she had to explain to him as well as she could, being herself in the dark as to the real cause of it. The man knew nothing of it and could only say that he had missed her. With that he returned home again. "As you are"—the words rang in his ears. What did they mean?

It astonished Joan the next morning to see Loo appear at the farmhouse at a time when she ought to have been at the mill. The aspect of her mysterious friend was no less surprising. In Loo's eyes there were distinct traces of tears. But she burst out into her usual style of speech and that first glimpse was lost.

THE HOUSE THAT VALUE BUILT

CRIMES AT MIDNIGHT

gotten. She was off, she said, and had just come to say good-bye. The young man she was engaged to had gone to live in Bradford, and she had made up her mind to go too. Joan also had good news. A neighbor of this farmer who had found her exhausted in the snow had taken her into his service and she was going there in a day or two when she was well. They talked a little about both their plans, and then Loo stood in a hurry to go. After setting off she turned back quickly and whispered to Joan, "Don't be afraid of Mr. Braithwaite; he's in love with you, too." Then she was gone, and Joan did not see her again for a long time.

Joan's new work soon had a magical effect upon her spirits. Winter though it was, the free air of the hills brought a wholly new sense of life to her, and all the instincts which had been crushed by her dull mechanical toil in the factory blossomed into sources of joy and hope. This, of course, also brought about a rapid change in her appearance, and she herself could not escape whispers from her glass that she was beautiful. She hugged the discovery with rapture, but without any hint as to the cause of her delight. For that first week or two she was able to wipe her past existence from her mind.

But Christmas was at hand, and there were signs of gaiety in the farmhouse. They were blunt, homely people, and Joan had become one of themselves. There were vast preparations for supper on Christmas Eve, and it was in the course of them that Joan heard words which for the first time put her in a flutter.

"We shall want plenty o' them," the missus said casually of a particular kind of cake, "for Mr. Braithwaite's fond of 'em."

Joan made no remarks, but her composure was at an end. For the rest of the day she was in feverish meditation. But at last she concluded it was impossible. There were lots of Braithwaites about, and it could not possibly be her one.

However, it chanced that about five o'clock that evening a cab came to the side door at the Mechanics' Institution, and it was certainly Mr. Braithwaite that got into it. Then it drove away, and not towards the station. The librarian was tired that night and not inclined to face a hill walk. He reached at last a remote house and was soon surrounded by the children for whom he had to draw animals and engines on a slate till supper time.

There was no distinct remembrance of that supper in the minds of two that were present at it. For Joan it was a glitter of the most radiant but hopeless confusion. When Mr. Braithwaite was in his solitar yabode again, he sat staring at a lovely face on which seemed branded the words "As you are." He remembered little else. Nor did he get his faculties into much clearness for a week to come. He opened his door at midnight on New Year's Eve as the church bells burst into their circle of sound, and it was then that that seemed at last to strike him to himself. As he listened to the peal dancing through the winter darkness, a strange illumination stole with it into his soul's recesses. A whole cloud of mystery had been removed, and he saw the extraordinary delusion by which his mind had been obscured. The bold effrontery of that fascinating figure had suddenly eclipsed the slow and tender growth which weekly intercourse had fostered, and of which he had not, any more than Joan, been in the least aware; of which perhaps but for Loo he never would have been aware. So at least he reflected many times as he sat up reading throughout the night.

A day or two later in that mild, genial sunshine which even January can offer, Mr. Braithwaite was once more on the hills. His course had seemed uncertain as if looking for something he had lost, but it had a vague reference to a farmhouse which formed its centre. At last he swooped down like a hawk upon its prey, and did as a matter of fact reach the stackyard just as all the fowls were gathered at their feeding. A girl was throwing out the food. She looked hurriedly across at the intruder and colored deeply. Mr. Braithwaite stood and watched. No word was spoken. Indeed no word was needed. But as Joan turned to the house she heard the swift step on the straw and stood trembling. They were hidden by the stacks, so the man planted his hands on the girl's shoulders and looked into her eyes.

"Now I know why you ran away. . . . Do I, Joan?"

She lowered her face and said nothing.

"Oh, I have no right to it," he exclaimed with emotion. "But I will try to explain."

Held to his breast as he then held her Joan needed no explanation. Every mystery of the universe was solved.

Thus it was that Mr. Braithwaite's solitude at length ended, and Joan's life began. The growth of each in all life's triumphs after that was rapid.

But it was a year later before they heard anything of Loo. They often talked about her, for neither was ignorant of how much they owed her. One night, it was a Saturday and Mr. Braithwaite was in the library, Joan heard a knock at the outer door and she went to answer it. A young woman stood there, and with a cry of delight Joan saw who it was. Clutching the hand of her visitor she drew Loo inside and so to the fire. Then they talked. But there was some change in Loo. The old recklessness had become a demure composure which smiled rather cynically at the young wife's artless joy. Loo wouldn't stay long. The baby woke up in a corner as she was going, and she leaned down to look at it.

"What do you call it?" she asked.

"Louisa," was the reply.

"Aren't you happy too?" asked Joan, rather troubled.

"Oh, yes, awfully."

"I wish you'd stay. You'll come again, won't you?"

Loo promised, and after she had gone, Joan sat down with her baby and wandered into puzzling thought. Later, as they sat at supper, she and her husband had a good talk.

RETAIL MERCHANTS COMPLAIN THAT CITY COUNCIL IGNORED THEIR RESOLUTION

Matter Was Taken Up at a Meeting of the Merchants Last Night---Association Will Attend in a Body at Meeting of the Manufacturers Tonight---Industrial Commissioner Duggan Outlined His Work or the [illegible]

A meeting of the Retail Merchants' Association was held last night in Hooper's restaurant. Mr. H. A. Harrington of Toronto and the following twelve members of the local branch of the organization, were present: Messrs. C. K. Leech, W. F. Campbell, Keith G. Lech, Thomas Barrie, T. H. Adams, H. V. Duggan, J. H. Connal, C. W. Cressman, Walter J. Oke, R. J. Kingan, W. E. Conway, and Robert Fair.

After the wants of the inner man had been provided for, Mr. H. A. Harrington, of Toronto, addressed the meeting, urging those present to concentrate their efforts for the promotion of a stronger organization. The speaker also suggested that a number of the members be appointed to go out and endeavour to induce others to join the association. Let each man give a half hour to this work. He can interview two or three men in that time. Another important matter is that of standing together, working together in unionism, and harmony. The breaking away of one member in any one town had a tendency to disorganize the rest. In Brockville and other towns the Association worked under the protective wing of an iron-bound agreement. It is Mr. Harrington's intention, as organizer, to visit each town once a month, arriving in the town or city a day or two previous he would take means to notify the members, try and secure new ones and wind up by a general meeting.

Mr. Duggan, Secretary of the Association, then gave a few well-pointed remarks, pertaining to the general improvement that might be made by adopting certain measures. One of the suggestions was to have twenty of the members agree to see five people each and explain to them the benefits to be derived by becoming a member of the Association.

By to-morrow cards will be distributed among the merchants of the town. These should serve to enlist the sympathy of those who have already shown interest in the matter.

A general discussion then took place during which illegality of conducting a collecting agency and supplying lists of names of people and their rating, was questioned. A local man conducting a business of that nature was pointed out as an example. Mr. Harrington recalled the time when a decision was rendered by the High Court to the effect that no man could conduct a business in which it was necessary to rate a man, unless the party conducting the business was licensed or was part of an incorporated company.

President Thos. Barrie then drew attention to the resolution which was passed at the last meeting of the Retail Merchants' Association, concerning the advisability of retaining the services of Industrial Commissioner Duggan.

It was pointed out that the resolution had not been read to the Council until after the question of doing [illegible]ay with the office [illegible]sed of. The Council [illegible]red it altogether.

Mr. Duggan then gave [illegible] of the work that had been done through the medium of his [illegible] the past year. He [illegible] During the past year we [illegible] to some 2,500 differen[illegible] in all kinds of b[illegible]. It is more than a few months to [illegible] actual results. We have communicated with over 1,100 manufacturers of agricultural implements [illegible], and have also corresponded with a number of motor car manufacturers. These are all located in [illegible] fields. While some of them have expressed themselves as being interested in Canadian fields, they are not prepared to take the matter up immediately. We have landed two or four industries that have written looking for propositions during the past year; they are the Bonner-Wa[illegible] and the Gold Medal Furniture Co[illegible]. I think, indicates a good per[illegible]. We have at present sixteen [illegible] industries in sight. Last Oct[illegible] we had representatives from the [illegible] Threshing Machine Co., meeting with a view to locating here they were not prepared to take any definite action in the matter at that [illegible]. But some interesting developments will, in all probability, take place within the next six weeks in connection with this matter.

You cannot force them before their time. many important factors have to be looked into. The available raw material, the market, taxes, power, rent, labour, etc. All of this information has to be laid before the prospective the best possible manner.

A great deal of time was consumed in the fire problem, which consisted of the appropriation of all the waterfront that could be secured, ranging the way from Campbellford to Ney Falls.

The assistance of the Hydro Electric Commission was resorted to with the result that the Hon. Adam Beck had presided a Citizens' Committee, held here and he will be in the city again on Wednesday night.

In reply Mr. Duggan's speech one of the prominent members present inferred that the trouble had arisen owing to the fact that the Council were inclined to think that the matter had not been dealt with through proper channels. The present Council was an antagonistic one. They did not even purport to give the fire hall a proper hearing they should be brought to bear the weight of public opinion," said the speaker, in conclusion.

It was decided that in the best interest of the city the Retail Merchants should attend the Board of Trade meeting to-night. This was unanimously agreed upon.

Acting on suggestion of Mr. J. H. Connal, it was decided to meet in the same room at 6.30 o'clock next Monday night.

WOULD LIKE TO BE AN ALDERMEN

How would you like to be an alderman?

To-night there will be a meeting of the manufacturers of the city, at which the Retail Merchants will attend and the cause d'etre of the gathering is to protest against the action of the council in dispensing with the services of the Industrial Commissioner.

At the same time a petition is being widely circulated and widely signed, asking that the two members of the Fire Department, Deputy Chief Grange and Capt. Thomas be given a hearing, and that there be an investigation before their resignation is being insisted on.

And there is still another petition going the rounds among the bicyclists and motor car owners, complaining that the oil on the streets is destroying their tires.

IMPORTANT SUMS IN ESTIMATES FOR PETERBOROUGH AND MT. JULIAN

The supplementary estimates brought down in the House of Commons yesterday contain two items that will be of much interest to people of Peterborough and district, especially those "who go down to the sea in ships." There is an appropriation of $20,000 for a new dock at Peterborough which, it is expected, will be constructed south of the Matthews' Company property, and which will fill a long felt want. Another item is of $2000 for the purpose of extending and rebuilding of the dock at Mount Julian, Stony Lake, a work that will be appreciated, not only by the summer tourists, but by the people of the north part of the country, with whom there is considerable freight business during the navigation season.

THE CITY AND POWER CO'Y SETTLED THE LAND QUESTION

Board of Works Met Last Night and Agreed to the Offer Made by the Peterborough Light and Power Co. at Last Meeting---Other Important Matters Taken Up by the Board Last Night.

The Board of Works met last night for the purpose of coming to a final settlement with the Peterborough Light and Power Co. The matter was settled by the Board accepting the offer first given by the company, i.e., the company will be given the little strip of land which comprises about 7,400 sq. feet, in return for the difference between the cost of the 6 and 8 inch pipe across the dam, which they have agreed to pay. The difference in the cost is about $280.00.

Ald. Metheral was chairman of the meeting, and the following members were present: Alderman Graham, Brown, Anderson, Duncan, Metheral.

Mr. W. H. Munro and Mr. J. H. Larmonth were present in the interest of the company. They wanted to know what it was that the company was getting extra, i.e., more than the proposition presented at last meeting called for. They were told by the chairman that 8 feet outside the survey that Mr. Cameron made, which was not according to the proposition.

The length of pipe across the dam would be about 400 feet. In addition to the paying of the difference of the cost of the pipe, the company guaranteed to pay the cost of any damage caused to the water main, while the pipe is being put in.

The City Solicitor Hall drew the Board's attention to a strip of land about 66 feet wide along the side of Crescent Street, just running south from Lake Street. At the present time there is a house situated on the strip, so it was decided that in order to show the city's ownership, that they would collect taxes for it.

The members of the Committee were pleased to note that the merchants and confectioners were now satisfied with the oil on the streets. The only problem now confronting the Board is the cost of and amount of oil that is needed for this purpose. Complaints were coming in about certain streets not being watered. This is a fact, arising from another fact, which is that the City cannot get enough oil in to do all the streets.

SOME AIDS TOWARDS BEAUTIFYING PETERBOROUGH

Property Committee Decides Some Improvements to the Little Park at Corner of Charlotte and King Streets---Trees for King Edward Park and Queen Mary Hospital Ground.

The City Property Committee met last night, and the following members were present: Ald. Duncan, chairman; Ald. Bradburn and Ald. Brown.

The first matter that came up was the naming of the street running to Curtis' brick yard, now called Smith Street East, also the street running up past Queen Mary Hospital. For the former, it was decided to let the name remain Smith Street East, and for the latter it was decided to call it Langton Avenue.

It was decided that the fence be taken down surrounding the little park at the corner of Park and Charlotte Streets. The matter of putting in the seats and removing some of the trees was left to Aldermen, Duncan and Brown.

A request for four or five trees at the Public Library was also received. The matter will be looked into.

A request for trees was also received for the Isolation Hospital grounds, and the King Edward Park. The matter was left in the hands of Mayor Morrow, Ald. Duncan, Ald. Brown, and Ald. Morgan. They resolved, however, to put trees at these places. The question of what kind of fence would be suitable for the Public library also came up. There will be no fence along the front. A brick fence would cost $260.00, a lattice $188.00, and a cement block would cost $248.00. Tenders will be called for the cement block fence.

The contract of supplying ice to the city foundations was let to Mr. Rebill at $75.00 for the season.

A request was received from a man wanting to put up a counter, with a cover, on the Market Square, the miniature structure to remain there permanently. It was decided that he be given the privilege of putting a movable structure up, that he could take down and put up on Saturdays.

Tenders will be called for the painting of the bandstand in Victoria Park.

The matter of procuring screens for the Queen Mary Hospital was left in the hands of Ald. Duncan.

The matter of charging a fee of 50 cts. to scavengers was left over.

The meeting adjourned.

Fisher who kept a hotel in Peterborough at that time. I would like to find some one who may know of this among Peterborough's oldest citizens. Can you help me in this matter? An answer will be appreciated.

Any person having knowledge of such an incident, if it ever happened, will confer a favour by communicating the facts to Chief of Police Thompson.

SIR DONALD MANN DRAWS SOME DAZZLING PICTURES

Special Wire to The Examiner.

OTTAWA, MAY 9. — Interviewed here to-day by your correspondent, Sir Donald Mann, the Vice-Pres. of the Canadian Northern, drew a dazzling picture of the great benefits to every corner of Canada, as a result of the third great transcontinental line made possible by the action government announced yesterday, guaranteeing the bonds of the Canadian Northern from Port Arthur to Montreal. Mann said it meant subsidiary lines to various parts of and new Ontario and Manitoba railway facilities, where at there are none and benefit competition where there were already, and better transportation facilities, which would mean better for farmers and manufacturers, especially in the older parts of Ontario and Manitoba.

WHAT MUST BE PAID FOR.

At first glance the action of the Trades and Labour Council of Brantford, in opposing the apopintment of a building inspector for the city, looks like obstruction, looks as if the Trades and Labour Council wanted buildings erected without inspection, which might mean that any kind of slop work could be performed. That is not the case: and besides, the objectors are in the right. The grounds of objection they take are perfectly sound—on principle. The Trades and Labour Council think that a building inspector is needed, but they rightly claim that a competent man cannot be secured for $600 a year, representing a daily wage that the veriest botch in the way of a building mechanic would reject with scorn. In such an official responsibility, honesty, as well as the actual work, have to be paid for. And special knowledge; knowing how, has to be paid for. A man once had a difficult piece of blacksmithing work to be done. After many failures, he, at last got a man to do the work properly. He was charged a dollar, and asked the workman why the bill was so large. "Why, half a dollar is for doing the work and half a dollar for knowing how." On the same principle the doctor and the lawyer, exact fees out of all proportion to the actual work done; their years of costly preparation, and acquisition of special knowledge itself have to be compensated and paid for. On the same principle, a man who, by years of careful study and observation, has made himself a mechanical specialist, must be paid accordingly; and only such a man can make a competent and satisfactory building inspector. A salary of a figure like Brantford proposes, would, besides, expose an official to the temptation of yielding to offers of bribery to permit bad work to pass. And bad work means peril to life and health of occupants of buildings into which it enters.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Montreal adopted Saturday early closing of bars, and it is stated that there was a decrease of fifty per cent. in drunkenness the first Saturday night.

The Montreal Gazette is asking its readers to believe that Parliament adjourned because Sir Wilfrid was afraid to leave Mr. Fielding, Mr. Graham, Mr. Fisher and Mr. Pugsley at the mercy of Mr. Borden. We knew, says the Montreal Herald, the argument would be used, but when you look right close at it the thing does look foolish.

The Mail and Empire remarks that "if Sir Wilfrid Laurier cannot trust his colleagues, how can he expect the country to place confidence in them?" On the tu quoque principle it might be asked, if Borden's followers cannot trust him, how can they expect the country to place confidence in him?

The Conservative journals speak of Mr. Borden, the leader of the Opposition, making a "whirlwind" tour of the Canadian west in the near future. Now, that implies wind and the west. If it has any climatic complaint objects to wind, and are as little likely to welcome a cyclone that interferes with what they want, in the way of larger trade, as a cyclone that shaves off their crops and knocks their buildings about.

MIGHT GET AT THE TRUTH.

(Ottawa Free Press)

According to Collier's Weekly the medical inspection of lumber, railway and construction camps in this province is a solemn farce. After stating that the law allows the shanty-men to be docked a dollar a month for a doctor to visit the camp one day a month, the paper says that the company may obtain $500 a month in this way and find it convenient to pay $100 for a doctor's visit.

However, the periodical makes a serious allegation in this connection, when it says that the doctor finds it profitable to inspect a camp on the last day of the month and the first of the next thus fulfilling the requirements of the law, to say nothing of making good pay.

If such allegations be true then it is high time the mailed fist be shot down good and hard. Many of the diseases, such as smallpox, which are found in Ottawa just now, are traceable to the lumber camps and such a loose inspection may have given people afflicted with the disease excellent opportunities to escape. Many men imight contract smallpox in lumber camps and sneak back to civilization within the 60 days of a doctor's visit.

If there's any truth in the insinuation made by Collier's, the Ontario Government might do well to spend a few dollars in making an example of the careless parties. It might be well to make an inquiry anyway. The men in the lumber camps in the north have just as much right to be protected against disease as city people. And city people have a right to be protected against disease from the lumber camps.

SIR JOHN THOMPSON, TOO.

(London Advertiser.)

The other day we gave extracts from the election addresses of Sir John Macdonald, Hon. George E. Foster, and Hon. J. A. Chapleau, in 1891, in which they asked for support because they favoured reciprocity with the United States We overlooked an even more fervent appeal by the late Sir John Thompson, which we quote from the Halifax Chronicle:

"To the Electors of the County of Antigonish:

"Gentlemen, —At the election which will take place on the 5th day of March, I will be a candidate for re-election as a member of the House of Commons for the county of Antigonish.

"The Government of which I am a member, is appealing to the country with a policy, which we believe will be heartily endorsed by a great majority of the electors. WE HAVE MADE TO THE GOVERNMENT OF THE UNITED STATES, THROUGH THE GOVERNMENT OF GREAT BRITAIN, PROPOSALS FOR RECIPROCITY IN TRADE, WHICH WE HAVE GOOD REASON TO BELIEVE WILL RESULT IN AN ARRANGEMENT BY WHICH THE MARKETS OF THE UNITED STATES WILL BE REOPENED TO THE PRODUCTS WHICH OUR PEOPLE DESIRE MOST TO SEND THERE.

"A FAIR MEASURE OF RECIPROCITY IS WHAT WE DESIRE, AND WE HAVE NO DOUBT THAT THAT CAN BE OBTAINED WITHOUT UNDUE SACRIFICES.

"I respectfully ask your support and votes, and I pledge myself to serve the best interests of the country, if I should be honoured by a renewal of the confidence which was reposed in me at the two last election and for which I shall be forever grateful. I remain, gentlemen,

"Your obedient servant,

"JOHN S. D. THOMPSON.

"Antigonish, Feb. 24, 1891."

We have been told by Mr. Taylor, M. P., and some Opposition journals year. They are good in every desired reciprocity, and merely made the offer to the United States in order to silence the Liberals. Sir John Thompson, we suppose, must now be added to the Ananias Club.

MR. BORDEN'S TRIP WEST.

(Montreal Herald.)

Incidentally, Mr. Borden seems to have scored by insisting upon an adjournment in return for a partial grant of supply. He gets his chance to make a tour of the West, which he would have lost if the House had remained in session in Sir Wilfrid's absence. It might not be far wide of the mark to suppose that Sir Wilfrid was just chivalrous enough to give him a chance. And it is just possible that Sir Wilfrid, who has been through the West himself, may have decided that it would be a good thing to let the Opposition leader stand for a few weeks as a target for the Grain Growers of Saskatchewan and the United Farmers of Alberta. The visit ought to clear the atmosphere a little. It ought to result in disclosing where the Western Conservatives stand in regard to the reciprocity agreement. At present there is nothing to prevent Mr. Lake or Mr. McGrath, or Mr. Herron, from saying on the platform that if the people of their ridings really want reciprocity they are ready to vote for it. If Mr. Borden finds it in his heart to tell the West that it cannot be allowed, to have the advantages which the trade agreement would put at its disposal, that it is his intention and the united resolve of his party not to permit such a thing as the development of easy and profitable trade relations with the United States, if in the West he formally and finally renounces, for himself and for his party, the aspiration of Sir John Thompson for an arrangement by which the markets of the United States will be reopened to the products which our people most desire to send there, then the farmers of the plains, unless their humour has changed since last summer, will be apt to give pretty candid expression to their views. Mr. Borden can hardly hope to get through the West without facing and directly meeting the issue, and if he lives up to his recent speeches he can not very well refrain from telling the Westerners that while they may want the reciprocity which the Americans seem willing to give, he and his party will not allow them to have it. To Sir Wilfrid, if he is looking forward to an early election, it might be worth a good deal to have the issue so clearly defined. There is just room for a suspicion, therefore, that he may not have been wholly averse to the idea of making it easy for Mr. Borden to go West.

THE FARMERS' BANK CASES.

(London Advertiser.)

When the Farmers' Bank cases came before Chief Justice Meredith in the high court at Toronto he charged the grand jury very strongly in favour of Mr. Matthew Wilson, K.C., and Mr. W. S. Morden, the manager of the Trust Company. The chief justice said:

"For the protection of cereditors of a bank the Legislature has forbidden that when a bank is in insolvent circumstances the bank should prefer one creditor over another, and so serious has the Parliament of Canada thought the doing of that act that it has made it an indictable offence punishable somewhat severely. Now what is claimed against Mr. Morden, the Manager of the Trust Company, and his solicitor, Mr. Matthew Wilson, K.C., is that the Farmers' Bank was on the eve of insolvency, and that they combined together to get Travers, the general manager of the bank, to give to the Trust Company whom they represented, an undue and unfair preference within the meaning of that law. It is said that these parties, in order to put the Trust Company in a better position, obtained several hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of promissory notes and other securities, which gave the Trust Company an unfair advantage or security over the other creditors of the bank. If it should turn out in this investigation that the parties were at arm's length, that the Trust Company, which was a creditor of the bank, was insisting upon getting its position improved, and that the general manager of the bank was being forced by Mr. Wilson and Mr. Morden to give the security, then this indictment could not be sustained, and the information should not have been laid against Messrs. Wilson and Morden, because they were doing what they had a right under the law to do in protecting their company or their clients."

The case went before the grand jury, and upon the judge's charge it was thrown out, and the prosecution was then ended. It was generally supposed from the commencement that these proceedings could have no other termination. The charge of the chief justice is in accordance with the well-known maxim, "Equity aids the vigilant, not the indolent." It was to the credit of the Trusts and Guarantee Company and those representing it that they protected their interests. It is a pleasure to record their favourable issue of the proceedings. The Trusts and Guarantee Company is one of the best finacial institutions of its kind, and is growing rapidly. Its assistant managers and solicitors were only doing their duty.

POST CARD COLUMN

Editor Post Card Column.

Dear Sir,—I notice in your Post Card column a lot of sympathy is being extended to Firemen Grange and Thomas for "insubordination." "Public employees" should be immediately dismissed who criticize the Council who are representatives of the people. By all means do without men who pander to public sympathy. Firemen Grange can have the opportunity of laying off now without a doctor's certificate.

A DISCHARGED FIREMAN.

Dear Mr. Editor,—I wish, through the medium of your columns, to reach the persons responsible for oiling the streets—I don't know their names or addresses—to give them a little information which I am sure will be followed by the necessary action. The house holders and housewives appreciate very much the oiling of the streets; it keeps down the dust nicely. Yesterday, myself and others in the neighbourhood thought it a nice time to stretch our lace curtains. We got them in the frames nice and white and thought that the danger of dust blowing upon the damp starch was over. But the wind sprung up from the southward, and rolled the dust in clouds from the surface of St. Joseph street, both Charlotte and Gilmour being oiled, and our curtains were a sight. Not only the dust spoiled our curtains, but it poured in through the open windows of the several residences on St. Joseph street and six or eight others near where it joins Gilmour street. To all homes on St. Joseph street and all the houses on Charlotte and Gilmour street near each end of it, oiling the street is of no earthly use as long as St. Joseph street remains a real dust bin. This street has never been watered or oiled and as it is mostly composed of earth, the dust that collects is something more than awful, when the wind lifts it and blows it into our houses, either on Gilmour or Charlotte, according to what way it blows; it is heart breaking. I and others similarly situated, smothered with dust, would much prefer to have Gilmour or Charlotte street left without oil than St. Joseph. It is only a short street, about 200 feet, but it raises dust enough for a thousand, and the oil tank could cover it in about a minute on the way from one street to another. Without oil or water it is a cause of daily annoyance to me and others living on St. Joseph street, or on the other two street near it.

Yours respectfully,

HOUSEWIFE.

A FINE PROGRAMME

The band concert under the auspices of the 57th Regimental Band, in the armouries on Friday night, will be the last of the indoor series, and promises to be, by all odds, the best. For this concert the choicest selections in the band's extensive library have been chosen and the result will be a grand programme. A feature will be Rossini's "Barber of Seville," which was featured by the Toronto Symphony Orchestra last week, and is one of the most beautiful numbers in the band's repertoire. Another number will be the grand patriotic selection "Under the British Flag," particularly appropriate at this coronation season. Other offerings will be two catchy numbers by Linke, the ever popular "Glow Worm" and the serenade "Amena." Miss Pringle, the soprano soloist of the Charlotte Street Methodist Church, will take part. There will be ample seating accommodation.

No More Wrinkles

BEAUTIFUL BUST

Superfluous Hair Vanishes Like Magic by a New Discovery

Pimples and Blackheads Removed Forever.

Let this woman send you free, everything she agrees, and beautify your face and form quickly.

She Looks Like a Girl of 18.

This clever woman has not a wrinkle upon her face; she has perfected a marvelous, simple method which brought a wonderful change in her face in a single night. For removing wrinkles and developing the bust, her method is truly wonderfully rapid.

She made herself the woman she is to-day and brought about the wonderful change in her appearance in a secret and pleasant manner. Her complexion is as clear and fair as that of a child. She turned her scrawny figure into a beautiful bust and well developed form. She had thin, scrawny eye-lashes and eyebrows, which could scarcely be seen, and she made them long, thick and beautiful by her own methods and removed every blackhead and pimple from her face in a single night.

You can imagine her joy, when by her own simple discovery, she removed every wrinkle from her face and developed her thin neck and form to beautiful proportions.

Nothing is taken into the stomach, no common massage, no harmful plasters, no worthless creams.

By her new process, she removes wrinkles and develops the whole figure plump and fat.

It is simply astonishing the hundreds of women who write in regarding the wonderful results from this new beauty treatment, which is beautifying their face and form after beauty doctors and other methods failed.

Mary Merritt, of Wis., writes, her wrinkles have entirely disappeared. Miss Hanson writes, her bust is beautifully developed and wrinkles gone. Mrs. Markham writes, her wrinkles vanished over night.

Miss Alice Day writes, every blackhead and pimple has vanished forever.

The valuable new beauty book which Madame Cunningham is sending free to thousands of women is certainly a blessing to womankind, as it makes known her remarkable methods of beautifying the face and figure of unattractive women.

All our readers should write her at once and she will send you absolutely free all she agrees, and will show our readers how to remove wrinkles in 6 hours; how to develop the bust; how to make long, thick eyelashes and eyebrows; how to remove blackheads, pimples and freckles; how to remove dark circles under the eyes; how to quickly remove double chin; how to build up sunken cheeks and add flesh to the body; how to darken gray hair and stop falling hair; how to stop forever perspiration odour.

Simply address your letter to Evelyn Cunningham, Suite A455,, 82E. Randolph St., Chicago, Ill., and don't send any money, because particulars are free, as this charming woman is doing her utmost to benefit girls or women in need of secret information which will add to their beauty and make life sweeter and lovelier in every way.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

Why it is, I wonder, that people of reserve and taste in most matters, so frequently offend the canons of both by having their living rooms and reception rooms, and even their dining rooms, lavishly hung with photographs of their family and relatives and intimate friends.

That the rooms which are used for the entertainment of general company should be decorated chiefly with impersonal pictures, pictures of general interest, seems to me just as much a law of taste and politeness as that conversation with these people should be of general interest rather than on personal matters.

You would never think of expressing your relatives and intimacies into your caller's ears by talking confidently about them. Why then, should you foist them upon her eyes by covering the walls of the room in which you entertain her, with nothing but their pictures.

The private den or study or workroom where only the most intimate friends are taken, or the citadel of one's private personality, one's own chamber, seem to me the proper places for these picture galleries, and yet how seldom we see a home where this rule is strictly adhered to.

I suppose it is partly because in these days of frequent and easy picture taking, most of us have so many photographs of our friends in our possession that they overflow our private quarters and inundate the whole house.

Quite frequently the gift of a photograph, fond though we may be of its original and glad though we may be to receive it, brings a problem in its wake.

We show it to the people who will be especially interested in it. It lies about on our desk or table for a few days, and then what? If we stand it up or tack it up unframed it will surely spoil, and discolour. We do not feel just like taking the money to buy a frame especially for it. And yet we would surely have been offended if that friend had passed us by in the distribution of her pictures.

I know one girl who solves this little problem in a way that will surely interest for its uniqueness even if it does not appeal. She has about a half dozen frames which is all there is space for in her room. These frames are so made that the pictures can easily be slipped in and out. Every few weeks she changes the pictures in them so that she has all her friends looking down upon her from time to time.

In this connection let me suggest that for an inexpensive birth day or Christmas gift, I know of nothing that will be more sure to fill a niche of need than a small frame, suitable for a photograph. Let it be of any sort, an oval of brass or bronze or the simplest of wooden frames, and it will undeniably find a welcome, for show me the person who has not more photographs than he has frames for them, and I will show you a rarity.

"ACTION OF COUNCIL WAS ENTIRELY UNWARRANTED"

Letter From Mr. D. O'Connell on Industrial Commissionership Matter---Says Aldermen Did Not Get Proper Information on the Subject---The Work of the Commissioner.

(To the Editor of the Examiner).

There is evidently considerable misconception in the minds of the members of the City Council in respect of the Industrial Commissioner's fund, and of their relations with the citizens.

Somewhat over a year ago a public meeting of the citizens of the City of Peterborough was called at the instance of the Board of Trade and a resolution was passed thereat, urging upon the Council of the City of Peterborough, in order to promote the industrial interests of the City, to procure the services of a competent and efficient officer, who should devote his whole time and energy in acquiring knowledge of the peculiar advantages possessed by the City in consulting and advising with the Municipal Council regarding the same and in promoting and advancing the industrial welfare and the interests of the City generally, and that for this purpose an appropriation be made by general levy for such sum as might be necessary. This resolution was subsequently presented to the Council by representatives of the Board of Trade, and notwithstanding the fact that the citizens had at their representative meeting unanimously expressed their wish that the City should appoint this officer for the purposes mentioned, and bear the expense of his office, they refused to do so, and acquiesced only so far as to contribute the sum of $2,000.00 towards this expense, upon the condition that the Board of Trade should raise by subscription an amount at least equally large, and that in the event of their so doing, that that body should have absolute control of the office. The Council having come to this conclusion, some gentlemen connected with the Board of Trade, and who had no interest in the matter, other than the desire to promote the city's welfare, spent considerable time and expended much energy in interviewing a large number of the business men of the community and in obtaining contributions to the fund to satisfy the Council's condition. They were successful in their efforts and succeeded in raising the sum of about $4,600.00, including the sum contributed by the city. Upon this fact being communicated to the City Council, they paid the sum of $2,000.00 over to the Board of Trade, and the office of the Industrial Commissioner was in accordance with the understanding between the two bodies, placed absolutely under the control of the Board of Trade. Upon this being done the Board of Trade appointed a committee of its own body to advertise for a man to fill the position, to appoint the officer, and to take charge of his duties. This committee forthwith, upon receiving its instructions, advertised extensively in the public press, and in response thereto received a very large number of applications, and after a perusal of the same selected a number of them from parties whom they thought might be able to fill the position satisfactorily, and requested these persons to come to Peterborough for a personal interview. After interviewing a number of applicants and examining their credentials the committee finally decided to appoint Mr. Duggan to the position. His personal qualifications for the position made a favorable impression upon the committee. His business experience had been extensive, and he came highly recommended from some of the most prominent business men in the City of Montreal. This committee having in view the purposes for which the Industrial Commissioner was to be appointed as mentioned in the resolution passed by the Citizens' Committee, namely,

That he would devote his whole time and energy in acquiring knowledge of the peculiar advantages possessed by the City and in promoting and advancing the industrial welfare and interest of the City generally, and that he should consult the Board of Trade now, instead of the Municipal Council, as the former body had charge of his office; instructed him, first, to acquire a knowledge of the conditions mentioned and to endeavor to the best of his ability to advance the industrial welfare of the City.

The committee, recognising the fact that perhaps one of the most important factors in the City's industrial progress was the advantage accruing to it from the energy to be derived from its water power and to be made available for manufacturing purposes, instructed the Industrial Commissioner to gather and systematize all the information he could obtain upon the subject and place himself in communication with the Hydro Electric Commission and have an exhaustive and complete report made of the water power situation generally, and of all the water power adjacent to the City of Peterborough that might be made economically serviceable for its industrial and commercial purposes. In pursuance to these instructions, the Commissioner took up the matter with the Hydro Electric Commission and succeeded in getting a personal interview with the commission in the month of November last and succeeded in getting that body interested in the power question in this district. As it was necessary under the Hydro Electric Power Commission Act, that a request should be made by the municipal authorities directly to the Commission, to have a report made by its engineers, the Commissioner, I am informed by him, in the month of January last, laid the whole proposition before the Mayor and requested him to make an application to the commission, and in consequence of this request the application was made by him. The Industrial Commissioner did not make this formal request to the Mayor until the month of January, because he found it necessary to have a definite scheme arrived at before such application should be made. Industrial Commissioner carried on upon the application being made, the most active negotiations with the Hydro Electric Commission in the matter, assisting every way in his power to obtain the information required by them and was most enthusiastic in his efforts to have [illegible] complete and prepare a report and present it to the citizens at as early a date as possible. As a result of these efforts the report was prepared and presented at a meeting of the citizens in the month of April.

It is quite evident that this very important question of electrical power had been for many years neglected by this City, and that in fact little or nothing had been done respecting it by the Municipal Council or by any other representative body until it was energetically taken up by the Industrial Commissioner with the result hereinbefore mentioned. A complete and reliable report has now been prepared and placed in the hands of the citizens, a clear and definite knowledge has been obtained in respect to this very important matter, and the citizens for the first time are placed in a position to form a correct opinion respecting it and to come to a proper conclusion as to what should be done in securing for the City control and a considerable quantity of electric power, and of what seems to be absolutely necessary for the future industrial development of this City.

Complaints are made by members of the City Council that there was undue interference in respect to the water power question by the Industrial Commissioner, and that he and the Council were working at cross and this communication was not read purposes. If this is so, the members of the Council and not Mr. Duggan are to blame. He was carrying out the instructions of the committee, who had his office in charge and whose instructions he had to obey in order to retain his position. He gave that amount of attention to the work which was necessary, and that no member of the Council or any other municipal officer had time to devote to it. After the application was made by the Mayor at his request, he carried on the work and conducted negotiations with the knowledge of almost every, if not every member of the City Council. He had no knowledge whatever of the City Council any members or committee thereof conducting any negotiations with the Hydro Electric Commission respecting the same. If the Council found that Mr. Duggan's efforts were interfering with their efforts in the same direction, it would have been a simple matter for them to have told him so, but throughout the whole transaction they never uttered a word of warning. Is it not plain that in these circumstances that if there is any blame to be attached to anyone in the matter it should be attached to the members of the City Council, who to say the least of it were apathetic, and who had it in their power to have harmonious action on the part of the Industrial Commissioner and their own body, if they saw fit.

It is very clear that a number of the Aldermen had taken very little trouble to correctly inform themselves of the facts of the case before discussing the discontinuance of Mr. Duggan in the office. If they are guilty of the same lamentable ignorance of the City's affairs generally and in their discussion of other public matters as they were in this particular instance, one might well feel an apprehension as to efficient management of the municipal affairs. One of the Aldermen mentions the Commissioner's salary as being $4,000 and complains that it is altogether too high, and the fact is that the salary is only $3,600.00, and $4,000.00 is intended to defray not only his own salary, but the wages of his stenographer and all the expenses incident to his office.

Again it is asked by one of the Aldermen, as stated in the public press, why should the City retain a four thousand dollar man to sit in an office and read over communications that come to the Mayor and Clerk respecting the location of industries. This in my opinion is a very unfair way of representing the services performed by the Commissioner. He has been most energetic ever since he took the office in his efforts to procure factories for this City. He has taken, it is true, the letters that came to the Mayor and the City Clerk and has conducted extensive negotiations with the writers. Nothing was said by the members of the Council about the thousands of letters written by this gentleman while in this office.

It is no exaggeration to say that he has written to upwards of two thousand people that he has communicated with manufacturing concerns throughout the United States in all branches, that might be likely to locate in the City of Peterborough, and he has carried on a most extensive correspondence with such persons who had given him any hope of eventually locating here. At the present time, active, live negotiations are being conducted with about sixteen industrial concerns, a number of whom he hoped to be able to locate here during the present year. There is little doubt that Mr. Duggan has done more during his brief term of office than any other officer in the City of Peterborough to bring Peterborough industrial advantages before the manufacturing concerns in the United States and Canada than any other office in the civic service. That he has not succeeded in procuring many factories during the present

DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS SAVED MY LIFE

Strong Statement of Well-known Harnessmaker of Claremont

Nicholas Burton was to undergo an operation, when he tried Dodd's Kidney Pills and found a cure.

Claremont, Ont., May 8.—(Special.)—"I have said many times, and I can say it again, I believe Dodd's Kidney Pills saved my life."

This strong statement is made by Nicholas Burton, harness maker, of this place.

"About thirteen years ago," he continues, "I grew gradually weak and my skin and eyeballs were as yellow as saffron. The doctor here took me to Brooklin and later to Toronto for consultation, and the final decision was that I must undergo an operation to remove a supposed cancer in my liver. My chances of recovery were regarded as nil, and I proceeded to settle up my business affairs.

"Then from something I read or heard I began taking Dodd's Kidney Pills, and I continued taking them till I had used twenty-two boxes.

"My condition improved as I continued to take the pills, and I owe it to them that I am here and well today.

"I am making this statement for the benefit of others. I owe it to them and oDdd's Kidney Pills to do it." There is no trouble of the kidneys that Dodd's Kidney Pills will not cure. Mr. Burton's trouble was of the Kidneys.

CENTRAL SCHOOL TEAM WON FROM EAST CITY

The Public School Baseball League was opened for the season yesterday afternoon when the Central and East City teams met in a Senior Division game at Nicholls' Oval. The result was a hollow victory for the Central team, who won out in a seven-innings contest by 31 runs to 5. Last year's champions, with Cavanah, Long, Heaslip and Dobson of that team as a nucleus, and a number of capable substitutes to replace graduates look like the nines to beat for the senior championship this year. They are strong in the department, the battery work being especially strong. The East City team were shy of size and experience and never had a look in in yesterday's game. Dobson's speedy shoots, backed up by good support, left the cross-the-river team with little chance to score, while on the other hand, Anderson and Phillips, the losers' twirlers, were batted freely and their support was full of holes. The Centrals broke loose in the second and from then on to the finish it rained hits and runs when the champs were at bat. Cavanah's hitting was a feature, the Centrals' catcher having four hits to his credit, one of them a long three-bagger with the bases full. A double play, Long to Heaslip was the chief fielding feature. Both sides had a big squad of youthful and leather-lunged rooters and people within a mile of the Oval had no difficulty in guessing that the ball season was in full swing. The line-ups:

Centrals—Trull, Heaslip, Cavanah, Long, Helson, Armstrong, Dobson, Routley, Davis.

East City—Johnson, Cook, Phillips, Huycke, Hagerman, Moffatt, Thompson, Anderson, Lipsett.

Umpire—F. D. Craig.

Business boys 7.30 to 7.45 p.m Men 8.00 to 9.00 p.m. except Saturday. Every man and boy will be expected to bring his own towel.

THE MASSES.

Cut at each throat
Let all try to float,
  Tho' the river of Death be strong;
For the mighty wave
Of the masses grave
  Shall ever bear ye along.

Struggle and fight
'Till the close of night,
  When your heart be filled with pain,
Then sleep ye and rest
On the nights broad breast
  For to-morrow ye start again.

'Tho' hearts may break
With their weary ache
  And the feeble eyes grow dim,
Man, cling to thy throne
For thy form alone
  Was made in the image of Him.

From the peak of the mount
To the depth will ye flount
  Thy bragging; and crave for lust,
Yet the noble song
Of the teeming throng
  Like the body, shall end in dust.

For man's birthright
Is to struggle and fight
  As ye journey the road apace,
If thy weak, false pride
Makes ye stand aside,
  There are others to take thy place.

Crave for gold
Let the body be sold
  And your soul stained dark for gain,
Then the goal must be
But a blood red sea
  Of misery anguish and pain.

Yet the instinct born
In the heart, though torn
  By the craving of mammon and greed;
Shall speak with a voice,
That will make ye rejoice.
  And shall say to the soul, "Ye are freed."

—Robert Partridge.

PRESENTATION MADE TO REV. F. J. SAWERS BY LAKEFIELD PARISHIONERS

Rev. F. J. Sawers has evidently earned much more than his salary as Incumbent of the Church of St. John the Evangelist, Lakefield. On the occasion of his retirement to assume the rectorship of St. Luke's, he received many evidences of appreciation of his faithful ministry to the congregation.

On Monday afternoon the Wardens waited upon Rev. Mr. Sawers, and on behalf of the congregation presented him with the following address, accompanied by a purse of gold:

Rev. F. J. Sawers, M. A.

Dear Sir,—For the last year and eight months you have been our

REV. F. J. SAWERS,
New Rector of St. Luke's, Who Was Honoured by His Lakefield Parishioners Yesterday.

pastor, priest and spiritual guide, and none could have been better. By your untiring devotion to the duties of your high calling, by your incessant labour for our spiritual benefit, by the high standard which you have ever held up before us in your teaching and exemplified by your life, and by the excellence of your sermons, always clear, logical, instructive and impressive, you have won our profound esteem, affection and gratitude. And now you are about to leave us. Your work here has been finished, but its effects will remain. The good that man do lives after them. The good you have done in Lakefield, be assured, will be permanent; but its amount, not time, but eternity, will reveal.

The Bishop, recognising your great attainments, your earnest devotion to the church and to the cause of Christ has, in his wisdom, seen fit to appoint you to a larger parish where your opportunities of doing good will be greatly increased. If we may take what you have done here, and amply we may, as an earnest of what you will accomplish there, these opportunities will be improved to the uttermost, and the greatness of the result no man can estimate.

And now, will you accept this purse of gold as a totally inadequate, but a very sincere expression of our gratitude for the good you have done to us individually and collectively ? And will you kindly convey to your amiable and accomplished wife our thanks for what she has done for our good ? She has spared no pains to make herself useful; she has been, in our opinion an ideal wife for a minister; but much of the good she has done has been done unconsciously, but none the less effectively, for no boy or girl, no man or woman, can come within the sphere of her influence without being uplifted by it. That you and she may be long spared to continue your work in the service of humanity and of the Saviour of humanity, is the sincere prayer of your Lakefield parishoners.

Signed on behalf of the congregation by William M. Graham, R. Robleston Tate, Church Wardens, Lakefield, May 8, 1911.

Other evidences of appreciation and esteem were also presented previously. The members of St. John's Young Men's Club and of St. John's Boys' Club favoured their departing incumbent with testimonials, and Mrs. Sawers received a very pleasant remembrance at the hands of the Girls' Auxiliary. These are evidences that Mr. and Mrs. Sawers have the quality that will win them a warm welcome, pleasant residence and successful career in Peterborough.

Regret Expressed At The Departure Of Dr. Langfeldt

The following letter has been sent from the Secretary of the Rural Deanery of Peterborough and Northumberland to Rev. Dr. Langfeldt on the occasion of his leaving for another part of the diocese:

The meeting of the St. John's Y. P. A. last night proved a most enjoyable affair, the main feature being an address by Mr. W. J. Neale on "Young Canada."

Mr. Neale, since his coming to Peterborough, has done good work in the school and amongst the Boy Scouts. In last night's address he referred to the duties incumbent upon young Canadians in the upbuilding of this great country. They should be fit physically, morally and intellectually. The body should be a main consideration, as without a sound physique the mental equipment would inevitably be found weak. Stud would inevitably be found weak. Study should e prolonged beyond school days, to keep the mind in good shape. Great care should be taken to keep the moral issues pure and unvarnished. He advocated a wise study of Canadian politics, with a view of the future welfare of all classes and brought an interesting address to a close by reciting a patriotic poem by Rudyard Kipling.

At its conclusion Mr. Neale was accorded a warm vote of thanks and all expressed the hope that he would continue his subject at some subsequent date.

Dear Dr. Langfeldt,—As Secretary of the Rural Deanery of Northumberland and Peterborough, I take pleasure in forwarding to you the following resolution:

Resolved, that this Chapter of the Rural Deanery of Northumberland and Peterborough have received with sincere regret the resignation of Rev. Dr. E. A. Langfeldt, as their Rural Dean, occasioned by his removal to another part of the Diocese. They desire to express to Dr Langfeldt their appreciation of the great gifts with which he had been endowed by a generous Providence, and they assure him that they will follow, with affectionate fraternal interest, the exercise of those gifts for Christ and the Church in the new field of work to which he has been called, and they pray that God's richest blessing may rest upon him and all that are his for all time.

Yours sincerely,
F. J. SAWERS,
Secretary.

"ACTION OF COUNCIL ENTIRELY UNWARRANTED"

year should not occasion any surprise. Before results can be expected very considerable efforts would have to be put forth and very considerable area covered. To represent that his services were restricted to answering communications coming through the City Clerk and Mayor was a very unfair way of putting it.

There seems to be a desire also on the part of some members of the City Council to attach blame to him in face of the result of the vote upon the by-law proposing assistance to the Independent Tire Company. In this matter Mr. Duggan sought and obtained the assistance and co-operation of a large number of progressive and permonent citizens. He organized every polling sub-division in the City and made arrangements for committees to look after the same and bring out the votes in each of these districts. All that was possible for a man to do he did, and if the necessary vote was not brought out it was not due to any neglect upon his part. Might I not ask, if it is not as much the duty of the Council to take some means to have the necessary vote brought out, as it was that of the Industrial Commissioner, or any other person or body in the community, yet apparently nothing was done by them. If I may be permitted to say so, a number of the Aldermen seem to have misconceived their relations with the citizens and the position which they occupy. They appear to be only too anxious to act as an autocratic body, whose public acts are above and beyond the control of the citizens. They seem to have completely forgotten that the citizens themselves exercised their choice in selecting them to occupy the position at the Municipal Board, that they placed them there and solely for the purposes of carrying out their wishes and not the individual wishes and desires of the elected body. They seem to have constructed some peculiar theory or another of Municipal Government that the wishes of the community who selected them and placed them in a position of public trust to perform the public services according to the express wishes and desires of the citizens were to be entirely disregarded and that the whims and personal inclinations of the members of the Council alone were to be given effect to. There could be no better instance of it than the case in consideration. The citizens in the first instance expressed their wish for this office and that the remuneration and expenses should be paid out of the public funds, and their wish was not acquiesced. A representative body of the citizens had appointed the Commissioner to the office and expressed satisfaction with the way in which he discharged his duties, and asked that the Council continue him in the service, and their wishes were not given effect to. The representatives of the Board of Trade and a large number of influential citizens and members of the citizens' associations appeared before the City Council and requested that this gentleman be continued in office, and their wishes in the matter were ignored.

A communication had been sent from the Retail Merchants' Association and placed in the hands of the Mayor and City Clerk, so I am informed by the Industrial Commissioner, requesting that the office be continued, and that the services of the present incumbent be retained, to the Council until after the question of the dismissal had been disposed of, and again the wishes of the citizens were not acquiesced in.

The action of the Council in this matter seems to me to be entirely unwarranted and to be arrived at on the part of several of the members without proper information, information that might have been easily obtained, and in express opposition to the wishes of several of the representative bodies of the citizens.

Yours truly,
May 9, 1911. D. O'CONNELL.

YOU CA NSEE IT WORK

The beauty of Dr. A. W. Chase's Ointment as a healer of the skin in eczema, salt rheum, itching skin diseases and old sores is that you can see from day to day exactly what it is doing. There is no guesswork, no experimenting. It simply heals the skin and makes it soft, smooth and natural. It heals as if by magic. Prove this to your own satisfaction by trying it

ENJOYABLE EVENT

A concert, celebrating the anniversary of the Young Men's Guild, took place at St. Andrew's church last evening.

After the Rev. Mr. Rollins had introduced those taking part, the programme commenced by a violin solo by Miss Julia Choate. It is scarcely necessary to enlarge upon this item, as Miss Choate is so well known for her violin playing in the city, suffice it to say she played with her usual grace, tastefulness, and expression.

Master Wilfrid Morison, he phenomenal boy soprano, came next and proved worthy of the title. Such a voice amongst boys is very seldom heard. The control he exercised over his voice was wonderful, while the tone colour and crispness of articulation for one so young was truly remarkable.

Mr. R. J. Soden read Dr Drummond's poem "Madame Albani," and his French Canadian dialect was good.

All the artists were recalled and ably responded.

The Rev. Mr. Potter, the former pastor, gave a short address, and said he was delighted and surprised that he was given the opportunity to say a word. He thought it was arranged that he should sit quietly by and listen to the music. Referring to his late appointment he remarked: We are not yet in full uniformity with the Methodist folk, but it is good for some of us to get a change once in fourteen years, and I was simply obeying orders when I left here. Wellington at Waterloo said: "It is pounding, gentlemen, always pounding, but we are going to see who will pound the longest." To the congregation there is always one great work constant pounding.

This influence and the force and disposition that ministers have will all contribute to the great one purpose, and if we have that one mind, one purpose in all kinds of work, we cannot go far wrong. By the grace of God think of your work, because in this city you have a great work to do.

The concert terminated by the singing of the national anthem about ten o'clock, and was a great success.

INDIGESTION

An Interesting Statement

Portland, Me.—"I suffered so long with indigestion and stomach trouble that I lost flesh rapidly—I had used all kinds of remedies without help. Vinol was recommended and I decided to try it.

"I soon commenced to feel better, my stomach trouble disappeared and I can eat heartily without the slightest distress. My experience leads me to believe that no other medicine equals Vinol for stomach troubles and indigestion. It tones up the stomach, increases the appetite and creates strength." W. E. Waterhouse. (We guarantee this testimonial to be genuine.)

Vinol seldom fails to strengthen and tone up the tired, overtaxed and weakened nerves of the digestive organs, and remove the cause of indigestion and soon enables the sufferer to digest with ease the foods that once caused distress. Moreover Vinol is delicious to the taste, contains no oil and does not upset weak stomachs, as do old-fashioned cod liver oil and emulsions.

Try a bottle of Vinol with the understanding that your money will be returned if it does not help you. McDermid and Jury, corner George and Charlotte streets; also Payne's drug store, corner George and Simcoe streets.

PETITION BEING CIRCULATED

A petition which is meeting with the approval of a large number of citizens, is being circulated by a number of the merchants of the city. The object of this movement is for the purpose of protesting against the recent action of the Council in demanding the resignations of two of the firemen. It also calls for an investigation, and demands that the firemen be given a hearing.

SPLENDID PROGRAMME

Last evening the young People's Society of the St. Paul's Presbyterian Church visited Springville, and were the guests of the Young People's Society of the Springville Presbyterian Church. Three busses and several single rigs were used in carrying about fifty young people to Springville, where they enjoyed a very pleasant time. The programme was given by the St. Paul's Young People, with Mr. A. A. Perrin, the president, in charge, and was greatly enjoyed. The numbers were as follows:

Solo—Miss Dawson.
Reading—Miss Walker.
Mandolin solo—Mr. Harry Cooke.
Reading—Mr. Allan Brown.
Solo—Miss M. White.
Violin solo—Miss Logan.
Reading—Mr. R. Beavis.

Every number was encored and a recall number was given in each case. After the programme refreshments were served and a pleasant social hour spent. The Springville arrangements were in charge of Messrs Bert Sanderson, the president, and Fred Wilson, the vice-president, who are deserving of credit for the splendid success of the occasion.

INTERESTING DEBATE BY EPWORTH LEAGUE

A very interesting debate was held last night by St. James' Epworth League. Both sides of the question were handled in a very able manner. The affirmative was taken by Mr. McClaren and Miss Elena Drake, and the negative by Mr. Goodwin and Miss Frost. The latter won by one point.

The subject of the debate was, "Resolved that the Government should not encourage emigration." Three papers were also read, "Italians" by Miss Collins, French by Miss Maybee Drake and the Indians by Miss Kidd.

Mr. Moss, Mr. Bedworth and Miss Leader acted as judges, and needless to say, they carried their duties to a successful issue.

OBITUARY

ARTHUR GREENWOOD.

The death occurred at Nicholls Hospital yesterday morning at 9 o'clock of Arthur Greenwood, aged 18. The deceased had been in Canada only one year, dying twelve months from date of his arrival at Peterborough, from Yorkshire, Eng., viz., May 8th. He leaves a mother, father, three sisters and one brother. It transpires that the deceased had been ailing since he went under an operation for appendicitis some time ago.

The funeral will take place to-morrow afternoon, from the home of his parents, Lansdowne street, to All Saints church, and from thence to Little Lake cemetery for interment.

MISS LILA GERTHUDE GILPIN.

Many in Peterborough will sincerely regret to learn of the death of Miss Lila Gertrude Gilpin, which occurred on Sunday last at the family residence, 250 Carleton street, Toronto. Miss Gilpin was a niece of Mrs. (Dr.) Eastwood, Brock street, with whom she spent some weeks each season. She had been in poor health for a couple of years, and her demise therefore was not unexpected. Of a bright and lovable disposition, she made many friends in Peterborough, who will deeply sympathize with the bereaved family in their great loss. The funeral took place yesterday and was private.

RHODA MARY ALEXANDER.

A pioneer resident and one of the most well known and highly respected citizens of this city, passed away at her home, corner of London and George streets, this morning, at an early hour. She was born Nov. 1st, 1839, and was the second daughter of Mr. James Sanderson Alexander, of Stirling, Scotland. She and her surviving brother, Mr. Chas. Albert Alexander have conducted the grocery business at the corner of George and London streets, for more than fifty years. The only sister of the deceased, predeceased her about four years ago.

The funeral will be held on Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock from the family residence, to the Little Lake cemetery.

Steamer will leave Wolfe St. Wharf Friday, May 12th, at 8 a.m. for Stony Lake points, returning same day, reaching Peterborough at 7 p.m. Freight will be received at boat or warehouse Thursday afternoon or early Friday morning.

ARCHBISHOP McEVAY OF TORONTO PASSES AWAY FORMERLY STATIONED HERE

Widely Beloved Prelate, Formerly Rector of St. Peter's Cathedral, is Dead, at Age of Fifty-five Years.

ILL FOR A YEAR

Toronto, May 10.—After an illness of more than a year, Most Rev. Fergus Patrick McEvay, Archbishop of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Toronto, passed away peacefully at 12.25 a.m. this morning at the palace, 510 Sherbourne street. Those present when the end came were his nephew, Father McGuire, Rev. Father Burke, editor of The Catholic Register and Extension; Father Kidd, Father Whelan, Dr. R. J. Dwyer, and a number of sisters of the church.

While it became evident some months ago that his grace was suffering from an acute form of pernicious anaemia, which threatened to end fatally, the archbishop at times showed improvement in his condition, which gave rise to hope of ultimate recovery. He visited Mount Clemens, Michigan, and Atlantic City in quest of health, and appeared to be considerably benefitted, but of late it became evident that dissolution could not long be stayed. On frequent occasions both through pulpit and the columns of The Catholic Register special prayers of the faithful of the diocese were besought on his behalf.

THE LATE ARCHBISHOP M'EVAY.

The Right Rev. Fergus Patrick McEvay, who succeeded to the archdiocese of Toronto upon the retirement of Archbishop O'Connor three years ago, was a native of this province, having been born in Lindsay in 1856. His earlier education he received in the county schools and afterwards continued his studies in St. Michael's College and the University of Toronto. He took his theological course at the Grand Seminary in Montreal, and was subsequently ordained at Trenton in 1882 by the late Archbishop Cleary.

Combined with a thorough classical training, the late archbishop possessed to a remarkable degree business acumen, which was evidenced by the development in every parish with which he was associated. His ministrations had many ramifications, and his different clerical responsibilities were perhaps more varied than those which fall to the lot of most priests.

At Kingston he assumed his first duties, but shortly afterwards on the formation of the Peterboro diocese, he was moved to that jurisdiction and took charge of the missions at Bobcaygeon, Galway and Fenelon Falls. In 1887, when Bishop Dowling succeeded Bishop Janot of Peterboro, the then Father McEvay was appointed rector of St. Peter's Church at Peterboro. In his ministry there, the zeal, enthusiasm and activity of the young cleric found ample scope. Bishop Dowling entrusted the renovation of the cathedral to him, and through his executive ability the property for St. Joseph's Hospital was secured and parochial and diocesan houses erected.

While in the midst of these labors, Father McEvay went to Hamilton, where he occupied the dual position of secretary to the bishop and rector of the cathedral. During his stay in Hamilton honors came to him from Rome. He was appointed private chamberlain to his holiness Pope Leo XIII., and later domestic prelate and vicar-general of the diocese.

But Archbishop McEvay seemed destined to follow in the wake of his predecessor in Toronto, for, when the then Bishop O'Connor was called from London to the larger diocese in Toronto, Father McEvay was elevated to the Bishopric of London. On the 22nd May, 1908, his further elevation to the Toronto diocese was announced by Bishop Dowling of Hamilton, the ex-senior bishop of the Province of Canada. Archbishop McEvay was the sixth in the episcopal succession to the Toronto see, the first appointment being that of the Right Reverend Michael Power in 1841.

Archbishop McEvay was of a striking and forceful personality. He carried the dignity of his high office well. A profound scholar and clear thinker, he was nevertheless just and firm. Popular with all classes, his advent to Toronto was hailed with much pleasure, and among a wide circle his face will be missed.

Among the different buildings in connection with his parochial work that have been erected at the instrumentality of Archbishop McEvay, are:

Extensions to Our Lady of Lourdes and archbishop's palace, Earl street.

St. Anthony's Church, formerly part of St. Helen's parish.

New church for St. Helen's parish, corner of Lansdowne avenue and Dundas street.

Extension to St. Patrick's Church, McCaul street.

Theological seminary, erected through munificence of Eugene O'Keefe, at Blantyre Park, Kingston road.

St. Cecilia's Church, West Toronto, (new).

St. Anne's parish, created out of St. Joseph's parish.

CHINA WAKING UP.

Imperial Edicts Touch on Railways, Opium and New Cabinet.

Pekin, May 10.—An imperial edict issued yesterday authorises the conclusion of the Hukwang loan of $30,000,000 for railroad construction in Central China. The loan was signed a year ago this month by groups of financiers representing Great Britain, the United States, France and Germany. Despite provincial opposition the amount of the loan to the Chinese Government remains at $30,000,000, and notwithstanding the elimination of a branch section of the railway, the four groups of bankers will participate.

Another edict exhorts the viceroys to abolish the production of opium expeditiously. Great Britain having consented by the Anglo-Chinese agreement signed Monday to reduce the exportation of Indian opium to China as rapidly as the home growth is exterminated. The anti-opium societies are most active and as the country has been aroused it is believed the Government will succeed in abolishing the production of the poppy within a few years.

The important edicts of yesterday and the one of Monday which abolished the grand council, substituting for it a constitutional cabinet of ten members, indicate that the Government is assuming a responsibility which, heretofore has lacked revolutionary evidences, and that the assembly's unabated hostility has forced the Government to lead or be led.

BOYS KILLED BY TRAIN.

Two Hamilton Lads Run Down on G.T.R. Tracks.

Hamilton, May 10.—Instant death overtook Harold Tye and Morris Holden, two English boys, about 11 years of age, when they were run down by G.T.R. passenger train No. 12, about a quarter of a mile west of the Jockey Club, a few minutes before six o'clock yesterday afternoon. The bodies of both boys were terribly mangled, the face of the Tye lad being unrecognizable, with both hands and one leg cut off, while Holden's body was cut in two at the waist. So far as is known, no one except the engineer of the train which killed the boys, saw the accident. The boys had been gathering dandelions along the track and at the approach of the train it is supposed they lost all presence of mind and in their confusion ran in front of the train.

The G. T. R. tracks at the point where the accident occurred, are on a high embankment, but as there are three tracks, the boys could have avoided the fatal accident by staying on one of the other tracks. After striking the boys, the train stopped and the crew telephoned to the railway company's office about the matter. A brakeman was left in charge of the remains and the train proceeded on its way to Buffalo. Dr. H. S. Burns, whose office is nearby, was called, but of course, could do nothing. The bodies were removed to the city morgue, where they were viewed by Coroner Hopkins and a jury at nine o'clock. The inquest was adjourned till next Friday. Both boys were sons of carpenters, who have not been long out from England. Ernest Tye, 33 Kensington avenue, is the father of the Tye lad, while Holden's father is John Holden of Rosslyn-avenue.

MEXICAN COMBATANTS HAVE FIERCE BATTLE

Insurrectos Make a Determined Attack on the Position of the Federals on the Rio Grande and Thirty to Sixty Are Dead.

BATTLE AT JUAREZ

El Paso, Tex., May 10.—What perhaps was the fiercest battle of the Mexican revolution, was fought at Juarez, across the Rio Grande yesterday, but without result. Last night both federal and insurrecto were resting on their arms ready to resume the battle at daybreak.

While the insurrectos are in possession of the greater part of the city the federals have strongly entrenched positions.

The aged Gen. Navarro is confident that he can hold out for at least a week until Rabago and Escudero come up with reinforcements. The rebels are equally confident that by to-morrow night they will be in full possession.

The loss on both sides is estimated at from 30 to 60 dead and nearly a hundred wounded.

Town Taken by Assault.

Tijuana, Lower California, Mexico, May 10.—Three companies of independent rebels, comprising 280 men, are encamped in the buildings and streets of Tijuana. The town was taken by assault yesterday, the battle lasting from 5.30 until 9.40 o'clock. At that hour resistance ceased. Conservative estimates of the dead and wounded on both sides place the number at 75.

The attack was planned and executed by Gen. Sam Pryce, who is said to belong to a distinguished British family. He is said to have served with the Canadian contingent in the Boer war.

Still Fighting.

Laredo, Tex., May 10.—Passengers arriving yesterday say a serious fight has occurred between the federals and revolutionists in the outskirts of Saltillo. A federal lieutenant and 28 soldiers were killed. The insurrecto loss is not known. Another battle has occurred at Conception del Oro, about 80 miles from Saltillo. Information is that the federal garrison, believed to number fifty men, was annihilated.

Urges Use of Troops.

Washington, May 10.—The danger to american lives on the border as a result of the revolution in the Mexican republic, was again yesterday the subject of shr talk in the Senate. The killing of several citizens in El Paso, Texas, as the result of Monday's battle at Juarez was the immediately provocation. Senator Stone again urged the use of American troops to protect Americans, and changing his attitude toward the President's course practically charged him with playing a game of bluff in sending the troops to the front. He expressed apprehension lest the bullets of Monday be followed by shrapnel and canister.

Senators Bacon of Georgia, Works of California, and other Senators replied, commending the attitude of the President and advocating a conservative course. Senator Bacon contended for the right of the Mexican combatants to pursue their war, even though American lives should be incidentally endangered.

Representative W. Sulzer, chairman of the House committee on foreign affairs, issued a statement deprecating any talk of intervention.

Telegraphers Prosper.

Toronto, May 10.—An unparalleled year of progress and prosperity has been the lot of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, as shown in the reports given at yesterday's session.

In the last two years the organization has made and revised 113 schedules, and these agreements have given to their members over $2,000,000 increase of wages.

The purchase of 127 feet 6 inches square of land in the most important downtown district of St. Louis, cost $51,000, and already is worth $75,000 to $100,000. On this is to be erected an office building fifteen or sixteen storeys in height, and left for offices purposes, besides being headquarters for the order. It will cost about $600,000.

Theatre Burned.

Edinburgh, May 10.—Towards the close of a performance in the Empire Palace Theatre last night, a fire broke out on the stage. The fire curtain was promptly lowered and the house was quickly emptied of the audience, none of whom were injured. Some of the performers, however, had narrow escapes, and the theatre was completely destroyed.

It was this theatre at which King George promised to attend "a command" performance on the occasion of the royal visit in July.

FOREST RESERVES

Hon. Frank Oliver Outlines His Conservation Policy—Eastern Rockies Have Been Added—17 Millions Set Aside

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT

Ottawa, May 10.—Consideration of Hon. Frank Oliver's bill respecting forest reserves and parks was proceeded with in the Commons yesterday. The measure covers a complete revision of the present Forest Reserves Act, and its most important feature is that it authorises by statute the setting apart of the entire eastern slope of the Rocky Mountains as a forest reserve. Already there are various reservations within the area, but it is proposed to make the whole eastern slope one reserve. It is also provided that any portion of the area included in the reserve may be placed under additional restrictions, which would provide for it being set apart as a park or a pleasure resort. After the bill goes into effect the acreage of Dominion forest reserves will be 16,700,640 acres, as compared with 3,379,680 acres at the present time.

Dr. Schaffner introduced a short discussion as to the policy to be pursued in regard to the timber on the reserve by saying that he was suspicious of the proposal to destroy part of the timber by lumbering operations and to depend upon it being replaced by a system of reforestration.

Mr. Oliver said the forestry branch of the Department was studying the question in all its bearings, with the object of working out a system which would mean that when a crop of timber is harvested there would shortly after be another to harvest. He pointed out that in the west timber was particularly valuable and commissioners had to be taken of the force of public opinion. In reply to another question by Dr. Schaffner, Mr. Oliver said the policy would probably be to allow the cutting of such timber that had reached a certain stage of maturity. Major Herron urged the necessity of settlers in the vicinity of the reserves being permitted to use the dead timber for fuel and lumber. He also expressed the hope that a large section of the Rocky Mountain Park would be set aside as a game preserve. He asked if any further homestead entries would be allowed within the reserve.

Mr. Oliver replied in the negative. He said that no alienation of surface rights would be permitted, although it was possible that under certain conditions grazing rights might be granted without prejudice. As to these, however, no policy had been outlined.

It took the members over six hours to put the bill through the committee stage. The discussion for the most part was in connection with technical points, but the Opposition made a general complaint that the Minister would have too much power.

Mr. Middleboro moved that in the event of concessions being granted they should be advertised for a period and sold by auction.

The proposal was negatived on a vote of 39 to 17.

Late in the evening the steamship subsidies and subventions were piloted through by Sir Wilfrid Laurier and a number of supplementary estimates were passed.

The Quebec & Ontario Railway bill was talked out by E. A. Lancaster and Dr. Sproule. The objection to the measure is that while by the charter it is proposed to build a line through northern Quebec and northern Ontario, with feeders in New Ontario, there is no stipulation that the main line should be built. It is believed that the company intends to build the feeders only, and as these propose to tap the country through which the T. & O. operates, particularly the Porcupine district, it is agreed that it should have an Ontario charter. The opponents of the bill demand that there be a proviso for the construction of the main line first.

Five Thousand Fishermen Starving.

St. John's, Nfld., May 10.—Yesterday's information from Battle Harbor, Labrador, that the 5,000 inhabitants of the coast are starving was not wholly surprising to people here. It has been known for months that a food shortage threatened the hardy fisher folk, and repeated efforts have been made to carry help to them. Vessels laden with supplies of food and clothing endeavored repeatedly to pierce the ice fields which enclosed the Labrador coast, but were always forced back, some times badly damaged.

It is expected that the relief party organized here will be able soon to make its way to Battle Harbor, as the ice has broken up and is drifting south with the advancing spring.

Site For Legislature.

Winnipeg, May 10.—Five hundred thousand dollars in cash and the purchasing of a new site for a drillhall by the Provincial Government, with permission to occupy the present quarters until the completion of the new buildings, is the reply of the Government to a delegation which visited Ottawa in connection with securing the Fort Osborne Barracks as the site for the proposed new Provincial Legislature buildings. It was decided, however, that the Provincial Government could not accept the proposition, and a wire to this effect was sent to Ottawa.

Glasgow has offered the freedom of the city to Dominion Premiers visiting England for the Imperial Conference.

Four children of the Quarrie family, near Belwood, have died of scarlet fever, and Mr. Quarrie is seriously ill with the same disease.

The first strike of aviators was begun Monday. Sixteen airmen declined to fly unless the Brooklands Club conceded twenty-five per cent. of the gate money. The directors refused.

Officers of the Thomson liner Devona report that two young stowaways jumped overboard from the ship as it was passing Sorel inward-bound and both are thought to have been drowned.

It is expected that the expenses of the Canadian military contingent, which will go to the coronation of King George will be $185,000. The whole expenses of Canada's representatives will be $217,000.

A fatal accident occurred on the Canada Line steamer Willehad, which arrived at Quebec yesterday. An immense wave hit one of the passengers, a boy named Fred. Stickel, aged thirteen years, inflicting such injuries as to cause his death.

The Ottawa collector has sent his bills to all the Ministers of the crown and local members of the Parliament claiming taxes on their sessional indemnity. All refused to pay and the Board of Control yesterday decided not to press the claims.

With two sticks of dynamite placed in the holes in the basement of a South Vancouver school, four small boys, the eldest 13, are reported to have confessed that they were only waiting to secure a full minute cap before blowing up the whole building.

Blown Out to Sea.

Philadelphia, May 10.—Blown over the waters of Delaware Bay and heading rapidly for the Atlantic Ocean, two men and a woman, passenger in the basket of the balloon Philadelphia II., were rescued yesterday by the tug Mary J. Walker and towed up the Delaware River.

The occupants of the basket were Dr. Thomas E. Eldridge, president of the Philadelphia Aeronautical Recreation Society; John Hoggle, president of the Philadelphia Chemical Co., and Mrs. Ada Turner Kurts, all of this city. With the balloon still 50 feet in the air they were towed to Delaware City, where a landing was finally affected after the passengers had been drenched and nearly drowned when the basket sank beneath the waters of the bay.

Tijuana, Lower California, Mexico, May 10.—Three companies of independent rebels, comprising 280 men, are encamped in the buildings and streets of Tijuana. The town was taken by assault yesterday, the battle lasting from 5.30 until 6.40 o'clock. At that hour resistance ceased. Conservative estimates of the dead and wounded on both sides place the number at 75.

The attack was planned and executed by Gen. Sam Pryce, who is said to belong to a distinguished British family. He is said to have served with the Canadian contingent in the Boer war.

Still Fighting.

Laredo, Tex., May 10.—Passengers arriving yesterday say a serious fight has occurred between the federals and revolutionists in the outskirts of Saltillo. A federal lieutenant and 28 soldiers were killed. The insurrecto loss is not known. Another battle has occurred at Conception del Oro, about 80 miles from Saltillo. Information is that the federal garrison, believed to number fifty men, was annihilated.

Urges Use of Troops.

Washington, May 10.—The danger to American lives on the coast as a result of the revolution in the Mexican republic, was again yesterday the subject of short talk in the Senate. The killing of several citizens in El Paso, Texas, as the result of Monday's battle at Juarez was the immediately provocation. Senator Stone again urged the use of American troops to protect Americans, and changing his attitude toward the President's course practically charged him with playing a game of bluff in sending the troops to the front. He expressed apprehension lest the bullets of Monday be followed by shrapnel and carinister.

Senators Bacon of Georgia, Works of California, and other Senators replied, commending the attitude of the President and advocating a conservative course. Senator Bacon contended for the right of the Mexican combatants to pursue their war, even though American lives should be incidentally endangered.

Representative W. Sulzer, chairman of the House committee on foreign affairs, issued a statement deprecating any talk of intervention.

Telegraphers Prosper.

Toronto, May 10.—An unparalleled year of progress and prosperity has been the lot of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, as shown in the reports given at yesterday's session.

In the last two years the organization has made and revised 113 schedules, and these agreements have given to their members over $2,000,000 increase of wages.

The purchase of 127 feet 6 inches square of land in the most important downtown district of St. Louis cost $61,000, and already is worth $75,000 to $140,000. On this is to be erected an office building fifteen or sixteen storeys in height, and let for office purposes, besides being headquarters for the order. It will cost about $600,000.

Theatre Burned.

Edinburgh, May 10.—Towards the close of a performance in the Empire Palace Theatre last night, a fire broke out on the stage. The fire curtain was promptly lowered and the house was quickly emptied of the audience, none of whom were injured. Some of the performers, however, had narrow escapes, and the theatre was completely destroyed.

It was this theatre at which King George promised to attend "a command" performance on the occasion of the royal visit in July.

FOREST RESERVES

Hon. Frank Oliver Outlines His Conservation Policy—Eastern Rockies Have Been Added—17 Millions Set Aside.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT

Ottawa, May 10.—Consideration of Hon. Frank Oliver's bill respecting forest reserves and parks was proceeded with in the Commons yesterday. The measure covers a complete revision of the present Forest Reserves Act, and its most important feature is that it authorizes by statute the setting apart of the entire eastern slope of the Rocky Mountains as a forest reserve. Already there are various reservations within the area, but it is proposed to make the whole eastern slope one reserve. It is also provided that any portion of the area included in the reserve may be placed under additional restrictions, which would provide for it being set apart as a park or a pleasure resort. After the bill goes into effect the acreage of Dominion forest reserves will be 16,700,640 acres, as compared with 3,379,000 acres at the present time.

Dr. Schaffner introduced a short discussion as to the policy to be pursued in regard to the timber on the reserve by saying that he was suspicious of the proposal to destroy part of the timber by lumbering operations and to depend upon it being replaced by a system of reforestration.

Mr. Oliver said the forestry branch of the Department was studying the question in all its bearings, with the object of working out a system which would mean that when a crop of timber is harvested there would shortly after be another to harvest. He pointed out that in the west timber was particularly valuable and cognizance had to be taken of the force of public opinion. In reply to another question by Dr. Schaffner, Mr. Oliver said the policy would probably be to allow the cutting of such timber that had reached a certain stage of maturity. Major Herron urged the necessity of settlers in the vicinity of the reserves being permitted to use the dead timber for fuel and lumber. He also expressed the hope that a large section of the Rocky Mountain Park would be set aside as a game preserve. He asked if any further homestead entries would be allowed within the reserve.

Mr. Oliver replied in the negative. He said that no alienation of surface rights would be permitted, although it was possible that under certain conditions grazing rights might be granted without prejudice. As to these, however, no policy had been outlined.

It took the members over six hours to put the bill through the committee stage. The discussion for the most part was in connection with technical points, but the Opposition made a general complaint that the Minister would have too much power.

Mr. Middleboro moved that in the event of concessions being granted they should be advertised for a period and sold by auction.

The proposal was negatived on a vote of 39 to 17.

Late in the evening the steamship subsidies and subventions were piloted through by Sir Wilfrid Laurier and a number of supplementary estimates were passed.

The Quebec & Ontario Railway bill was talked out by E. A. Lancaster and Dr. Sproule. The objection to the measure is that while by the charter it is proposed to build a line through northern Quebec and northern Ontario, with feeders in New Ontario, there is no stipulation that the main line should be built. It is believed that the company intends to build the feeders only, and as these propose to tap the country through which the T. & O. operates, particularly the Porcupine district, it is agreed that it should have an Ontario charter. The opponents of the bill demand that there be a proviso for the construction of the main line first.

Five Thousand Fishermen Starving.

St. John's, Nfld., May 10.—Yesterday's information from Battle Harbor, Labrador, that the 5,000 inhabitants of the coast are starving was not wholly surprising to people here. It has been known for months that a food shortage threatened the hardy fisher folk, and repeated efforts have been made to carry help to them. Vessels laden with supplies of food and clothing endeavored repeatedly to pierce the ice fields which enclosed the Labrador coast, but were always forced back, some times badly damaged.

It is expected that the relief party organized here will be able soon to make its way to Battle Harbor, as the ice has broken up and is drifting south with the advancing spring.

Site For Legislature.

Winnipeg, May 10.—Five hundred thousand dollars in cash and the purchasing of a new site for a drillhall by the Provincial Government, with permission to occupy the present quarters until the completion of the new buildings, is the reply of the Government to a delegation which visited Ottawa in connection with securing the Fort Osborne Barracks as the site for the proposed new Provincial Legislature buildings. It was decided, however, that the Provincial Government could not accept the proposition, and a wire to this effect was sent to Ottawa.

Blown Out to Sea.

The occupants of the basket were Dr. Thomas E. Eldridge, president of the Philadelphia Aeronaut ic Recreation Society; John Moggie, president of the Philadelphia Chemical Co., and Mrs. Ada Turner Kurtz, all of this city. THE BLACK CROSS

By OLIVE M. BRIGGS

She took a coin out of her dress, and looked at it. "The gypsies' wages are gone," she said, "Only this left to pay for my roof and my bed?" She laughed again and glanced about her stealthily as if fearful of being seen, or tracked. Then she began to breathe quickly:

"Without weakness!" she said, "without hesitation, or mercy, by mine own hands if needs be, I have done it to another: I will do it again—to myself. Atone, atone—wipe out the stain! A life for a life! That is right." She swayed and caught one o fthe scenes for support. "That is—just! God, how my throat burns, and my head, it is dizzy—and my eyes have gone blind! Ah; it is passing—passing! Now I can see. I can walk!"

She clung to the scenery for another second, and then pushed it away and moved to the door, staggering a little like one who is drugged.

It was evening. The rain had ceased, and the moon rose full and pale with a halo about it. In the distance clouds were gathering and the waters under the mill were speckled with light.

Kaya sat by the window, leaning on the sill with her arms and gazing down at the wheel: "It is deep there" she said, "a moment of falling through the air—a splash, and it will be over. I am not—afraid."

She shuddered a little, and her eyes were fixed on the flashes of silver as if fascinated. She could not tear them away. "How black it is under the wheel!" she murmured. "If I fell on the spokes" Then she shuddered again.

"Perhaps I shall not die," she said—"Perhaps I shall live and be crippled, with my body broken. Oh, God—to live like that! I must—I must aim for the pool beyond, where the water lies deep and the moonlight freckles the — surface."

Then she dropped her head on her arms and the words came again: "I have tried my best, Velasco, but the heart has gone out of me. Don't be angry and call me a coward. I tried—but I am weak and I am afraid. My voice is gone, and there is so little for a woman to do. I tried everything, Velasco, but my strength—is—failing. If I could walk, I would go to you and say good-bye: but I don't know where you are. They say you have gone and I don't know where.

She leaned a little further forward on the sill, still hiding her eyes. "He won't know," she whispered under her breath. "He will never know. Velasco! Velasco—good-bye."

Her body lay across the sill now, and she opened her heavy lids and gazed downwards, half eagerly, half fearfully. The water was dark and the moon-light on the surface glittered. The wheel was below, huge and gaunt like a spectre: silent, with its spokes dipping into the pool.

CHAPTER XVI.

'Fraulein, Fraulein—open the door. There is a gentleman here who would speak with you!—Fraulein!"

The blows redoubled on the stout oak, growing louder and more persistent. "Fraulein! It is very strange, Herr Kapellmeister. I saw her go in with my own eyes, some two hours back, and she has not come out, for I was below in the mill with my pipe and my beer, sitting in the very doorway itself, and no flutter of petticoats passed me, or I should have heard."

The old miller rubbed his wizen cheeks and smoothed the wisps of hair on his chin, nervously as a young man does his moustache.

"Na—" said the Kapellmeister. "It is late and she may be asleep. I came after rehearsal and it must be nine, or past. Knock louder!"

The miller struck the oak again with his fist, calling out: and then they both listened. "There is no light through the key-hole," said the miller, peeping, "only the moon-rays which lie on the floor, and when I hark with my hand to my ear, I hear no sound but the water splashing."

The Kapellmeister paced the narrow corridor impatiently. "Donnerwetter!" he exclaimed. "The matter is important, or I shouldn't have come. I must have an answer to-night. Try the door, and if it is unlocked, open it and shout. You have a voice like a saw; it would raise the dead."

The miller put his hand to the latch and it yielded: Fraulein—!" The garret was in shadow, and across the floor lay the moon-beams glittering; the casement was open, and the geraniums were outlined dark against the sky, their colour dimmned.

"There is something in the window!" said the miller; and the door opened wider. "There is something black across the sill; it is lying over the geraniums and crushing them, and it looks like a woman!"

He took a step forward, staring: "It is the Fraulein, and she is—"

"Get out of the way, you fool!" cried the Kapellmeister, sharply, and he pushed the man back and strode forward: "The child has fainted! She lies here with her head on her arms, and her cheek is white as the moon itself."

He lifted her gently and put his arm under her shoulders, supporting her: "Get some Kirsch at once," he cried to the miller. "Stop gaping, man! She's not dead I tell you—her heart flutters and the pulse in her wrist is throbbing!" He slipped his hand in his pockes and tossed the miller a gulden. "Now run," he said, "run as if the devil were after you. The Rathskeller is only a square away! Brandy and food—food, do you hear?"

The old man caught the gulden greedily between his fingers, and examined it for a moment, weighing it. "I will go," he mumbled, "certainly I will go. Kirsch you say, and bread perhaps?"

"Be off, you fool!"

The Kapellmeister watched the door grimly as it shut behind the miller, and then he glanced about the garret. "Poor," he said. "Humph! A place for a beggar!" His eyes roved from the pallet in the corner to the pitcher and the basin, the clothes on the pegs, the cobwebs hanging, the geraniums crushed on the sill.

Then he lifted the girl's head and held it between his hands, looking down at her face, supporting her in his arms. The lashes lay heavy on her cheeks and the tendrils of hair, curly and golden, lay on her neck and her forehead. Her throat was bare; it was white and full. The Kapellmeister held her gently and a film came over his eyes as he gazed:

"How young she is!" he murmured "like some beautiful boy. Her chin is firm—there is will power there. Her brows are intelligent; her whole personality is one of feeling and temperament. It is a face in a thousand. What is her name, her history? How has she suffered? Why is she alone? There are lines of pain about the mouth—the eyes!"

He raised her suddenly in his arms and started to his feet; and as he did so, she opened her lids slowly and gazed at him. "Velasco—" she murmured.

Her voice was low and feeble, and the Kapellmeister bent his head lower: "What is it, child?" he said, "I can't hear you. In a moment you will have some brandy in your throat and that will rouse you. I will carry you now to that pallet over yonder, a poor place, no doubt, and hard as a board."

He strode across the floor and laid the girl gently on the bed, smoothing the pillow, and covering her lightly with the blanket. Kaya opened her eyes again, and put out her hands as if seeking someone.

"I was falling," she said, "Why did you bring me back?"

The Kapellmeister sat down by the edge of the bed and began to whistle softly; he whistled a theme once, and then he repeated it a semi-tone higher. "I suspected as much," he said. "Was it because you had no money?"

Kaya turned her face away.

"Were you starving? Tschut! You needn't answer. Your eyes show it. I might have seen for myself this morning, if I had not been in a temper with the chorus, and my mind absorbed in other matters. Be still now, here is the miller—the dotard!"

The Kapellmeister went over to the door, and took from the old man a small flask and a newspaper wrapping some rolls. "So," he said grimly. "Now go, and keep the rest of the gulden for yourself. No thanks! Go back to your doorway and finish your beer, do you hear me? I will look after the Fraulein; she is conscious now and I have business with her." He motioned the old man back from the door and closed it behind him; then he returned to the pallet. "I'm not much of a nurse," he said. "You will have to put up with some awkwardness, child; but there—raise your head a little, so—and lean on my shoulder! Now drink!"

Kaya swallowed a few drops of the brandy. "That is enough," she said faintly.

"No—drink!"

He held the glass to her lips and she obeyed him, for his hands were strong and his eyes compelled her. Then he broke the roll, and dipped it into the brandy, and fed her piece by piece. When she tried to resist him, he said "Eat, child—eat! Do as I tell you—eat!", and held it to her mouth until she yielded.

She thought of Velasco and how he had fed her in the studio, and the pulse in her wrist beat quicker. When she had finished the roll, he put down the glass and the newspaper, and she felt his eyes searching hers, keen and sharp, two daggers, as if they would pierce through her secret.

"Don't speak," he said, curtly. "Listen to me and answer my questions: Why were you discouraged? I told you this morning you would hear from me; why didn't you wait?"

The tears rose slowly into Kaya's eyes, and she hid her face in the pillow.

"You didn't believe me," said the Kapellmeister, "but you see I was better than my word—I have come myself. Why do you suppose I have come?"

She lay silent.

"If I hadn't come," he said grimly, "You would be lying in that pool yonder, by now, broken to pieces against the wheel; and I should have sought for my bird in vain." He saw how the pillow rose and fell with her breath, and how she listened.

"I wanted a bird for my Siegfried on Saturday," he went on, "Some one to sit far aloft in the flies and sing, as you sang this morning, high and pure, in the middle of the tone. Helmanoff has trained you well, child, you take the notes as if nature herself had been your teacher. Neumann is gone; she screeches like an owl! Elle a son conge!" He continued to look at the pillow and the gold curls spread across it.

"Will you come and be my bird, child? I suppose you can't act as yet; but up in the flies you will be hidden, and only your prototype will flutter across the stage on its wires. When I heard you this morning, I said to myself: 'Ha—my bird at last! Siegfried's bird!'"

He laughed softly and bent over and stroked the curls: "I came to-night because the Neumann went off in a huff. She made a scene at rehearsal, or rather I did. I told her to go and darn stockings for a living, and she seemed to resent it! He paused for a moment. "Saturday is only day after to-morrow—and we have no bird!"

The girl lay motionless, and the Kapellmeister went on stroking her curls. "If you sing, you will be paid you know!" he said, "and then you need not try to kill the poor bird for lack of a crumb. Why didn't you tell me this morning, little one?"

Kaya raised her head feebly and gazed at him: "My voice is gone!" she said, "My voice is—gone!"

"Bah!" said the Kapellmeister—"with a throat like that! It is only beginning to come. The Lehmann's voice was as yours in her youth, light at first and colorature; and it grew! Mein Gott, how it grew and deepened, and swelled, and soared!—Jet strong, child, and your voice will ripen like fruit in the sun."

He stooped over the pillow and looked into her eyes: "Come, child," he said, "Will you be my bird? Promise me! You won't think of that again—I can trust you? If I leave you now—"

Kaya put out her hands and clung to him suddenly, clasping his arm with her fingers. "I won't," she said. "I will live, and study, and do my best—and some day you think I will be a singer? Oh, tell me truly! That is just what Helmanoff said, but when I asked them to hear me—I went to so many, so many!—they were always engaged, or—" She caught her breath a little, stumbling over the words: "You think so—truly?"

"I think so truly," said the Kepellmeister. "You must come to see me at the Opera House to-morrow and rehearse your part, and I will teach you. You shall have your honorarium to-night in advance; and you must eat and grow strong."

"I will," said Kaya.

There was a new resolve in her tone, fresh hope, and she put her hand to her throat instinctively, as if to imprison the voice inside and keep it from escaping.

"Has the miller gone?" she asked

OVER PISA'S TOWER

The Remarkable Flight of a Daring Aviator

Visitors to the famous Leaning Tower of Pisa recently witnessed a sight that would have amazed the old Italian builders who erected it about 600 years ago. The occasion was the flight of a daring aviator in his aeroplane round the tower. The flying man, Signor Mario Cobianchi, flew from the Hippodrome of San Rossore, near Pisa, and with consummate skill, encirlled the Leaning Tower, and safely returned to his starting-point.

One cannot help thinking how the sight would have thrilled Galileo, the great scientist and astronomer, who made his famous tests with falling bodies from the upper galleries of this tower. Here he proved that globes of different weights reached the ground at the same moment. Probably in his wildest flights of imagination he never thought of a man flying in a machine through the air. Science has, indeed, progressed since his day.

Pisa's famous Leaning Tower was erected some time between 1175 and 1350, and is about 180 feet high. It is supposed that the builders intended it to be upright at first; but when part of it was built the foundations tilted, and the rest of the tower was so erected that it would remain in this oblique position. There seems no danger of its falling.

A staircase of 295 steps leads to a fine belfry of seven bells. The view from the top is magnificent, especially at sunset.

DESTRUCTION OF RATS

About 250,000 rats have been destroyed since the campaign against these pests commenced in Essex. Something like $5,000 per week has been saved in damage done by the rodents. The assumed rat population of England and Wales is about 38,000,000. It is estimated that each rat costs $1.85 per annum to keep.

Suffered for Years From Constipation and Sick Headache.

Headache seems habitual with many people; indeed, some are seldom, if ever, free from it, suffering continually, and wondering why they can get no relief. The most frequent of all are bilious or sick headaches, and are caused by some derangement of the stomach or bowels, or both.

Burdock Blood Bitters regulates the digestive and biliary organs, removes acidity of the stomach, improves digestion, regulates the constipated bowels, and promotes a perfect circulation of pure blood to all portions of the body.

Mrs. C. Meadows, Clarksburg, Ont., writes: "For years I was troubled with sick headache and dizziness, and was also constipated. I was advised to try Burdock Blood Bitters. I only took three bottles of the medicine, and now feel like a new person as I am completely cured. I can truthfully testify that B.B.B. is the best medicine I have ever used."

Burdock Blood Bitters, has, during the last 35 years, built up an unrivalled reputation as a cure for all troubles arising from a constipated condition of the bowels.

A RETROSPECT

A Short Story

Miss Jane Plex sat on the shady verandah of her wattle and daub house in East Central Africa, gazing over a rolling plain backed by a jagged range of indigo-coloured mountains. A young negro woman, clad from the neck to the ankles in a pretty sleeveless gown of crumpled white calico had placed a folding camp table by the side of Miss Plex's wicker chair, and presently brought out a little tea-tray with an enamelled iron tea pot, milk jug, sugar basin, and tea cup, a plate of ripe bananas, some white bread which had been baked by Miss Plex herself, and a little pat of whitish butter churned from the milk of the Mission cows: it was Miss Plex' last day at the Mission Station at Tangalani, where with three brief intervals of holiday in Scotland, she had spent fifteen years of her life. To-morrow she was to leave Tanagalani on her journey to the coast. She would be carried by negro porters in a hammock—perhaps later on when the roads were better, in a Sedan chair—all the way down to the Lake shore. Here she would embark on a steamer, which would take her across the lake and down a broad river to the Falls. Then would ensue another overland journey, under slightly more civilized conditions, perhaps in a Cape cart, to the Lower River, whence a better appointed stern wheel steamer would convey her for a week's voyage down stream till the river became a mighty estuary, and the roar of the surf was heard on the bar. From this point an ocean-going vessel would be her home for another month until she reached Plymouth. At Plymouth (she shivered deliciously as she sipped her cup of tea, with unusual appreciation of its goodness) her mother would meet her, and—oh, how delightful!—she would go to Torquay or Sidmouth or some such place in South Devon, for one month's inexpressible happiness while east winds were making the rest of Great Britain unbearable. During this month alone with her mother they would form their plans for the future. For the moment the sands and red cliffs and pretty villas of South Devon faded from her mental vision, and she saw again the landscape on which her eyes had rested for so many years. In its own way it was grandly beautiful, especially at this late hour of the afternoon, when the sun's rays had lost their withering blaze, and now cast a pleasant, mellow light over the landscape, turning the prairies and the forests on the rolling plain of the middle distance to a golden-yellow flecked with violet shadows, while the lofty range of distant mountains became a clear, cold, pale blue, with the outlines of their limbs and buttresses picked out in pale pink grey. Near at hand there was the the intense emerald green of the banana plantations. Magnificent canopies of dark velvety foliage poised on slender white trunks were probably Parinarium trees. Down by the stream which supplied abundant pure water to the Mission Station, there was a wealth of variegated foliage made tenderly beautiful by the slanting sunlight. It was a landscape which would increase in caressing loveliness for yet another hour before the sun sank below the horizon, and night blotted out its features. Its loveliness she had always admitted, and yet what terrors it masked! The house where she was enjoying this hour of unwonted ease stood relatively high above the plain—perhaps 3,000 feet above sea level. But ten miles away towards the indigo mountains the drop in altitude would mean excessive heat and paucity of vegetation; or there were swamps, she knew, breeding the deadliest of mosquitoes. Not two miles away from her house lions roamed at night and one of her Mission girls had been carried off by a leopard in broad daylight as she went into the river valley for a drink of water. Did he not remember fourteen years ago—only one year after her arrival—this broad plain being swept by hordes of the savage Angeja? Armed with short-bladed spears and assegais and clubs, wearing no clothing but a few wild cats' tails, they had swept across the plain exterminating its agricultural population of timid, tractable negroes, who were already disposed towards the Mission, and put no obstacle in the way of its work. Yet, undoubtedly, these same friends of the Mission carried on a brisk slave-trade with the Arabs. This trade was obnoxious to the energetic individual who represented the British Government in this Protectorate, and he was for suppressing it at all costs. Miss Plex remembered that the authorities of the Mission in private conference had deprecated this zeal. Of course, they could not condone the slave-trade; yet they feared that active warfare against the slave-traders would for a long time to come destroy the work of the Mission, and perhaps, truth to tell, they were not anxious to see a European Government station set up at the kraal of the principal Muloma chief with the influence of its Gallian officials cooling the zeal of the untutored savage for frequentation of the Mission schools.

Yet in her heart of hearts Miss Plex was a recusant and hated the landscape before her, hated the gaudy tropical garden below her verandah, hated Africa as heartily as did Caddy Jellyby. Yes, she had had many ideals when she took up mission work as a woman of twenty-seven. Most of those ideals had vanished now; some of them were buried in the grave of Nancy Borden, the woman she had loved more than any sister could be loved, and who lay buried in the Mission cemetery, the eucalyptus trees of which were just visible as she turned her eyes to the left. There was a tragedy connected with Nancy Borden's death on which she could scarcely let her thoughts dwell, though four years had elapsed since the poor girl had died of fever, pneumonia, and of a broken heart.

In 1887 Jane Plex lived with her mother on the outskirts of Glasgow; not only with her mother, but with an elder sister, three brothers, and a father, who was a clever but drunken engineer. His mother was a sweet-natured woman, the daughter of a minister, who had persisted in marrying a handsome young engineer in the merchant service. A family of six had been born in course of time, of whom Jane was the third. The father took to drink; or rather, drink which had been the weakness of his early manhood became the vice of his middle age. Her father's brother was steadier, had gone out to Australia, worked hard, made money, and never married. Jane had grown up a thoughtful girl of strong religious feeling, with a thin ascetic face and dark eyes. Under considerable difficulties she had acquired a good education. She had never had an offer of marriage, and never seemed likely to have one. Her constant efforts were employed to stand as buffer between the violent tempered father and her gentle, long-suffering mother. "Poor mother," she interrupted her thoughts to say to herself, "what joy you took in beautiful things, and how often your desire for them was repressed!" Jane's elder sister had died of consumption after a querulous existence of twenty-three years. Her three brothers one by one had gone out into the world. The eldest was now a captain in the merchant service, another had been killed in an accident to some machinery, and the third, Francis—the only one of them she had really loved—had absconded from the office where he was employed as a clerk with a miserable sum of money. Of his whereabouts they never knew anything in spite of repeated advertisements. When Jane was twenty-five her father died, leaving behind him only just enough money to purchase an annuity of £80 a year for her mother. Before his death the thoughts of Jane had often turned towards Africa and mission work. She was already qualified as a school teacher, and had received some training as a hospital nurse. In either direction she might have secured employment, but mission work and travel tempted her strongly. She therefore became a candidate for the Presbyterian Mission in Buloma, East Central Africa. After various tests she was accepted, and sent out on a salary of £75 a year, which in addition to the dwelling and food provided for her in Central Africa together with travelling expenses enabled her to maintain herself with a certain comfort. Her work as a teacher among the women and in the native hospital had been so successful that after even years her salary had been increased to £100 a year. These had been seven years of earnest, eager work, uninterrupted by a single absence. At the end of that time her health had broken down, and she had been enabled to pay six months' visit to Scotland. The years which followed her return to Buloma were perhaps not quite as happy or so successful. In her African isolation she read greedily, an dall the money she could spare from her dress, from the aid she sent her mother, and from what she gave away in local charitable purposes, she spent on the cheap editions of celebrated books. Her ideas as to the value of dogmas enlarged, her religious faith so widened that it became almost too comprehensive for the tenets taught by her particular Mission. Moreover, she saw too clearly both the good and the bad of mission life. Mr. Baillie Hamilton, who was a saint if any man was, who was good, all through and a real apostle of the people, had nevertheless died of blackwater fever after twelve years' devoted work in Central Africa. James Gordon, a preacher of eloquent mission sermons at home, and the writer of gushing tracts she knew—if few others did—to have been immoral in his private life, and thoroughly insincere. For five years she had had a perfect friendship with the dearest girl she had ever known. Nancy Borden. Nancy when she first arrived at the mission was a puzzle to the rather dour featured men and women. She had a lovely complexion, natural wavy hair of dark gold and violet eyes. "What on earth" had been the unconscious question each missionary had addressed to him—or herself. "What on earth had brought such a lovely creature out to Central Africa to a mission station?" Whatever it was Nancy never disclosed it. She set herself heart and soul to teach, wash, bake, brew, sew, garden and sing. Perhaps in all the circle of mission stations there was no one not envious of her beauty and her talents but Jane Plex. Between the two a perfect friendship had grown up. Then something terrible and not altogether explained had happened. There came overland from the distant coast of the Indian Ocean, a Government expedition, partly political, partly exploratory, and more or less scientific. At the head of this was an officer of Engineers. When the expedition reached the vicinity of the Mission Station it had been through great hardships and difficulties, and its leader was dangerously ill with fever. They had brought him up to the Mission Station. He was, it seems, known to Nancy Borden. He and she had met in England. When he arrived he was too far gone with fever to recognise anybody; but Nancy Borden insisted on taking complete charge of him, and nursed him back to health. Something Jane Plex never clearly knew what it was—had taken place between them in the past, and the something, whatever it was, had been the principal motive of Nancy's abrupt departure from England to join the Mission. A month's care and rest at the Mission Station set Major Lucas on his legs again. With protested thanks for the kindness and hospitality which had probably saved his life, he continued his journey northwards, only to die in the wreck of his expedition during the Arab uprising. A year later Nancy herself was dead, and there was more than a suspicion on Miss Plex's mind that though she might not have taken any drug, she had wilfully brought about her own end by deliberate rashness in the convalescence following an unusually bad attack of fever.

Jane Plex had at one time worked energetically at an English garden, but the locusts had come and destroyed the tender plants. She had trained negro girls to something like accomplished womanhood, only to discover that they were guilty of the grossest immorality, or else, that if they wished to remain pure, ineradicable native custom ((for all their Christianity) compelled them to go through degrading sexual rites. At another time she had been enthusiastic for the raising of the British flag; and then an over-rash and petulant official had come on the scene, knowing next to nothing of the native language, and ready for some trivial misunderstanding with the natives to turn the rifles of his negro police on an unarmed crowd. She had written home enthusiastically about the climate, which, it is true, was generally that of an English June; but in spite of the lovely climate she had herself survived with difficulty two attacks of blackwater fever, and one severe bout of pneumonia. She had had for two years a pet monkey with exquisite manners; it had been killed by a tiger-cat. She had reared an antelope fawn till it became adult and somewhat mischievous. This hd been shot in mistake for a wild one by one of the non-commissioned officers attached to Major Lucas's expedition. She had thrown herself heart and soul into the building of a brick church; but they had to give it a thatched roof, and one day lightning struck the timber and everything went up in flames, leaving only four blackened sides. Her boks had been eaten by white ants and defiled by cockroaches; her photographs had faded under the pitiless sunlight. Leaks in the thatch, rainy season damps, the withering winds of the dry season had ruined her simple furniture. Last of all the unquestioning faith and zeal of her young womanhood had faded. Attempts to expound the scriptures to the crude minds of her girl pupils or to the few chiefs who were flattered at being instructed by a white lady had, as in Colenso's case, raised doubts and difficulties in her own mind. Numbers of the natives round them became Christians in the fifteen years of her labours; some were good creatures; so also were a few of the Pagans and Mohammedans; others were hypocrites. Progress on the whole she could attest, but it seemed to be progress towards a somewhat base and material civilization. Human life round the circle of the Mission stations was as safe perhaps as in England; but mourals were bad, and many of their young people were leaving them heartlessly to flock for well paid work towards the mining centres further south. Jane Plex was a disenchanted woman, and a month earlier felt something like settled despair at the idea of spending the rest of her working life in tropical Africa. Then had come about a sudden change in her circumstances. The post, which as a rule only brought her one or two newspapers, a cheap book, and a brief letter from her mother, had conveyed to her a letter from her uncle's solicitors—the uncle who had gone to Australia. The letter was to the effect that her father's brother had died, and bequeathed the sum of

BROKEN-DOWN NERVES

HOPELESS CONDITION CURED BY "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

MILFORD HAVEN, ONT., Aug. 20th, 1910

"I was a complete invalid, three years ago, with Stomach Trouble, Constipation and Broken-down Nerves. I could not sleep at night and my Doctor did me very little good. I was almost helpless until I began to take "Fruit-a-tives" in small doses. I have taken about three dozen boxes in all and, Thank God, to-day I am well and strong—able to do my own work—and have a baby fifteen months old, and six children in all.

I would not be without "Fruit-a-tives" in the house, and I can highly recommend them to anyone suffering as I did."

MRS. D. GUINEY.

Nervousness is not a disease in itself, but is the result of some of the vital organs becoming diseased. In Mrs. Guiney's case, her nervous condition was caused by a very weak stomach and torpid liver. "Fruit-a-tives" strengthened her stomach—helped digestion—made the liver active—and cured Constipation. Then her nerves became well.

If your nerves are "all unstrung", take "Fruit-a-tives". 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, or trial size 25c. At all dealers, or from Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

Confined to His Home for Weeks.

"Heavy work, severe straining and evil habits in youth brought on Varicose Veins. When I worked hard the aching would become severe and I was often laid up for a week at a time. My family physician told me an operation was my only hope—but I dreaded it. I tried several specialists, but soon found out all they wanted was my money. I commenced to look upon all doctors as little better than rogues. One day my boss noticed me asleep—was off work so much and I told him my condition. He advised me to consult Drs. Kennedy & Kennedy, as he had taken treatment from them himself and knew they were square and truthful. I wrote them and got Their New Method Treatment. My progress was somewhat slow and during the first month's treatment I was somewhat discouraged. However, I continued treatment for three months longer and was rewarded with a complete cure. I could only earn $21 a week in a machine shop before treatment, now I am earning $31 and never loose a day. I wish all sufferers knew of your valuable treatment.

THE TERRORS OF THE TINY TADS

1—What is the matter with the Tads? Why do they climb the tree?
There's nothing after them, I guess. Let's look around and see.

2—Oh, look what's pushing at the trunk and shaking down a Tad!
It is a Potatogre and he wants some dinner bad!

3—The Tiny Tad is captured, but his comrades follow him;
They vow they will revenge his fate; their eyes grow moist and dim.

4—They find a rapid fire gun, and off they go with it.
"We'll shoot that wicked spud," they cry, "we'll make him have a fit."

5—But when they shoot that cannon off, some funny shot comes out!
"It looks like nougat," they declare; "that's what it is!" they shout.

6—Of course, the Tiny Tad is saved; the giant runs away.
"Bombarding guns are very fine!" you hear the Tinies say.

£30,000 to her mother with remainder to herself. With this communication had come her mother's letter full of radiant joy, imploring her to leave Africa at once and join her at Plymouth. They would not be relatively rich compared to their former poverty, and would seek happiness for the rest of their days. The tiny, ugly little house in the dreary suburb which had defaced lovely landscapes to the north of Glasgow would be given up. Some home should be made in the sweetest part of Devonshire. They would try with renewed energy to find what had become of poor, reckless Francis. They would endeavor by degrees to pay privately to the office the few hundreds with which he had absconded. They would make it possible for him to return and lead a new life with them in England. Perhaps even they would tour through Continental cities, enjoying to the full the pictures, the music, the landscapes, of which they had often heard and read, and which they had never been able hitherto to experience for themselves. So Jane had sent in her resignation to the head of the Mission. The Head was a wise and kindly man, one of the greatest of missionary pioneers in Africa. He neither sought to dissuade nor to congratulate Jane Plez. Perhaps she was grateful for his friendly curtness. So the next morning she would leave Tangalani for ever, leave her classes of more or less intelligent black girls, leaving the ringing services in the Mission church which at one time had made her eyes glow with enthusiasm, an dwhich now left her so cold and critical; leave the radiant beauty of the tropical plains and the azure grandeur of the inaccessible mountains; the trees that rose two hundred feet into the air and burst out in flaming scarlet blossom; the creepers that were like veils of gauzy mauve when in full flower; the glaucous-green Fan palms with tall grey columnar stems; the velvet foliage of the dark green Albizzias; the feathery date palms; the blush-pink mallows; the orange Thunbergias; and the dead white Crinum lilies. In exchange she would have ruddy, wholesome English faces; English cathedrals with their wealth of history; English churches where true piety is beautifully exhaled; English lanes that are reasonably gay and immeasurably sweet with the powdered hawthorn and the dog-rose; English meadows golden with buttercups, silver with daisies, emerald with grass which is to the coarse Graminae of Africa what a tender English maiden is to the full-blown negro matron. Of course she would still try to do good; but she must have a little sheer happiness first; she must be happy for a year first without thought of others, and then she would set aside a reasonable portion of her income for succouring the afflicted!

WATCHED FOR 35 YEARS

Mr. D. M. Waters, the popular druggist, Belleville, Ont., sold his first box of Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills a quarter of a century ago and since then has noted many remarkable cures, as this medicine grew in popularity. The latest cure coming to his attention is that of Mrs. Mark Ottrey, Bay Side, Ont., who was cured of wrinkles disappear, and the glow of health returns to the cheeks.

ALPINISTS' PERIL

Three Students Were Near to Death in Mont Blanc Storm

Three German-Swiss students of Geneva, who are good Alpinists, have had a terrible experience in the Mont Blanc range while attempting to ascend the Col d'Anterne (17,435 feet) from Chamonix.

The three climbers were without guides, and were overtaken by a heavy snowstorm. To preserve their lives they dug a hole in the snow and covered themselves. They were without food, and suffered intensely from the cold for 40 hours before they were found by Swiss friends, who left Geneva to search for them.

Eggs for Worshippers

There was a large congregation at the Church of St. Mary, Woolwoth, E.C., on Easter Sunday, when the ancient custom of giving a colored Easter egg to each worshipper was observed. The custom dates back to the fifteenth century, when Sir John Spencer left a bequest for the purpose. The eggs were distributed by the daughter of the rector, the Rev. J. M. Brooke, from flower baskets lined with moss.

Had Severe Pains In His Back.

Could Hardly Work.

Mr. Alfred E. Davis, Gorrie, Ont. write :—"For some years I suffered from severe pains in my back and could hardly work at all, and when I stooped down to pick up anything felt as if my back must break. I was advised to try Doan's Kidney Pills, and after taking two boxes I was entirely cured, and feel that I cannot speak too highly in their favor.

"This was nearly four years ago and I still remain cured."

Those who have never been troubled with kidney trouble do not know the suffering and misery which those afflicted undergo.

Weak, lame or aching back comes from the kidneys, and when the kidneys are out of order the whole system becomes deranged.

Doan's Kidney Pills are a specific for all kidney troubles.

They help the kidneys to flush off the acrid and poisonous impurities which have collected, thus clearing out the kidneys, bladder and urinary passages.

CURES OF CONSTIPATON

Mr. Andrews praises Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills.

Mr. George Andrews of Halifax, N.S., writes:

"For many years I have been troubled with chronic Constipation. This ailment never comes single-handed, and I have been a victim to the many diseases that constipation brings in its train. Medicine after medicine I have taken in order to find relief, but one and all left me in the same hopeless condition. It seemed that nothing would expel from me the one ailment that caused so much trouble, yet at last I read about them Indian Root Pills.

That was indeed a lucky day for me, for I was so impressed with the statements made that I determined to give them a fair trial.

They have regulated my stomach and bowels. I am cured of constipation, and I claim they have no equal as a medicine."

For over half a century Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills have been curing constipation and clogged, inactive kidneys, with all the ailments which result from them. They cleanse the whole system and purify the blood. Sold everywhere at 25c. a box. 9

ROYALTY UNFORTUNATE

In Italy—King and Queen Are in Numerous Accidents

Royalty seems to be unfortunate in Italy. The King is always in some kind of a scrape or another, mostly of his own seeking. Not long ago Queen Helena's automobile knocked some people down in the streets of Rome and severely injured them. Severe accidents of a like nature have happened before, and it must be said that the good Queen—she is really a good woman—is always the first to spring out of the car and help the injured, convey them to the hospital, visit them there, and attend to other matters associated with their homes. Now the Queen-Mother—Margherita—figures in a catastrophe. Scarcely had the Royal special train passed a station close to the Eternal City than the express from Turin was seen to be dashing along at full speed in the opposite direction. A sergeant in charge of a party of soldiers guarding the line at this spot, called to the men to get into places of safety, and all succeeded except two, who were struck by the train and killed.

KINGS' POPULAR NAMES

Sovereigns of England Have Had Few Names Given in Baptism

Christian names nowadays are legion; yet English Kings have been content with nine names for thirty-three individuals since the Conqueror seized the sovereignty of the Realm of England at Senlac.

This remarkable fact is further emphasized when we consider that two of these nine were only used once, leaving only seven names for the other thirty-one Kings from William I. to George V. These two were Stephen and John, and it is notorious that these two unsatisfactory Kings were the only English monarchs, except the two Jameses, who bore Biblical names! You will search that storehouse of Christian names, the Scriptures, in vain for George, William, Edward, Charles, Henry, and Richard—a set which completes the names which our English Kings during a period of 845 years have borne.

Henry bears the palm as the sobriquet of the greatest number of Kings—the eighth of that name being the much-wedded monarch whom Sir Herbert Tree has been putting on the stage with much success of late. Edward comes next, for our late beloved King was the seventh of the name. It is, moreover, probably the favorite name among our Kings, not only because it represents a warrior line, but because it is a Saxon name, like Alfred and Edgar.

Seeing that the Georges come from Hanover, it is a little remarkable that they should bear the name of the patron saint of England—"St. George for Merry England!" The name of our present King is the next on the list in point of numbers, he being the fifth to bear it.

These three names, then, account for no fewer than twenty of the thirty-three Kings who have reigned since William the Conqueror, and the number is completed by four Richards, four Williams, two Charleses, two Jameses, one Stephen, and one John. Certainly one John was quite enough. He is generally considered the worst King who ever sat on the English throne, in spite of the fact that Magna Charta, the foundation of our English liberties, was a product of his reign.

It is well known that the Great Queen Victoria, who herself bore a unique name for an English Sovereign, would have liked to have initiated a line of Alberts, as all her sons had that name given to them at the baptismal font; but, although Albert preceded Edward in the late King's name, he acted wisely in preferring this latter to the former, as he evidently thought it a greater honor to be the seventh Edward than the first Albert; and, if the eldest son of George V. succeeds in due form to his father's throne, he will undoubtedly take the title of Edward VIII., and thus the Edwards will "tie" with the Henrys.

WHEELWRIGHT TO SCULPTOR

Born at Camberwell Gate in 1843, Mr. George Tinworth, the famous sculptor, first began work in his father's workshop as a wheelwright. In the intervals of work he carved models out of spare pieces of wood. Then he heard of the Lambeth School of Art, at that time under the direction of Mr. Joseph Sparks. Tinworth and a comrade arrived on one of the evenings devoted to the painting class. Tinworth was putting his ear to the door when his comrade suddenly gave him a push and precipitated him into the arms of Mr. Sparkes, who happened to be coming out. To the astonished advocate of art education, the lad, too frightened to say anything, held up a little head of Garibaldi, copied from a newspaper print and fashioned out of sandstone with a hammer and a nail. "Come in and see what we're doing!" said Mr. Sparkes, and Tinworth's foot was soon on the first rung of the ladder.

DODGING MR. SPEAKER

Rich Instances of Some "Nasty Ones" Handled by M.P.'s

It is very difficult for a member of Parliament to be openly rude to another when under the eagle eye of Mr. Speaker.

When Mr. Tim Healy, many years ago, said to an interrupter, "If you interrupt me again I will break your neck!" he was promptly suspended for a fortnight. All the impolite adjectives such as untrue, dishonest, etc., have long been barred. And the Speaker may at any time add to the list of phrases on the black-list.

But though Mr. Speaker is always on the watch for offensive phrases, there is many a case in which a witty M.P. has managed to make himself extremely nasty without being called to order. Sometimes it is in the withdrawal, however, that he turns the dagger in the wound.

It was an Irish member who some years ago remarked of the Irish Secretary, who had just answered a question, "Even the right honorable gentleman can at times be persuaded to tell the House the truth!" There were loud shouts of "Order! Order!" and the Speaker rose. Crushed, the erring member humbly begged mercifully to withdraw the remark, and to state that there was not the slightest foundation for the statement! The Irish Secretary and Mr. Speaker still looked worried, however, as the business of the day went on.

It was Lord Cranbourne who once compared Mr. Gladstone's conduct on a certain matter to that of a pettifogging attorney. The Speaker, appealed to, declined to treat the phrase as out of order, but appealed to the good taste of the honorable member. The honorable member rose and remarked, "I wish, Mr. Speaker, to withdraw the phrase that the House considers offensive, and to apologize humbly—to the attorneys!"

One of the wittiest evasions of the Speaker's ruling was one by Sheridan, in the old Irish Parliament.

Sheridan was making accusations of corruption. There were shouts of "Name! Name!" The orator was really attacking the Secretary of the Treasury, a Mr. John Robinson, but before he could go on the Speaker ruled the name out of order.

"Mr. Speaker," Sheridan went on slowly, "you have ruled the mention of the name out of order, but I can assure the House that I could as easily give the name as I could say 'Jack Robinson'!" And a delighted House roared.

It was presence of mind that saved a hot-headed Kerry member some years ago from the Speaker's rebuke. He sprang up to answer an opponent. "The honorable member hon'ble so-and-so, and I will admit to the foo—" ("Order! Order!" "I will admit to the foo—". The speaker paused, and then went on, looking innocently puzzled, with "I will admit to the full the value of his observations and experience." The angry shouts died away, and delighted chuckles took their place.

It is impossible for an M.P. to call another M.P. an ass with impunity, unless he does it very neatly indeed. Some fifteen years ago a Nationalist member used a phrase that brought from another member a reminder that he was still a subject of the Queen.

The interrupted member happened to be a member of the Queen's household. The interrupted orator stopped.

"In loyalty to the Queen I yield to no one," he went on, without glancing at his critic, "or in respect for her household—her menservants and her maidservants, her ox or"—and here he turned slowly and examined the interrupter through a pair of pince-nez—"or her ass!"

And not even the Speaker could intervene to save that unfortunate interrupter.

PARLIAMENTS WITH ONE HOUSE

Those countries with a Parliament of only one House are Andorra (the little state in the Pyrenees), Bulgaria, Greece, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Nepal, Honduras, Afghanistan, San Domingo, Salvador, Persia, Morocco, Korea, and Abyssinia. Now that Japan has annexed Korea its constitution may be altered, but it consisted of only one chamber until the last few months.

A Richibucto School Teacher

Once a Dyspeptic—Now Well, Thanks to Father Morrissey's No. 11.

Richibucto, N. B., Nov. 17th 1909.
Father Morrissey Med. Co., Ltd.,

I have been teaching school for upwards of thirty years, during the last twenty-five of which I have suffered seriously with stomach trouble, indigestion and dyspepsia.

I have tried many remedies, and while I would get temporary relief from some of them, yet the old trouble would return, and with it the sufferings only known to the chronic dyspeptic.

Last year I had made up my mind to abandon my profession, feeling that in my condition I could neither do justice to myself or to the many pupils under my charge. A friend suggested to me that I try Father Morrissey's No. 11 Stomach Tablets; I did so, and have continued to use them with the result that my stomach trouble is cured—my indigestion and dyspepsia gone and I feel as well as I ever did.

I have, thanks to the Tablets, been able to continue in my profession, and feel that I am once more enjoying my work and am able to give justice to the fifty-four pupils under my care.

Yours Gratefully,
(Signed) MARY CHRYSTAL.

Are you one of the many thousands who, like Miss Chrystal, are prevented from doing their best work, or really enjoying life, by stomach trouble?

If you are you cannot do better than she did—take Father Morrissey's No. 11 Tablets.

Each No. 11 Tablet, when dissolved in the stomach, will digest 1¼ pounds of food—a good, hearty meal—so that no matter how weak your stomach may be No. 11 Tablets will enable you to get the nourishment out of your food and build up your strength, while the stomach, thus relieved, recovers its vigor.

"The Only Thing That Will Relieve Neuralgia."

The piercing pains of Neuralgia, which often follows a bad cold or La Grippe, are frequently almost unbearable and few medicines afford any relief to the sufferer.

"I am a rural mail carrier and have been a user of the Dr. Miles' medicines for years.

Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills can't be beaten. They are the only thing I have found that will relieve my neuralgia and I have tried most everything, besides medicine from the doctor. I am willing to tell anyone what the Anti-Pain Pills did for me."

CHARLES HILDERBRANDT,
Box 205 Woodville, Ohio

If you, like Mr. Hilderbrandt, "have tried most everything" in vain, why not do as he did, fight your aches and pains with Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills. Let the pills bear the brunt of the battle. No matter how stubborn the contest, they will come out victorious.

Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills stand on their record, which is a long list of cures extending back a generation.

Druggists everywhere sell them. If first package fails to benefit, your druggist will return your money.

GOT MILLIONS FOR THINKING

Some of the Really Great Inventors Who Have Got Their Dues

The popular idea of the inventor is a half-starved, out-of-elbows sort of individual, whose brain teems with brilliant ideas, but who has not got sufficient business sense to make even a living out of them.

But times change, and so do inventors, and within the past few months we have had two instances of men of humble birth becoming rich by the fruits of their clever brains.

The most recent case, and the one which has caused most interest in this country, is that of Mr. James Hodgkinson, who, in February last, received a cablegram announcing that his agent had disposed of the American rights of his new process for making salt for five million dollars. He will probably receive as much again for British rights, so here we have an inventor who, by dint of a brilliant idea carefully carried out, has obtained riches.

The Great Salee

The other great inventor of 1911 is George Gates, a Californian, who, like Mr. Hodgkinson, is no longer a young man. He fought in the American Civil War in the early 'sixties.

Years ago, seeing the vast waste of timber entailed by the cutting of millions of railway sleepers, and the very short time which these lasted, he set to work to devise a substitute. He found it in a form of concrete, a composition of substances which afford extraordinary resiliency and durability combined.

In January last he sold the patent rights to a great syndicate of eleven railway companies for the gigantic sum of three and a half millions sterling. He now has machines at work, each of which will turn out 3,500 of these sleepers per day. It is said that within a very few years wood will have become quite obsolete as a material for railway sleepers.

Speaking of inventions for producing salt at low cost, Mr. Hodgkinson had a predecessor, who made a very fair fortune out of a patent of this kind just two hundred and fifty years ago. His name was Edward Burt, and he was one of the Puritans who left this country and settled in America in the seventeenth century.

A patent was granted to him at Charlestown on May 27th, 1652, to make salt for ten years, and it is recorded that he made more than $2,000 a year—a very much larger income in those days than it is now.

Case upon case may be cited to prove that the inventor by no means always fails to get his deserts. Four years ago James Develin, a railway fireman, got an idea for making rotary engines reversible, and set to work to build a model.

One of those miserable thieves who are always trying to pick the brains of the inventor, got hold of him, and tried to drug him and steal his model. Feeling himself becoming sleepy, Develin had the presence of mind to smash his model to pieces and burn his plans before he became insensible.

Fortunes in Slot Machines

He carried the whole idea in his head for some months, then reconstructed a model, patented it, and presently sold it to a syndicate of steamship companies for a very comfortable little fortune indeed.

Penny-in-the-slot machines have made many a fortune. Mr. Mills, "the penny-in-the-slot king," said not long ago that three men, working together for an hour, evolved a fortune-telling machine. Fifty thousand were sold, and the profit was enormous.

The Howard patent for boiling sugar in vacuum was one of the finest ideas from a money-making point of view ever evolved. Howard's income from royalties, which were paid at the rate of one shilling a hundredweight ran, it is said, into many thousands of pounds for years.

On April 11th, 1904, a new metal was patented in Paris. The inventors, two Italian engineers, had spent years of time and all the money they possessed—about $20,000—in perfecting their discovery. The two of them ate dry bread for dinner on the night they succeeded. A few weeks later they sold their rights to the Corbel Electric Company of Belgium for $1,200,000.

The metal is composed of copper, iron, and infinitesimal portions of silver and phosphorous. It is stronger than steel, a better conductor than copper, and costs only a tenth as much as bronze.

A PRETTY ROMANCE

Comes From South of France—Stranger Well Treated Returns and Weds Cafe Keeper

There is material for romance in an incident which has occurred at Marseilles in a little cafe kept by a young woman noted for her beauty and goodness of heart.

The cafe is close to the harbor, and is frequented by sailors, who gave the name of "Mother Marie" to the landlady. The young woman had to deal with the roughest of sailor men, but her kindness to her customers was her best protection. When they had no money she fed them and kept them well supplied with tobacco. The sailors never imposed on her kindness, and always paid her when they received their wages.

One day a stranger of unkempt appearance entered the cafe. "Mother Marie" immediately saw to his requirements. After eating a hearty meal he was asked by the landlady whether he would smoke a cigar. His reply was that he had not any money for a cigar, nor even for the meal he had eaten. "Never mind," said the landlady, "have a cigar all the same."

A few weeks afterwards a well-dressed man appeared in the cafe and ordered food. "Mother Marie" glanced at him and recognised in him the stranger who had not paid for his entertainment.

The elegant gentleman told "Mother Marie" that he had heard of her kindness to rough sailor men, and had resolved to put her to the test. He found that she was all that the sailors had represented her to be, and he added that he had returned to the cafe in order to improve his acquaintance with her.

Then he disclosed his identity. He was a count and a large manufacturer, and asked "Mother Marie" to become his wife. The "sailors' friend" consented, and now the little cafe on the harbor has a new tenant.

GOLD BARS FROM CHINA

Secretly Shipped to England—Part of Hoard of Dowager Empress

There are persistent reports that gold bars to the value of $30,000,000, part of the late Chinese Dowager Empress hoard, have been shipped secretly to England from Peking.

The Hoi, the late Dowager Empress of China, had the reputation of being the richest woman in the world, but it is impossible to estimate the millions she possessed.

Her rapacity was amazing. Her favor had to be bought by all who who sought for it. Money, exquisite gems, houses, and beautiful silks and furs were humbly offered in vast amounts and haughtily accepted.

During the occupation of Peking by the allied troops in 1900 many of her treasures were lost in the looting that took place, but the amount successfully concealed must have been very great.

Short Skirts Forbidden.

Representative Arthur Tewksbury has introduced to the Massachusetts State Legislature a Bill which forbids the wearing of any skirt that does not come six inches below the knee-cap. The Bill does not exempt bathing dresses, nor does it fix any age limits. Another article in the Bill aims at low-necked dresses. In the future in Massachusetts the Bill would prohibit any woman appearing in public in a gown which does not have pronounced shoulder-straps.

GERMAN TRIBUTE TO THE BRITISH

Colonel von Estorff Makes Interesting Comparisons Between English and German Officers

Colonel von Estorff, commander of the troops in German South-West Africa, who is the highest German authority on colonial warfare, draws interesting comparisons between the British and German officer, both of whom he has seen under active-service conditions. Speaking of the British troops in the Boer War, Colonel von Estorff says: "The spirit and appearance of the troops at the front made an excellent impression. Every officer was certain of ultimate success. The officers were models of vigor and health. I must say, as regards external signs of health and strength they were superior to the average of our officers, and also superior to their men."

The writer attributed this to the healthier system of education and living in Great Britain, which compares favorably with the comfortable, easy existence of the educated classes in Germany. On the other hand, he finds more expression on the faces of German officers, and he rates their mental and military training higher.

Discussing the German colonial troops engaged in quelling the Herrero rising, Colonel von Estorff notes that despite many good qualities there was a want of self reliance and cleverness, and that the physical endurance of the men was often insufficient.

With regard to the officers, he says: "It is a mistake to believe that we are beyond improvement. The proportion of officers whom the chiefs gladly selected for independent command, and who possessed enough judgment, character and enterprise for such service, was far too small. Nevertheless, in faithfulness to duty and devotion they never failed."

SENT LETTERS BY AEROPLANE

The First Aerial Postal Service in the World in India—Mail Received in London

The mails which have reached England from India this week brought with them a postmark which should prove of special interest to collectors in years to come, as possessors of this postmark will have an official souvenir of what is claimed to be the first aerial post in the world. The postmark, which is stamped boldly in red, is encircled by the inscription: "First Aerial Post. U. P. Exhibition, Allahabad," and there is also a design of an aeroplane crossing the mountains, with the year 1911 denoted. The history of this new departure is interesting. Captain Windham wanted to demonstrate, by means of practical experiment, how the aeroplane could be used by a besieged town, to communicate with the outside world. He accordingly obtained the sanction of the Postmaster-General of the United Provinces and the Director-General of Post Offices in India to inaugurate an aerial post at the United Provinces Exhibition at Allahabad, and a die was specially cut, with which each letter sent by the aerial post is marked.

The Post Office, while agreeing to the experiment, would sanction no charge above the ordinary rate of postage, but a scheme was devised whereby the occasion was made to benefit the new buildings of the Oxford and Cambridge Hostel, Allahabad. Over the ordinary rate a fee of six annas was charged for each letter or postcard thus delivered. The letters and postcards were forwarded under separate cover to the Chaplain of the Holy Trinity Church, Allahabad, who undertook to deliver them to the postal authorities, and to hand over the extra fee to the hostel fund.

The letters were conveyed by aeroplane from the Exhibition to a receiving office in Allahabad, and were then distributed in the usual way, and it is therefore claimed that the letters are the first in the world to be dispatched by aeroplane from a Government Post Office in the ordinary course of business.

Letters posted in Calcutta on February 16, travelling by way of the Allahabad aerial post and Bombay, have just been received in London.

HEAVY DAMAGE IN AN EARLY MORNING FIRE

Old Bridge Works Totally Destroyed by Conflagration Which Wiped Out Houedry's Pea Mill, Twenty-five Boat Houses and Two Freight Cars, and Damaged Auditorium Roller Rink and Peterborobgh Machine Shop ---Three Automobiles Were Destroyed and Total Damage Will Be Over $30,000---Worst Fire City Has Had in Some Years.

Fire last night destroyed Houedry's grist mill, twenty-five boat houses, portion of the Wilson machine shop and roller rink and three automobiles, and for two hours threatened the whole block with destruction, and before it was brought under control had wrought damage to the extent of $30,000.

The fire was first observed by the engineer on the midnight express at about 12.10 a.m., who immediately notified the express agent at the C. P. R. station. They in turn sent in the alarm from Box 18. By the time the firemen arrived the building was a mass of flames and was doomed to destruction.

The sky was illuminated for miles around, and a crowd of spectators, some of them scantily clad, quickly gathered. They were easily handled by the police, who rendered efficient service.

Steps were at once taken by Chief Howard to save the adjacent buildings, viz., Kinnear's wholesale grocery, Peterborough Hardware Co's warehouse and the Canadian Canoe Company's buildings, which were in great danger owing to the intense heat. In addition to the above mentioned damage, two freight cars were destroyed on the C.P.R. siding, one of them containing thirty-four canoes.

The work of the firemen was rendered extremely dangerous by a number of live wires, which had broken away from the burned poles and were scattered over the ground, and it was found necessary to have the power turned off about 1 o'clock. About this time the strenuous efforts of the firemen were beginning to have the desired effect. The walls of the mill had by this time fallen in, and the firemen were concentrating their efforts towards saving the roller rink.

The following buildings and contents were destroyed: Houedry's mill and contents valued at $25,000, building owned by Miss Houedry, and contents of the pea mill, Houedry and Sons, insurance about $10,000. 25 boat houses and about 50 canoes, estimated value $1,500; three automobiles, worth altogether about $4,000, no insurance; two freight cars valued at $2,200, one of them containing 34 canoes valued at $1,000, and owned by Canadian Canoe Company; 350 feet hose valued at $1 per foot, and the damage to the roller rink will be in the neighbourhood of $500.

The three automobiles that were destroyed were owned by Mr. Hicks, Mr. G. L. Stevens and Mr. W. F. Doan.

Just what the actual damage is will not be definitely known until the underwriters make their adjustment.

The twenty-five boat houses along the bank of the river to the east and south of the burning building were quickly licked up by the blaze. The breeze from the northwest carried the flames across the first one and the fire swept along the whole row with almost incredible rapidity. So quickly was the spread of the flames that nothing could be saved in the boat-houses near to the fire, but a score of eager workers succeeded in breaking into those farther away and getting out the contents before the flames reached them. Canoes and skiffs were carried out and set adrift as quickly as possible and two launches owned by Messrs. Metheral and J. D. Craig were rescued. The boys worked heroically and after getting out as many boats as they could before being stopped by the fire, paddled after the drifting boats and they were hauled up out of danger on the Wolfe street wharf. As a result of their efforts some twenty-five boats were saved, and the owners this morning were decidedly grateful when they found their crafts intact. As it was, however, from sixty to seventy-five canoes and skiffs were destroyed and the loss will be heavy.

Mr. M. Lisle, of the Canadian Canoe Company, when seen by the Examiner this morning, was very appreciative of the work of the fire brigade in saving the company's plant which was in imminent danger, being within a few yards of the pea mill. "The brigade deserve credit for the manner in which they handled the situation," remarked Mr. Lisle. "They did great work in saving our building."

It was impossible to-day to get anything like a complete list of the owners of the boats and boat houses destroyed, but among the sufferers were Messrs. Bert and S. W. Rose, R. P. Watt, Teniece Guerin, the Eagle Lake Hunt Club, Messrs. D. Stone, Staunton and Lattimer, Metheral, J. D. Craig, V. W. Lancaster, Geo. Cairns, Chas Butcher, Fitzgerald and many others.

CROWD ESCAPED

Special to The Examiner.

EDINBURGH, MAY 10.—Lafayette, the world-famous character artist, and eight members of his troupe were burned to death in the destruction of the Empire Music Hall last night. A fire, discovered just as the performance was about to begin, and actors and actresses heroically sacrificed their lives for the audience by remaining on the stage while the fire raged behind them. They kept the audience from getitng panicky until the curtain shut them off and the crowded house escaped without a casualty, but nine performers lost their lives.

Later investigations indicate that Lafayette and his heroic company might have escaped but for a lion connected with the show, which, infuriated by the flames, blocked their escape to the street. The orchestra also heroically stuck to their posts, and two of the members lost their lives.

Manufacturers, Merchants And Professional Men To Interview The Council

Will Take up the Question of the Advisability of Retaining Mr. Duggan as Industrial Commissioner----Speakers Express Confidence in the Commissioner's Ability and in the Work He Has Done----Committee Appointed.

We, the manufacturers, members of the Retail Merchants' Association, and members of professions of the City of Peterborough, having taken into consideration the action of the City Council, in respect to the office of the Industrial Commissioner, and after considering the importance of the office and the services performed during the past year by the present incumbent, deem it advisable that our views concerning these matters be presented to the City Council, and therefore be it resolved that we are strongly of the opinion that it is in the best interests of the City of Peterborough that the office of the Industrial Commissioner be continued and that the services of the present officer be retained for at least another year, and be it further resolved that a committee consisting of the following names: W. H. Denham, Andrew McFarlane, Thomas Barrie, J. J. Turner, Jr., D. O'Connell, Ryerson Ritchie, E. G. Patterson, E. A. Peck, T. F. Matthews, Dr. Greer, Walter Oke, J. H. Connal, G. A. Gillespie, V. Eastwood, G. C. Wainwright, B. F. Ackerman, W. E. Conway, R. G. Kingdon, James English, A. W. Cressman, L. A. Turner, Jas Kendry, William Harthstone, G. Walter Green, A. E. Coulthard, Mr. Atwood, J. Beyette and James Hamilton be appointed to interview the members of the City Council for the purpose of discussing the affairs of the Industrial Commissioner's office generally, and to represent to that body the wishes of this meeting and to urge upon the members thereof the advisability of retaining the services of the present commissioner in the office for at least another year, and be it further resolved that Mr. W. H. Denham be appointed to the position of Convener of the Committee and that he be requested to arrange with the City Council a meeting between representatives of that body, the members of the above-named committee and such other representative citizens as the City Council may think proper, and whereat the views of this meeting may be presented and efforts made to have the present officer retained in office and harmonious relationship established between the members of the City Council and the office of the Industrial Commissioner.

The above resolution was passed at a meeting in the Council chamber last night, at which some forty people, representative of the manufacturers, retail merchants and professions of the city were present. The motion followed a discussion of over an hour, in which a large number of speakers took part, and which was remarkable for the unanimity of feeling expressed, that the office of Industrial Commissioner should be continued and that Mr. Duggan, the present commissioner, should be retained for at least another year. The different speakers who included Messrs. D. O'Connell, W. H. Denham, E. A. Peck, E. L. Goodwill, Andrew McFarlane, G. J. Turner, Jr., A. E. Coulthard, C. W. Hatton, W. H. Munro, Ryerson Ritchie, S. T. Medd, E. C. Patterson, Thos. Barrie, president of the Retail Merchants' Association, and others emphatically endorsed the work done by Mr. Duggan during the year he has held office and expressed their belief in the advisability of his being continued in office.

Mr. O'Connell on motion took the chair and briefly explained the object of the meeting. He related the circumstances under which the office of Industrial Commissioner was established and Mr. Duggan engaged. He pointed out that the Commissioner had been placed under the control of the Board of Trade and had been directed by a committee from that body during his term of office. This committee was absolutely confident that no man could have been procured who could have done the work any better than Mr. Duggan. The speaker referred to the immense amount of correspondence that Mr. Duggan had had to attend to during the year and said that the Board of Trade committee was unanimous in the opinion that his operations would be productive of very beneficial results. Mr. O'Connell remarked that Mr. Duggan's efforts had been responsible for the Hydro-Electric Commission coming into the question of the power possibilities of Peterborough.

Mr. J. J. Turner, Jr., said that he wished to make an explanation before the discussion became general. He stated that he had been chairman of the City Council's Power committee and, not finding the time he thought sufficient to devote to this all-important subject, he had solicited the support of Mr. Duggan, asking that gentleman to take the matter up, and he therefore felt that if there was anyone to blame, that he himself should take part of the responsibility. As for Mr. Duggan, the speaker thought he was a hard working, painstaking, efficient official of the city. He had done a lot of missionary work during his first year, which would have its effect this year or next. If, at the end of three or four years, no results were forthcoming, it would be then fair to dismiss the commissioner.

Mr. W. H. Denham, of the Quaker Oats Company said that he did not think that Mr. Duggan had been given a fair deal. He had been interested in Mr. Duggan since that gentleman took office, and knew that he had done a great deal of hard work. If he had not obtained many industries during the first year it was not his fault. He pointed out that the three things asked of Mr. Duggan when he commenced his duties were to look after industries, to assist in the betterment of Peterborough in every sense of the word and to look after power. Mr. Denham remarked that the idea seemed to have gotten among the Council that they were a self-constituted body to direct the affairs of the city on their own ideas and not follow the wishes of the citizens. He said that they had ignored the Board of Trade, the Retail Merchants and a representative body of citizens, and from reading the remarks of some of the aldermen as published, one would come to the conclusion that they were absolutely ignorant of the work done by the Commissioner. He thought that if the Council had gone into the matter properly they would not have reached the conclusion they did.

Assuming that Mr. Duggan had asked to have Mr. Beck's report read at the meeting of citizens and this was only a supposition, it was merely a mistake on the part of the Commissioner, and everyone is liable to make a mistake. $4500 had been spent in educating Mr. Duggan for the position. "Are we going to throw that money away?" asked the speaker. "Are we going to put Peterborough back a year and start all over again?"

Mr. Thos. Barrie, the president of the Retail Merchants' Association said that that body had had a meeting at which a resolution was passed and was forwarded to the Council, asking that the office should be continued, and that Mr. Duggan be re-engaged as Commissioner. The Merchants' Association still stood by that resolution, and would like the Council to reconsider the matter.

Mr. E. G. Patterson endorsed what had been said by other speakers concerning Mr. Duggan. He believed the money contributed to the office had been well spent and should be continued. To get one industry a year at an expense of $4,000 was money well expended. He thought the Council were making a great mistake in deciding not to engage Mr. Duggan again.

Mr. Ryerson Ritchie remarked that he had watched with intense interest the work done by Mr. Duggan since coming into office. No man without the training for the position could have done better or more excellent work. The point of employment in his opinion should rest entirely on merit and to dismiss Mr. Duggan after he had received the necessary training, it seemed to him would reflect upon the spirit of fair play of the city. If it were not possible to influence the appointment on business lines, the city was rather in a bad situation. The matter of perogative was a mere bit of nonsense; results were the thing, and the affairs of the city should be carried out in as business-like way as the operations of any business company could be. Meritorious work should mean continuity of office, and the man who worked faithfully should receive faithful treatment from the city that employed him. It was a great pity, after one short year, that this matter should come before the people in the manner it did.

Mr. A. E. Coulthard remarked that results could not be expected in one year. If Mr. Duggan secured the report of the Power Commission, with the results that should accrue from that, the sum spent was very low.

Mr E. A. Peck remarked that the meeting seemed to be all agreed that if Peterborough wanted industries she would have to reach out and get them, and that to do this it required time and money. It was necessary to have a man to devote his whole time to this; no committee of business men with their own business to look after could possibly do the work. All were agreed that Mr. Duggan, having undertaken the work for the year, was certainly the very best man that could be secured to take the office for another year. It was possible for the Board of Trade or citizens to subscribe the necessary $4,000 to continue the office for another year. However, it

INSURRECTOS HAVE THE UPPER HAND

Special to The Examiner

WASHINTGON, MAY 10.—Advices from Mexico to-day tell of a reverse of the Federal troops in Mexico all along the line to-day, making the situation there all the more serious and rendering any peace negotiations of no avail. It is admitted that Diaz's troops suffered most in the two days' battle around Juarez, and the latest despatches this afternoon say the Federal General, Navarro, has evacuated the place, despite his boasts of power early this morning. Agua Prieta has fallen to the rebels. There were hurried councils in President Taft's office at noon to-day and it is believed he is being again pressed to have the United States troops interfere at once.

Resume Fighting.

EL PASO, MAY 10.—The battel of Guares was resumed this morning. Apparently, the Federal troops garrisoning the town have been driven to the shelter of the Customs House. Fierce fighting is taking place and many wounded have been brought in here to-day.

SUB-POLAR CULTURE.

The soul of the Canadian West is not all absorbed in railways, wheat, flax, corner lots, and quarter sections. It may be still wild and woolly but it is to be noted that Edmonton won the Earl Grey dramatic trophy in competion with that century-old self-styled centre of culture—Toronto. The West contains elements of culture and progressive ideas national and aesthetic, and expressions of these qualities that might be proud possessions of the East. Peterborough could hold up its head if it had a tenth of the splendid street pavement of Regina, known only a few years ago as "Pile o' Bones." Medicine Hat, with the handicap of its tepee-suggesting name, and with a population of seven or eight thousand, has a hundred autos to Peterborough's twenty-five, or so. Older Canada has need to look to its laurels in the matter of culture, as well as material progress. It is a pleasure to note the triumph of Edmonton, in competition with Toronto—with even a team from a "school of expression." Toronto was a city of 200,000, with schools of art, conservatories of music, colleges, and all the appliances and appurtences of culture when Edmonton was only a buffalo-wallow. Verily, "the world do move," especially in Canada.

THE LATE ARCHBISHOP McEVAY.

The intelligence of the death of Most Reverend Archbishop McEvay, will come with sad appeal to the sympathy and regrets of the very wide circle of friends and admirers, he formed when he was a resident ecclesiastic and citizen of Peterborough. Though in comparison, he occupied a humble position here, in his connection with St. Peter's Cathedral, yet in his faithful and efficient discharge of his office, he showed the qualities of piety, zeal, devotion to duty, and consecrated common sense and administrative ability, that have marked him for steady and rapid promotion in ecclesiastical responsibility from the day of his ordination to his elevation to the highest church dignity in Ontario, in the gift of His Holiness. In whatever position, humble or high, the late prelate was placed, he did his duty, faithfully, intelligently and effectively, as we in Peterborough can testify, as many other places bear witness to, and as was the case in Toronto, where he leaves many enduring monuments to his zeal for religion and the promotion of the beneficent institutions and enterprises, that are its handmaidens. While the death of such an eminent prelate is a natural subject of lamentation, in his own case, it only marks translation from the highest responsibilities of the church, militant to the bosom of the church triumphant.

FORGING AHEAD.

Neither the Government, nor railway magnates seem to have any fear that reciprocity will lead to Canadian absorption, swamp its energies, or retard its progress. Canada is prosperous now; we have an abounding revenue and are in a position to entertain a forward and progressive policy. Situated, as Canada is, geographically, railways and canals are the prime conditions of progress. The Canadian Pacific has started the West upon a marvellous career of development, phenomenal even on this continent, where the progress of the United States, last century, was one of the modern wonders of civilization. Then came the need for a second transcontinental railway, and the Grand Trunk Pacific came into being. Now, there is need and place for another through line from coast to coast. The action of the Government in guaranteeing the bonds of the Canadian Northern for a thousand mile stretch from Port Arthur to the seaboard is in line with a policy of progress that will be another factor in the development of the resources, national and commercial, of the country. The builders of this line have shown themselves worthy of assistance and encouragement. They now have their line completed from Port Arthur to the Rockies, and the Government of British Columbia is helping the line through to the coast. We soon shall have three cross-continent Canadian lines in operation; and it seems there will be as much work and traffic for three as there was for one in the infancy of development of the Canadian West. Then, we are to have the usefulness of the Intercolonial extended, and the development of the great natural resources of the Maratime Provinces promoted by the acquirement of branch lines as feeders to the Government line, previously handicapped in this regard. As another outlet for the rapidly increasing yield of wheat, the Government will undertake the construction of the Hudson Bay Railway, thus bringing Canada's mare clausum into commercial use, both as a grain route, and in the way of development of its opulent fisheries and in the development of mineral and other resources in its vicinity. Related to this object the Provincial railway, the Temiscaming and Northern, is nosing its way to Hudson Bay and the engineers of the Government are already spying out the land—and water—in search of an Ontario harbour on Hudson Bay.

We are also justified in including the enlargement of the Welland Canal, the beginning of the Georgian Bay Canal, and the completion of the Trent Canal in the ambitious Government programme, that will put capital and labour into operation for the next ten years, and extend and improve our transportation capacity, and all that it implies.

Canada has done more, in proportion to its population, in providing the machinery of development, than any other country. There is much yet to do, and though the task is great, our increasing capacity for enterprise and the accompanying development that, in a way, provides the means of progressive enterprise, leads us to look forward to a growth greater than the splendid growth of the past. We are running the race of progress in heats, but one follows the other so closely that each shows a faster pace than the last, which has merely warmed us up for our work. We can repeat what we have done; and in larger measure, as our opportunity and resources proportionately increase.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Neither the Government nor Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann appear to be frightened at the theory of the opponents of reciprocity, that that measure will divert railway traffic north and south and destroy east and west Canadian traffic. Neither do purchasers of C.P.R. stock think that "Jim Hill's" lines are going to swallow up "the greatest line on earth," with its stock at 236, as Aaron's rod swallowed up the other rods.

The health officer of Toronto, says the Woodstock Sentinel-Review, announces that it is his intention to treat every breding place of flies as a public nuisance. The garbage heap is a favourable breeding place. A favourite feeding place is the front of the grocery store, where articles intended for human food are exposed. This exposure constitutes, perhaps, even a more dangerous nuisance, than the garbage heap. The articles so exposed become not only a favourite feeding ground for flies, but a prolific breeding ground for disease germs of all kinds.

IN THE GLORY OF THE MORNING

(Weekly Sun)

The morning sun touches the field that yesterday was bare and brown, and ten thousand dew drops, supported on stems of vivid green, shimmer with a brilliance unequalled by the most costly jewels of India. Nature stretches an unseen hand over the top of the giant elm in the low lying pasture, and the stark barrenness of winter is covered with an emerald wreath. From the dark recesses of the spruce a thousand songsters come forth to join in the song of the morning. A flash of black and gold tells of the return of the oriole to the nesting place in the apple orchard. On cherry, and plum, and peach, and pear, uncounted buds are filling with the new life that presently will burst forth in overwhelming billows of pink and white. Here and there dun colours still remain; but even here, in the mellow soil that seems to melt under one's feet, there is promise of return from death unto life. Presently thin yellow threads will form in parts of this rich seed-bed; sturdy shoots will spring up in other parts, and the annual miracle of the corn and the mangold will again be wrought out before our eyes. The lake, seen in the distance from the hill-top, no longer appears cold and repellant, but in accents melodious, answers to the call of the south wind in the top of the swaying pine. On a thousand hills cattle, freed form the confinement of winter, revel in warmth and freedom.

All things, animate and inanimate, rejoice together. For why? The darkness of Nature's Night has passed; the glory of the New Day has dawned upon the world.

Canada Aids Completing Link Of Third Transcontinental Railway

Government Guarantees Bonds to Cover Thousand Mile Gap Between Port Arthur and Atlantic

(Globe Special.)

Ottawa, May 8.—Another great forward step in the progressive policy of the Government in the development of Canadian transportation and in "rolling back the map of the Dominion" is announced to-night. Hon. George P. Graham has given notice of a resolution providing for a bond guarantee for the Can adian Northern Railway that will insure the speedy construction of the backbone of the company's transcontinental line. The Government will ask Parliament to guarantee the bonds of the company to the extent of $35,000 per mile for the whole distance from Port Arthur to Montreal via Sudbury and the Ottawa Valley. The interest on the guaranteed securities is placed at 3 1-2 per cent. per annum, payable half-yearly, with the principal payable fifty years after the first issue. From Montreal the company will have access to the seaboard for its through freight by means of an interchange of traffic at Montreal with the Intercolonial Railway. From Port Arthur to the Rockies the line is already completed, and is now heading for its Pacific coast terminus near Vancouver.

The Country's Security.

It is confidently expected that the aid to be given by the Dominion will go no further than the guarantee of bonds, and that the company will be able to meet all the interest indebtedness out of earnings from the start. Thus a third great transcontinental line is assured to the people of Canada practically without any further cost to the country. As security for the guarantee of the bond issue the country will have a first mortgage on the road itself, as well as on the line from Hawkesbury through Ottawa and Toronto to the Niagara River. In the event of the extremely improbable failure of the company to meet its bond indebtedness the Government would find itself in practical possession of nearly 1,400 miles of completed railway at the cost of only $35,000 per mile, and this railway would be a natural and complete extension of the Intercolonial to the head of the great lakes.

Of Incalculable Advantage.

The new line will, with the completion of the Grand Trunk Pacific, give practically all eastern Ontario points three competing lines to the West, and to the West it will give three competing lines to Canadian seaports. It will open up an immense stretch of rich agricultural and mineral country in northern Ontario, and the Ottawa Valley. It will run through the clay belt of the Ontario hinterland at distances varying from 20 to 50 miles from the line of the National Transcontinental Railway, which skirts the northern part of the clay belt. In addition the company proposes to construct a line from Georgian Bay north to the main line, tapping a country now unserved by railways.

The company has now a through line from Ottawa to Quebec. It is proposed to begin at once the construction of a line branching off from this at Hawkesbury to Montreal. From Ottawa the road will run on the south side of the Ottawa River to the Chats, about thirty miles west of Ottawa. From there it will cross the Ottawa River and run along the north shore to Portage du Fort, where it will again cross the Ottawa, and proceed thence nearly in a straight line to Sudbury, and thence along the route now surveyed to Port Arthur.

Traffic to Canadian Ports.

A feature of the agreement which will be made with the company is that the guaranteeing of the bonds is dependent on the carrying of traffic, unless specifically routed otherwise by the shipper, through to Canadian ports. It may be noted in this connection that the Canadian Northern, unlike its competitors, the C. P. R. and the G. T. R., has no American terminus, and will therefore, be naturally desirious of encouraging its export business via Montreal, Quebec, Halifax or St. John. The decision of the far-sighted capitalists and railway builders at the head of the Canadian Northern Railway to go promptly ahead with the completion of their transcontinental line on Canadian soil is in itself an illuminative commentary on the pessimism of the opponents of reciprocity, who argue that the agreement with the United States means the diversion of traffic north and South.

Character of the Line.

There is a general clause specifying the character of the line. Rails are to be not less than 80 pounds per yard, the maximum curvature shall not be of less radius than 716 feet, the maximum eastbound grade shall not exceed five-tenths of one per cent., and the maximum westbound grade shall not exceed six-tenths of one per cent., unless specially provided for in exceptional places with the consent of the Governor in Council. In the event of the Government paying out of the consolidated revenue fund all or any portion of the first four half-yearly payments of interest on the guaranteed securities falling due after the opening for traffic of the whole line so aided, the company shall, pending the repayment of this interest, pay to the Government half-yearly interest on the money so advanced at the rate of three and one-half per cent. per annum.

Interchange Traffic With I. C. R.

The final provision is that the company shall enter into an agreement with the Government to establish suitable terminals at Montreal, and agree, on the request of the Government, to enter into arrangements with the Intercolonial Railway for the interchange of traffic at Montreal, for such a period and on such terms as may be agreed upon between the parties, and should the parties fail to agree the terms shall be fixed by the Board of Railway Commissioners.

THE TWO-FACED POLICY.

(The Globe)

The two-faced policy of the Conservative party in regard to the tariff is going on tour. Mr. Borden, it is announced, will spend the greater part of the Parliamentary recess in the West, expounding the party policy. No intimation is given as to the particular view to be presented in regard to the all-important tariff issue, but we may be sure that the stiff protectionist doctrine of The Mail and Empire and The News will at first find no place in the western programme. The westerners will be asked to turn out the Government, not because it has proved false to protection, but because the reductions made in the duties on agricultural implements and supplies have been less important than the West demanded.

It seems almost incredible that in these days of rapid communication it is still possible for a Canadian political party to take diametrically opposite stands in different provinces in rexard to the chief plank of its platform, asking for support form the man in the East who wants the tariff let alone or increased, and from the western elector who insists that the tariff must be reduced. Yet this is precisely what Mr. Borden and his colleagues hope to be able to do. The chief western Tory papers no longer publish articles as violent as that in the Winnipeg Telegram, which demanded that the Conservatives go at the tariff "with an axe," but there has been no change of attitude. It is just as true to-day as it was last September when Mr. J. S. Willison wrote his notable article for the enlightenment of eastern Tories as to the ideals of the western progressives, that the Conservatives of the West are almost to a man tariff reductionists. There is no change in the West, and there will be none in time, at any rate, to affect the result of the next general election.

But while the West stands where it did, there has been a change of a most far-reaching nature since September in the relations between the Conservative leaders and the extreme protectionist wing of the party here in the East. Last fall the relations between the beneficiaries of protection and the party were strained to the breaking point. The News had declared that "the interests" were on the side of the Government, and there was, therefore, no longer any reason for the defence by Conservatives of the duties imposed for their benefit. This threat was apparently regarded as a serious one, and we have no doubt at all that it was. Mr. Borden, Mr. Willison, and the other policy-makers of the party were quite in the mood to hang Taman on Haman's gallows. The feud did not come to the open, however, and when the reciprocity agreement was announced it was found that an alliance between extreme protection and the Tory party was the only possible way of fighting the policy of free trade in natural products with any hope of success. That alliance to-day is of the closest possible sort. Vast sums have been raised for the publication of anti-reciprocity literature, most of which is essentially also high protectionist literature, for Mr. Watson Griffin believes in high protection, and says so without reserve. Mr. Borden must have given the most binding pledges against tariff reduction; or someone else did so for him, before the elaborate machinery of the protectionist campaign was set going on his behalf.

How can he live up to the two-faced policy when he meets the westerners face to face next month? He will be forced to declare in the most definite terms his policy as to further reductions of the duties on farm implements, machinery, waggons and agricultural supplies generally. If he were to state that the reductions made by the Government are insufficient he would at once lose the confidence of the men who have been supplying the funds for the operation of the high protectionist campaign machinery. Mr. Borden will hedge if he can, but he will not take that risk. The two-faced campaign will be impossible after a few western hecklers have done their work. The general election of 1912 will find Mr. Borden once more calling for "adequate" protection, and the men who want a tariff as high as Haman's gallows supplying the Tory campaign funds.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

NO MAME, if the man of the house hadn't been so mean that it fairly hurt him to see me eat, and if he hadn't been a month or so late with my wages, I'd never left that place yet."

"Then you didn't scrap with the madam?"

"Well,, not so you'd notice it. Not with that Madam. Why, she was the kindest lady I ever worked for. She wanted the work done and done right, but if she had any fault to find she had a way of doing it that made you kind of ashamed instead of angry, and she was that quick to tell you about it when she was pleased. I took real comfort in trying to do things extra nice. She never let the children get in my way in the kitchen, and if they tattled about me she always listened to me too. She was so good to me when I was sick, bringing u pmy meals and medicine and hot water bottles and magazines off their own library table for me to read, that it almost makes me cry to think of it. And she had the sweetest way with her with everybody. I never heard her say an ugly word while I was there to anybody, and even 'cepting that ugly old brute of a man of hers. That's the only fault I had to find with her, that she put up with too much from him. A flat iron over the head now and then might have learned him some sense."

To that last formula for increasing marital felicity. Mame who, together with the first speaker, was sitting in the trolley seat in front of me, gave such enthusiastic assent that the talk promptly drifted away from the subject of mistresses to an eulogy of the wisdom of one Delia Grady, who out-Keeleyed the Keeley cure by a judicious use of flat iron upon an erring husband.

Despite the interest of the last anecdote I was very sorry for the digression, for I had hoped that Mame's character sketch of her Madam would follow.

Not that I know the "Madams." I trust I should have had the self-respect to change my seat and get out of ear shot of the rather loudly pitched conversations, if I had.

But simply because the angle of vision from maid to mistress seemed to me decidedly interestin gand suggestive.

Suggestive of what? did I hear you ask?

Well, tell me, dear lady, who so graphically describes to your friends the faults of that maid of yours, just what do you suppose her unvarnished description of you to her friends is.

She knows you well—no one better—not even your husband and children, for their clearness of vision is obscured by their relationship to you. Try, then, to imagine her description of you to some friend upon the trolley car. Could she testify, "I never heard her say an ugly word all the time I was there," or "She was that quick to tell me about it when she was pleased that I took real comfort trying to do things extra nice for her?"

Don't you think on the whole it's quite a suggestive line of thought?

ADDRESS PRESENTED TO REV. C. H. COON

The regular meeting of the Dan Spence Council Royal Templars of Temperance last night took the form of an open meeting when a most enjoyable time was spent by the members and their friends. During the evening Mr. C. S. Wiley, secretary for the Dan Spence Council, presented the following address to Rev. Mr. Coon, who has held the position of Select Councillor for some time.

To the Rev. C. H. Coon—

Dear Brother,—As this will be our last regular meeting of Dan Spence Council, Royal Templars of Temperance, that will be held before your departure from Peterborough, we wish to take this opportunity to express our regret that you are about to leave this city, and our appreciation of your valuable services you have rendered to this Council and to the cause of temperance in this community.

You, as a Minister of the Gospel, are opposed to all evil influences and are aware of the suffering, poverty and crime caused by the liquor traffic, and we have admired and been encouraged and helped by your courageous attitude on this question and by your leadership in our efforts to minimize and ultimately abolish the traffic. The results of your work will remain after you have removed to another field of labour, and we will long remember your counsels and assistance.

We hope that you will continue to have success in your noble work as a clergyman and in your opposition to evil of all kinds, and that all happiness will attend yourself, Mrs. Coon and family.

Signed on behalf of the Council,

Chas. E. Wiley, B. S.

Mr. Coon replied, thanking the members for their earnest words of appreciation and well wishes for future happiness. The rest of the evening was spent in social intercourse and light refreshments were served.

Forwards—Follis, Tooley, Kennedy, Briscow, Thorne.

Reserves—Foster, Leal, Theobald.

POST CARD COLUMN

Editor Post Card Column:

Dear Sir,—Re beautifying the city, I would like to draw the attention of those in authority, to the conditions existing in Central Park. Some time ago, when the west portion of the park was being seeded, a single wire fence was put around that section. The grass has grown beyond fear of any damage from being trodden upon, and yet the old fence remains there in a very rude and dilapidated state. It has been trampled down by the soldiers drilling, and other things, and I think it would beautify the park considerably to have it removed.

Yours very truly,

B. T. C.

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—I would like to draw the attention of the Peterborough Council to the fact that a great deal of harm is being done to the tires of bicycles, autos and rubber buggy tires, by the oil used on our streets. I have heard citizens complaining quite recently of this fact and I have seen the damage done on the tires by the oil. It is without a doubt, that the oil is a great saving to the Council, and a great improvement to the using of water, but I don't think that those possessing cycles, autos and rubber tired buggies wish to go to a great deal of expense for repairs and new tires on account of the using of oil on our streets. I should think, for my own part, that the Council could investigate into the matter and see whether the oil is adulterated with chemicals or acids or not. I should think that there must be some chemical in the oil which seems to rot or burn the rubber. If the finger is rubbed over the tire it will peel off and seems to feel quite strange. Such a thing did not happen before, and I am afraid that many will be put to great inconvenience and expense if something is not done. Could not something be done to remove this evil, and stop the complaints of the citizens.

Thanking you, Mr. Editor, I am,

Yours truly,

A CITIZEN.

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—I would like to ask a few pertinent questions in connection with the present controversy in your valuable paper.

When did the ratepayers elect the Board of Trade or Mr. D. O'Connel to look after the business of the city council?

When did the ratepayers elect to have the business of the city transacted by the Merchants' Association, or any other association?

Last January the ratepayers did elect twelve good men and true to assume the responsibilities, and do the business of the city, and there is no doubt that they have the support of a large majority of the electors in their work. Last year's Council did delegate their responsibilities to these same associations who are now trying to control the city council and we remember the Christmas box the electorate gave them at the poll (in the neck).

If the Council want a legal opinion no better man than Dan O'Connel. And if they want to buy furs to keep the Aldermen warm in July, Mr. Burrie and Mr. Lech can give them expert opinion, and also in the dry goods line, no better experts could be had than Mr. Fair and Mr. Cressman; but when it comes to city business the men elected by the people are the best judge of what is in the interests of the city, as they are in touch with the citizens every day and next January, 1912, have to give an account of their stewardship to the ratepayers as a whole, not an association. Resolutions are all right, and letters are all right in their way and a scrap is a good thing occasionally as it clears the atmosphere, even if some one gets a black eye, but the Council that does its business from its own convictions will commend itself to the ratepayers.

Thanking you, Mr. Editor, for the valuable space in your paper, I remain,

Yours truly,

W. W. MELDRUM,

Peterborough, May 10, 1911.

Woman Sentenced to Hang.

Sault Ste. Marie, May 10.—Angelina Napolitana was found guilty at the assizes yesterday afternoon of the murder of her husband on Easter Sunday. Judge Britton sentenced the prisoner to hang on Aug. 9. U. McFadden, counsel for the prisoner, made a strong plea, claiming that her husband had threatened the woman with desertion if she did not resort to prostitution to obtain money for him. The woman will become a mother in two months. She is 28 years of age, and killed her husband with an axe while he slept. T. C. Meredith, for the crown, said that the woman in her own evidence admitted having lived with a man named Nish for a week while her husband was absent. Justice Britton charged strongly against the prisoner.

The Carroll murder trial will commence this morning.

Pastoral on Mixed Marriages.

Ottawa, May 10.—On May 21 there will be read in all the Anglican churches in Canada a pastoral letter signed by Archbishop Matheson of Winnipeg, primate of all Canada, and Archbishop Hamilton of Ottawa, metropolitan of the ecclesiastical province of Canada, on the question of mixed marriages.

The pastoral will deprecate the performance of these marriages, but says that when once performed they are indissoluble by the Church of Rome.

The disbelief of the Anglican Church in divorce is also strongly brought out, and the clergy are prohibited from remarrying divorced persons during the life of the other party to the first marriage.

Subsidy For New Line.

Ottawa, May 10.—A contract was signed yesterday between the Government and the Union Steamship Co. of New Zealand, for a direct service between Vancouver and Victoria and Auckland, 18 days to each trip, at the rate of $150,000 per annum. New Zealand will pay a similar amount. This cuts out Australia, which declined to include New Zealand.

Severed an Artery.

Kingston, May 10.—Cadet Godwin of Vancouver, attending the Royal Military College, was seriously injured in swimming at Navy Bay. While ascending the ladder against the bathing house his hand went through a window, severing an artery. Twenty-five stitches were necessary to close the wound.

Y.M.C.A. Campaign.

Brantford, May 10.—The first day of the three-day Y.M.C.A. building campaign, to raise $100,000, resulted in a total last night of $50,000, included in which are contributions of $10,000 from the Massey Harris Co., $5,000 each from Lloyd Harris, M.P., Frank Cockshutt, and E. L. Cockshutt, $3,000 from Harry Cockshutt, $2,000 from W. F. Cockshutt, and $1,000 each from Grafton & Co., and R. B. Blacker.

Wedding Didn't Happen.

Kingston, May 10.—William S. Miller, aged 74, and Sarah Keeney, aged 57, came here from Fulton, N.Y., to get married, so they stated. When the steamer American arrived from Cape Vincent, however, they were looked upon as undesirables by Immigration Inspector John Geoghegan and sent back. Miller had $5, but the woman was without means.

First Court Held.

London, May 10.—The first court of King George's reign and the first big ceremonial function since the death of King Edward was held at Buckingham Palace last night. Although another court will be held to-night and that last night's was especially for diplomatic representatives and officials, the attendance was very large, many visitors from the colonies who are here for the Imperial Conference being present.

Presumed Dead.

Vienna, May 10.—The controversy regarding the fate of Archduke John Salvator of Austria, otherwise known as John Orth, was legally settled yesterday. The Supreme Court decided that his death must be presumed to have occurred July 21, 1890.

Archduke John was the younger son of the late Grand Duke Leopold II. of Tuscany. He was born in 1852. He renounced his rank and titles and called himself John Orth. He married Milly Stiebel, an actress, in London, July, 1890, and with his wife sailed on his vessel, Santa Margaretha, for Chile. Since then nothing has been heard of the archduke, and it is believed that the vessel was wrecked in a terrific storm and that all on board perished.

Entire Block Burned.

Montreal, May 10.—Fire destroyed a block of seven wooden dwellings in League Pointe yesterday morning, the eleven families occupying them having barely time to escape with their lives.

The custom would be wise and fine

Did not seem easier than mine.

"ANNUITIES" SUBJECT OF INTERESTING LECTURE BY DR. SAMSON AT COLLEGIATE

Mayor Morrow Presided---Dr. Samson Shows How the Declining Years of Life May be Comfortably Provided For---Was Largely Attended.

A corporal's guard,' consisting of about thirty-five people, turned out last night to hear an interesting and profitable address by Dr. Samson. The subject of his discourse concerned one of the most vital questions of the present day; that is the question of providing against want and poverty, and for that happiness which comes with the removal of the haunting fear of destitution in old age.

Mayor Morrow, who occupied the chair, opened the meeting with a few pointed remarks concerning the relative merits of the Canadian Government Annuities Act. He then introduced the speaker of the evening, Dr. Samson, who gave a clear, lucid and forceful address on the subject in hand.

"There are just as many people present as I expected there would be," said the speaker, in his opening remarks. I recall an incident of some years ago. At a certain place a prominent speaker was billed to give an address on tuberculosis—the great white plague which destroys a life every two minutes and ten seconds. There were just ten people present. The speaker got up and addressed the audience just as effectively as though there had been ten thousand present, instead of ten. It is my firm conviction that I will be in my grave before a man comes to Peterborough on a more important mission than I am here to-night for. Therefore, I have no apology to make for my appearance in your city on this important mission. This is the one hundred and seventy-second audience that I have had the pleasure of addressing. I am not a public lecturer, therefore I do not purpose to give you a lecture, but a straight-from-the-shoulder talk. All that it will be necessary for you to do in order to make provision against want and destitution in old age, under the above-mentioned Act, will be to deposit from time to time in the nearest Post Office Savings Bank or Money Order office, any amounts that you may set aside for that purpose, which amounts will be placed to your credit with compound interest attached at four per cent per annum.

The Government will look after your payments. It has advantages for investment which a private individual cannot enjoy. It will act as your banker. No better guarantee should be required that the proposition is worthy of your fullest confidence than the knowledge that the entire wealth and credit of Canada is behind the proposition.

The Government has done more than merely to place the facilities within your reach for making this provision. It has provided by statute that you cannot be deprived of your annuity in any manner, by any person, or by any process of law. It cannot be seized for debt of any kind. It is inalienable. You may spend it foolishly and in an improvident way if you like, but it will not depart from you. It will come to you every three months so long as you live.

You may provide for an annuity of $50 or $600 a year; but no less and no more.

You may contract for an annuity at any age between the ages of 5 and 65, but, except for invalidity or disablement, no annuity shall be payable before the age of 55; and no matter how little you may pay, or how much, your benefits will be relatively the same. It should be remembered, however, that the purpose of the annuity is to provide an income at a time when one is unable to work, and that if it is deferred until the age of 60 or 65, the income to be derived will be much larger than if it began at 55.

You may pay in only 25 cents a week, or you may pay in ten, fifteen twenty or more dollars at a time.

You may pay by weekly, monthly, quarterly, half-yearly or yearly premiums if you prefer that plan, the cost being no greater where the annual rate is split up into several payments than if paid in one sum in advance.

You may start with a lump sum, and continue by periodical payments, in which case the periodical payments would be smaller than if no lump sum were paid; and you may deposit lump sums at any time which will give a corresponding increase to your annuity.

You may start with a lump sum, as the equivalent of arrears, and complete the contract by periodical payments. That is, a man of 40 (or any other age) wishing, an annuity at, say, 60, may by a single payment pay the equivalent of the premiums between his then age and, say, age 20, and complete the contract as if he had begun at age 20.

You may, after making periodical payments for a longer or shorter period complete the contract by a single payment, in order that you may have no further payments to make.

You may provide by single or periodical payments for annuities for yourself, your wife, and your children, and you may contract that the payments made shall be returned to you or your legal representatives should the annuitant die before the annuity is payable.

You may when your annuity is due provide that a portion of it (not exceeding one-half) shall be payable to your wife so long as she lives.

You may provide by a single payment for a last survivor annuity for yourself and wife not to exceed $600, which annuity will be paid so long as either of you lives; and any two or more persons may join in making the same provision; but a man and wife may each purchase an annuity of $600.

You may complete your payments at a certain age, and allow these to accumulate that you may secure an increased annuity at a subsequent age.

You may purchase an immediate annuity, payable in quarterly instalments, and receive the first instalment three months after the purchase money has been paid.

Your annuity may when it becomes payable, be guaranteed for a number of years, and should you die before the guaranteed period expired, the annuity would be paid as you had directed for the unexpired portion of the term, but should you survive the guaranteed period it would be continued to yourself so long as you lived, without additional charge.

If your payments, with accumulated interest, should not, in the aggregate, be sufficient to earn an annuity of $50, all payments made with compound interest, at three per cent. per annum will be returned to you or to your heirs.

These are a few of the benefits that are to be derived, and they are at the disposal of every man, woman, or child domiciled in Canada.

It took twenty years for Great Britain to introduce the English Pension Bill, which bill provides a weekly payment to every man or woman over 70 years of age and in destitute circumstances. It took fifty million dollars to meet the expense of this bill the first year and it will take sixty million this year. This is paid out of the treasury. There will be no such drain in the revenue of this country in the operation of the annuity Act. It will be almost self supporting, and yet it will have the desired effect, namely, a visible and safe means of providing for old age.

Will you avail yourself of it? If so, sit down to-day and carefully estimate your living expenses, decide how much you can contribute each week, set it aside in the same way that you set aside a sum for your winter's coal—you are providing fuel for the winter of life. Your earnings will some day cease, but you must have food and clothing so long as you live. Statistics inform us that not one man in thirty retiring with a competency retains that competency until the end; and that 95 per cent. of men at 60 are dependent upon their daily earnings or on their children for support. The dollars they thoughtlessly spent in youth would have been warm friends in their old age.

Much of the extreme poverty and destitution in Great Britain, which has been shown by the recent Pension Act to exist, would have been impossible had there been a general adoption of a scheme like the Canadian scheme in England half a century ago. The men and women who are now on the "pauperising pension roll" could have preserved their self-respect and independence, and the enormous annual drain on the public treasury, which amounts to nearly $50,000,000, would probably have been avoided. If Canada is not ultimately to face the same conditions as exist in England and many other European countries, the people of small income must make definite provision for their old age, and it is quite within the bounds of fact to say that in this fair Canada of ours there are to-day for each man, woman and child who has an assured income for life, and who can for that reason contemplate the approach of old age with serenity and equanimity, thousands, who, as the thought is forced upon them, can only have feelings of sad misgivings and ponder upon the subject of what the future has in store for them.

Mr. J. C. Shook then moved that a vote of thanks be rendered the speaker, and this was seconded by Mr. H. R. H. Kenner, and carried unanimously by those present.

PICTURE MACHINE EXPLODED

Operator Narrowly Escaped Being Blinded

While taking flashlight pictures in the Simpson House, Lindsay, W. E. McIntosh, of 48 Humbert street, Toronto, and formerly chief at the Benson House, Lindsay, had his face and head badly burned by a machine exploding. He was taken to Hess Hospital and received treatment, but it remained for Zam-Buk to heal the terrible burns.

Speaking of the affair, Mr. McIntosh says: "At the hospital I was kept masked night and day for five days. At the end of that time the burns were still very bad and the doctors would not hear of my returning to work. I knew if only I could get some Zam-Buk for the burns I would be back at work in quick time.

"At last I left the hospital and went straight to a local store and bought some Zam-Buk. At the hotel I applied a Zam-Buk dressing, and this cooled the burning pains and gave me quick relief. I kept on with the Zam-Buk treatment and returned to work. Within just one week after first commencing with the Zam-Buk treatment the burns were completely healed and I might have defied anybody to detect where they had been."

Upon hearing of the above facts the Zam-Buk Co. communicated with Mr. A. Gillies, the proprietor of the "Lindsay Watchman-Warder" and asked corroboration. Mr. Gillies replied that the facts were as stated and enclosed a report from the newspaper which chronicled the occurrence.

There is no doubt that for burns, scalds cuts, scratches and abrasions, however serious, Zam-Buk is the finest known remedy. It is also a sure cure for eczema, piles, ulcers, abscesses, scalp sores, children's rashes, and eruptions, sore feet, chafings, insect stings, inflamed wounds, festering and skin diseases generally. Zam-Buk Soap should be used in conjunction with the balm for washing wounds and sore places. All druggists and stores sell Zam-Buk, 50c. box, and Zam-Buk Soap at 25c. per tablet, or post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price.

TO INTERVIEW CITY COUNCIL

was necessary that Mr. Duggan should be in touch and harmony with the Council and Mr. Peck thought the question for the meeting was to decide upon the best way in which this could be accomplished. He thought the Council should have full control of the official, remarking that they were not liable to change their views unless they were given this control. He suggested that a strong committee be appointed to go into the matter with the Council.

Mr. G. W. Hatton said that he wanted to endorse the appointment of Mr. Duggan in the first place and to agree with the representative citizens who had spoken in their endeavour to have him reappointed. He had been opposed to the office at first, feeling that they were going to spend money without knowing the results. He was now satisfied with what had been done and felt that it would be a great mistake if the city not only did away with the office, but also dispensed with the services of Mr. Duggan. However, at the same time they must not harshly condemn those who held different views.

Mr. Andrew McFarlane remarked that the question was whether or not Peterborough wanted manufactories. If she did the city had to have someone to look after them. She could not locate industries without this. The committee, which had Mr. Duggan in charge, reported that they were perfectly satisfied with his work; the people who did not know said: "We don't want him." "If we are going to be thrown back and held back both in regard to the Commissioner and the Fire Department, it is time to kick up a row," concluded the speaker.

Mr. E. L. Goodwill thought that the securing of the Hydro-Electric report was sufficient to pay for the office for the first year. Under other circumstances it would have cost the city a lot of money. He thought the members of the Council would come to view the matter in a more favourable light when they considered it more.

Mr. Denham explained that the Board of Trade were not trying to control the office. They had asked for a joint committee to deal with the matter.

Mr. S. T. Medd was struck with Mr. Peck's suggestion. He thought that they should not sit in judgment on the Council; there was only one time each year to do that. The council and the citizens should be at one in the matter. As for the Industrial Commissioner no further endorsation of him was needed than what had been said.

Mr. W. H. Munro expressed his coincidence with Mr. Peck's suggestion and thought action should be taken at once.

Mr. O'Connell then briefly reviewed the debate, bringing out the different reasons for the retention of Mr. Duggan and advising that a strong committee be formed and a firmly worded resolution was passed.

The meeting then unanimously passed the resolution given above, which was signed by everyone present.

REGIMENTAL ORDERS

A large number of the 57th Regiment turned out to the regular weekly drill held last night, and a most successful drill was the result. The Regiment marched out as usual, only taking a somewhat different course. Last night they marched down Aylmer St., out Hunter to George street, out Charlotte street to Water street, up Water street, out Simcoe street to George and up George to the Central Park, where battalion drill was performed, and afterwards company drill. The companies were drilled a little harder than usual, owing to the fact that next Tuesday night the inspection will take place. The commanding officers made several encouraging remarks to the men and had nothing but favourable comments to make on their appearance and drill.

The orders for the week were read by Capt. A. P. McLean as follows:

THE LOVE OF OATS

Why Normal, Active People Always Crave Oatmeal

Oats contain more body-building food than any other grain that grows. They contain more energy-giving food. You know their effect on horses.

Oats contain more organic phosphorus than any other grain, and phosphorus is the brain's main constituent. They contain more lecithin, and lecithin is the chief component of the entire nervous system.

That's why workers love oatmeal. That's why growing children crave it. It is simply the call of nature for what bodies, brains and nerves require.

But some oatmeal fails to meet these requirements. Only the richest, plumpest oats supply a food worth while. The choicest oats are sifted 62 times to get the grains for Quaker Oats. Only ten pounds are secured from a bushel. But these fine oats, when prepared by the Quaker process, supply the utmost in oatmeal.

Oatmeal is the most important food you serve. And the best costs only one-half cent per dish. Don't supply your table with inferior oats.

THE TIME TO SOW ALFALFA

There is plenty of time yet to sow alfalfa. Many authorities recommend that it be sown any time during late spring or early summer, or late in July, in which cases the alfalfa seed should be sown without a nurse crop of grain. Even later than this alfalfa may be sown and some growers have obtained splendid results from sowing alfalfa seed with fall wheat, just as we now sow timothy seed when seeding winter wheat during the last days of August or early September. Successful crops have been obtained from so many different ways and times of seeding that some of our leading authorities confess to being in doubt as to what is the best time to sow alfalfa.

Alfalfa Sown Without Nurse Crop.

If any of our farmer readers have not already sown alfalfa this spring they are assured that there is still lots of time. Those who have sown already may wish to sow a few acres more, sowing it without a nurse crop on well-prepared land. A few acres of an old pasture field, or of one of your hay fields, which have suffered from the frosts of last winter, may well be ploughed up and seeded to alfalfa. In this case, after ploughing the land should be rolled down firmly, cultivated thoroughly, then harrowed every week until the end of May or the beginning of June, at which time the soil should again be cultivated thoroughly so as to kill all weeds; then roll to firm the soil and sow 20 lbs. of good seed to the acre and cover it with a stroke of the harrow.

Do Not Know About Bacteria.

A number of farmers have informed Farm and Dairy that they cannot understand why they should bother with inoculation (bacteria) for their alfalfa. Several instances have been reported of farmers not knowing about this inoculation and sowing alfalfa without it. There is yet time to provide this inoculation, which may be obtained by broadcasting from 200 to 300 lbs. per acre of soil from an old successful alfalfa field, where plenty of nodules are to be found on the roots of the alfalfa plants.

Great Benefits from Inoculation.

In any case it is a great mistake to sow alfalfa seed without providing inoculation either by the culture (nitro-bacteria) obtained from the O. A. College, Guelph, or by the soil as above recommended. At many of the experiment stations the benefits of inoculation have been established beyond any doubt whatever. At the Geneva, (N.Y.) Experiment Station, in over 100 cooperative experiments, conducted by the farmers at the rate of 200 to 300 lbs. per acre the chance of a successful stand of alfalfa was raised to about 60 per cent. over that which was not inoculated.

Alfalfa Sown With Peas.

It has recently been reported to Farm and Dairy that a number of farmers in Haldimand county, Ont., have secured splendid stands of alfalfa by seeding it along with a light crop of field peas, the peas to be sowed at the rate of only one bushel per acre. This method of sowing alfalfa may appeal to a number of Peterborough county farmers as being best suited to their requirements.

No matter in what manner you may sow alfalfa any three-acre plot you may seed this year will be eligible to compete in the Alfalfa Competition which has been arranged especially for the farmers of this county. Entries in the competition are now being received. All intending competitors should communicate with the secretary of the competition, care of Farm and Dairy, Peterborough, Ont., and send in their entries as soon as possible.

KILLS HER HUSBAND TO SAVE HIS SOUL WIFE GIVES HERSELF UP

NEW YORK, MAY 8.—Because she believed her husband to be infatuated with another woman, Mrs. Frances O'Shaughnessy, twenty-four years old shot and killed Geo. O'Shaughnessy, to whom she had been married a year, in the bedroom of a house where they boarded at No. 85 East 113th street, on Friday afternoon. The young wife left her husband in agony on the floor while she walked calmly for ten blocks until she met a policeman and told him of the murder.

O'Shaughnessy was a clerk in a market at 103rd street and Second avenue. His wife came to this country from Ireland about two years ago. After marriage until two months ago they lived happily together, according to the story Mrs. O'Shaughnessy told the police yesterday. Then, one evening, Mrs. O'Shaughnessy said, she saw her husband walking with Miss Tessie Hayes, a cashier in the market, where her husband was employed. The couple quarreled about this incident, she said, and her husband began to grow less attentive to her.

"I hid the revolver in the folds of my dress," said the little woman, "and came upon George as he was hunting for the letters I had found, the letters that told me the other woman's name, the letters he had forgotten.

"He said it was true, but that he could not account for it. We talked of her, George loved me through it all, but when he was with her, he said, he forgot his country, his religion, his wife and his coming child. I fell on my knees and asked him if there was a chance for us to be happy together again. He pushed me off. Then I shot him.

"As he lay on the floor I stooped and kissed his lips. Then I gave myself up."

Mrs. O'Shaughnessy turned into Park avenue and walked uptown ten blocks until she met Policeman Kirk, to whom she told her story. She was cool and deliberate as she recited the details of the tragedy, according to the policeman. But after telling the story several times after being locked up at the East 126th street police station, she became hysterical.

"My George, the poor fellow," she moaned for hours; "he was not responsible for this."

Later Mrs. O'Shaughnessy called Sergeant Herlihy to her cell and asked him to take $140 she had saved to Father Phelan, pastor of St. Cecilia's church, at 106th street and Park avenue, where she was married, and have masses said for the repose of her husband's soul.

Miss Hayes did not learn of O'Shaughnessy's death until four hours after he was killed, when a reporter called at the market where she was employed. Immediately she became hysterical and quit work. As she went crying through the streets to her home, at 228 East 100th street, a crowd of more than a thousand persons followed her. Miss Hayes said she had become acquainted with O'Shaughnessy about two months ago, but did not know he was married until last Monday night. She was walking in Third avenue with him, she said, when a woman, whom she did not know, took hold of her by the arm and demanded:

"What do you mean by stealing my husband?"

Miss Hayes said she had written several letters to O'Shaughnessy before that, and declared he never told her he was married. One of the letters found in O'Shaughnessy's pockets is said to be the only letter Miss Hayes wrote him after meeting his wife this week. It was in the nature of a farewell note and among other things it said:

"As long as you taught me to love you, you must now teach me to forget you."

Miss Hayes is 18 years old. She was heart-broken over the tragedy.

HASTINGS ITEMS OF INTEREST LOCALLY

Special to The Examiner.

HASTINGS, MAY 9.—A wedding of interest to Hastings took place on Wednesday last, the principals in the important event being Miss Hattie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Preston, and Mr. T. Starke, of Asphodel. Mr. and Mrs Starke have many friends in Hastings, who join in wishing them a long and prosperous wedded life.

The pulpit in the Presbyterian church was occupied on Sunday at both services by the Rev. Dr. Grey, of Toronto, who delivered two excellent addresses. The reverend gentleman spent a few days during the week in canvassing the district in the interests of the new Knox college, which is about to be built.

Friday being Arbour Day the school children and teachers turned their attention to the work of cleaning the school yards and otherwise beautifying the surroundings.

Mr. W. Stenson has purchased the house on Bridge street, lately owned by Mr. Parks, and purposes making it his residence. Mr. Parks and family

Several of our people drove to Westin the near future.

Our cheese factory has re-opened for another season's operations with Mr. Hunter as cheese maker.

A number of Englishmen arrived here last week and have found positions with the farmers in the surrounding district.

Several of our citizens drove to Westwood on Thursday morning to share in the annual sport of fish catching, when the fish actually came down in shoals and the most active carried away the most spoil.

Winter is still lingering on our shores, one evidence being ice fully half an inch thick during the early part of the week.

On Wednesday morning, as Mr. W. Oakley was on his way to the cheese factory with the milk waggon, the team which he was driving took fright and ran away, running for about one and a half miles before being stopped. Fortunately, however, very little damage was done and Mr. Oakley may well congratulate himself that he escaped unhurt.

OTTAWA PRAISE FOR PETERBOROUGH HORSES

The Ottawa Citizen, commenting on the last successful horse show in that city, says:

The horses of Hon. J. R. Stratton of Peterborough, in the harness and saddle classes, made a splendid showing. As regards the ladies' appointment class on Friday evening, particularly the outfit driven by Mrs. Cassells of Toronto, daughter of the speaker of the Senate, was a very pretty turnout, and captivated the gathering. Mrs. Cassells' driving was perfect, and when the blue ribbon was attached to her pair and Hon. Clifford Sifton's cup presented, the audience heartily testified its appreciation of her splendid win.

In the appointment class for a pair of carriage horses, My Pride and Premier, with their splendid turnout and perfect appointments, again carried off the blue ribbon. None Nicer in the saddle class, was a beautiful chestnut of Kentucky breed that showed signs of good training. In the runabout class Alberta showed speed and a style that made her an easy winner. In fact Hon. Mr. Stratton's string of horses materially added to the Ottawa horse show and was one of the best shown this season.

FINAL WARNING

"All automobiles and motorcycles, and any other power-driven vehicle must carry lights at night". That is the law in this city, and those who violate it will be severely dealt with by the Police Authorities. For the last few weeks, since the motor season came in, several autos go around the city without lights and this is a final warning.

A HEROIC SCOUT

The attention of the Examiner has been called to another heroic act on the part of one of the Peterborough Boy Scouts. Yesterday B. Carpenter, a member of St. Luke's Troop of Scouts, was the means of saving the life of one of his school mates in the Otonabee. The latter, a smaller boy than his rescuer, fell into a pond, but young Carpenter quickly plunged into the water with his clothes on and succeeded in bringing the little fellow safely to shore.

VALUABLE RECIPES

From Farm and Dairy.

ROLL JELLY CAKE

Three eggs, one scant cup sugar, one cup flour, one teaspoonful cream tartar, one-half soda. When done turn out on to a cloth wet in cold water and it will not break when you roll it.

FRUIT COOKIES

One-half cup sugar, one-half cup molasses, one-half cup lard, one-half cup hot water with one teaspoonful soda dissolved in it, one cup chopped fruit, a little cinnamon and cloves. Flour to roll, but don't make them too stiff as it makes them dry.

OATMEAL COOKIES

One cup sugar, three-quarters cup butter, two cups flour, two cups oatmeal, one cup chopped raisins, (this may be omitted) three-quarters teaspoon soda, two eggs well beaten, one teaspoon cinnamon. This makes a large batch but if tried you will think them delicious.

CREAM PUFFS

One-half cup butter melted in one cup hot water, put on the stove to boil, while boiling stir in one cup flour, let cool, and stir in three eggs, one at a time and beat each time. Drop in spoonfuls on a buttered tin bake for 30 minutes, without opening the door, as they need to be well done.

STRAWBERRY SHRUB.

Dissolve 5 oz. tartaric acid in 2 qts. water, and pour this mixture over 12 lbs. hulled strawberries in an earthenware vessel. Let stand 48 hours with a plate on top of the berries to keep them down. After this strain through a flannel bag, then add 1½ lbs. granulated sugar to each pt. juice. Stir until every particle of the sugar is dissolved, then bottle, cork and keep in a cool place. It will not be necessary to seal the corks. This makes a delicious and refreshing drink by adding 2 or 3 teaspoons of the shrub to a glass of cold water.

CREAM PIE

One pint milk, two tablespoons corn starch, yolks of two eggs cooked to a smooth paste, flavor with vanilla. Pour into a baked crust, beat the whites, add two tablespoons sugar, flavor with lemon, brown in oven.

FILLING

One and one-half cups milk heated, one egg, scant one-half cup sugar, one tablespoon corn starch. Cut open puffs with a sharp knife or pair of shears, fill with custard, replace top and you will have something good.

I.O.F. MEETING

The semi-monthly meeting of Court Chemong, No. 530, I.O.F., will be held to-morrow evening at 8 o'clock in the S.O.E. Hall, Hunter street. Several important matters for the consideration of the members, calls for a full attendance. A visiting P. C. R. will be present.

LEASING ORCHARDS

From Farm and Dairy.

J. E. Jewson, Welland Co., Ont.

Many orchards in this section are being leased by capitalists for a term of years at what looks like very low rentals. The farmer, however, who receives an annual rental of $20 an acre for his orchard or 50 cents a tree as the case may be, together with sufficient fruit for his own requirements, he agreeing to convey the fruit to the nearest shipping point, believes that he is getting greater returns from it than he has in the past. The owner of an 18 acre orchard for which is received an annual rental of $400, told me that this is actually more than he has ever before realized out of it taking one year with another. Such an orchard under average conditions is not very remunerative to say the least. Such is the condition of every orchard that has been rented in this locality.

The reason for such low returns from our orchards lies in the fact that farmers as a whole, do not take an interest in their orchards and do not conduct them as a business proposition. A great many are not familiar with the latest and best methods of pruning, spraying and cultivation. Then again where a comparatively small area is devoted to the orchard it is not considered practical to invest in a spraying outfit. Many also, are engaged in dairying and they find that outside of a little time for pruning in the spring their time is fully occupied with other branches of farm work in which a greater interest is taken. As a general rule the orchard has been left to take care of itself and to supply the owner with plenty of fruit for his own use.

The farmer seems to be making a sacrifice in renting his orchard for a period of years for what seems a very low price. He is however receiving a little more financially than heretofore: the orchard will be brought into a first-class state of cultivation; he will get an insight into the best methods of pruning and spraying; a larger market will be established. He will be able to place a better quality of fruit on his own table, and above all, some at least of the many neglected orchards scattered over this province will be so improved as to materially increase the value of those farms on which they are located. In the writer's opinions, however, it would be better for each farmer to improve his own orchard.

TREATING WHEAT SEED

From Farm and Dairy.

Where stinking smut of wheat has been prevalent in previous years and where seed wheat is brought in from another section, it is wise to treat the seed for smut. Deductions from experiments carried on in New South Wales, Australia, as to the effects of various fungicides on stinking smut (bunt) are valuable. A one-quarter per cent. solution of formalin, a two per cent. solution of copper sulphate, a two per cent. solution of copper sulphate supplemented by immersion in limewater, Bordeaux mixture, a two per cent. solution of copper sulphate to which was added sufficient salt to make a saturated solution, and a saturated solution of salt and water were used in these experiments.

Copper sulphate proved a splendid preventive of smut and was also satisfactory in preventing reinfection, but it seriously injured the vitality of the seed unless some ameliorating agent was used with it, such as lime or salt. Copper sulphate and lime was not as satisfactory as copper sulphate alone against the bunt, but its destructive effects on the vitality of the seed were much less. It proved advantageous to delay the treatment with limewater, rather than to treat the seed immediately after the copper sulphate soaking.

Copper sulphate and salt proved the most effective preventive of bunt. It was better than lime in lessening the destructive action of copper sulphate on the vitality of the grain, and was the most efficient preventive of reinfection. The solution suggested is made of equal parts of copper sulphate and salt.

Bordeaux mixture, formalin, and salt water proved unsatisfactory as bunt preventives during the season's tests.

Newfoundland Wants Reciprocity
Island Premier Optimistic

NEW YORK, MAY 9.—That Newfoundland hopes to be admitted to a full share in the reciprocity agreement between Canada and the United States, is the announcement of Sir Edward Morris, the Newfoundland Premier, who is in New York on his way to the coronation.

"I have followed the tariff situation, as it is now developing between the United States and Canada, with keen interest," said the Premier, "and I hope that if any reciprocity arrangement is finally agreed upon between the two countries Newfoundland will be treated as is Canada and placed on the same footing.

"The colony I represent is now importing very largely from the United States and in return the United States is taking many of the products of my country. We are rapidly developing in new industries, many of which would be beneficial to the United States under a tariff agreement of the reciprocity order. The great mineral wealth of Newfoundland is only just beginning to gain recognition.

"We want to develop a trade in fresh fish by cold storage. The supply of halibut, salmon, lobster and other fish is practically unlimited. I believe a big business could be developed in this way."

CHAIRMAN OF HYDRO ELECTRIC GIVES INTERESTING ADDRESS ON POWER TOPIC

Hon. Adam Beck Addresses Representative Gathering on Work of the Commission and of the Situation as far as Peterborough is Concerned—Explains the Reading of His Report to Citizens.

HEALEY FALLS POWER

A large and truly representative audience gathered in the Collegiate Institute Hall last night to listen to Hon. Adam Beck, chairman of the Hydro-Electric Commission who was present upon the invitation of the Mayor and Council, to discuss the work of the Commission in the province in general and the manner in which Peterborough (in particular could be helped. Hon. Mr. Beck delivered a most interesting and educative address of one and one half hours' duration and his remarks were listened to with a great deal of interest.

His Worship Mayor Morrow opened the meeting with the following address:

"I am highly gratified this evening to be able to welcome to Peterborough and introduce to you the Chairman of the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission, the Hon. Adam Beck. Mr. Beck's name is well known throughout this province and in this respect is second only to that of the Premier. We have been hearing and reading for a considerable time of what the Commission, of which Mr. Beck is the energetic and efficient Chairman, has been doing for Western Ontario and we have read of what is has accomplished with appreciation and approbation. In fact, we were on the verge of becoming a little jealous, but we are glad that now Mr. Beck has turned his eyes and his energy east ward, for we know that where he goes there will be something doing and something accomplished. That was the reason why the Power committee of the City Council, acting for the Council, asked the Commission for a report on the question of power for Peterborough, and I am glad that they have given attention to that question, for, along with the members of the Council, I am anxious that the city should have power controlled by the municipality for the benefit of the people. Mr. Beck, with the experience he has had and the knowledge he possesses, will be able to give us light on this question and it is with pleasure that I introduce him to you."

Hon. Mr. Beck was given an enthusiastic reception when he arose to speak. He was anxious, he said, to express his appreciation of the manner in which he had been entertained during his stay in Peterborough, and his thanks to the gentlemen who had sacrificed their time in giving him an opportunity of seeing the sights of Peterborough, its splendid waterway, its Lift-Lock, and all that went to make Peterborough and the Trent district the envy of other inland places not so fortunately situated as his home city of London.

The Hydro-Electric chairman explained that although he was a member of the Cabinet that he was not present on any political mission and was not speaking for any political purpose. He came at the invitation of the Mayor and City Council. The work of the Commission was not, and he sincerely hoped would never be, a political scheme. It had been made pleasant by the sincere co-operation and assistance of the press and municipal bodies, irrespective of political feelings at all. The Commission was not the creation of any one man or government, or political party. It was a public enterprise, a municipal

Father Secures Possession Of Children Who Were Kidnapped On Sunday

Father and Two Officers of the Law Were at the Depot to Meet Them as They got off the Train—Returned to This City on Tuesday—An Old Family Feud.

The climax to the kidnapping case, which occurred in this city on Sunday, culminated on Tuesday, in the recovery of the stolen children by the father.

The children, who are six and two years of age, respectively, were taken from the home of their grandmother, in a rather forcible manner on Sunday morning, by the children's mother, who, it appears, has been living estranged from her husband for some time. Mr. Charles Boyler, the father of the children, who works in Toronto, was notified by the Police Department of this city of the existing state of affairs, with the result that the kidnapped and kidnapper were met at the Don station on the arrival of the 7.13 train Monday morning by the father and two officers of the Toronto Police Department. The whole party then proceeded to the city hall, where matters were adjusted and the father given charge of his children. He returned to this city on Tuesday with them and will remain here for some time until the trouble quiets down.

When seen by an Examiner representative this morning Mr. Boyler was on the way to the Roy studio, where he will have the youngsters' pictures taken. This will be done as a precaution in case any future trouble of a similar nature should occur.

PETERBOROUGH HORSES LEAD THE MONTREAL HORSE SHOW IN WINNINGS

Special Wire to The Examiner.

MONTREAL, QUE., MAY 11.—Wednesday was a great day at the Montreal Horse Show and the management say that for fine horses of brilliant display all previous exhibitions are outdistanced. The exhibitors are watching with the keenest interest the judging which on the whole is considered to be as fair as can be done when horses, like children, have their off days. Peterborough horses continue to hold their places In the combination class "None Nicer" carried off second place out of a list of fourteen horses, the award to the first being considered more of the harness type; None Nicer was the popular entry.

In the harness class, under fifteen two hands, Mr. Stratton's "Latest News" and "Lochryan Princess" for high stepping and speed defeated Senator Beith's Champion Pair that were recently imported, and that carried off the blue ribbons at the Olympia" show in England. Breen's driving and riding are being greatly admired and he is admittedly the neatest and cleanest driver at the show. He certainly showed to the best advantage and received the plaudits of the mass of people. In the evening "My Pride" and "Premier" with victoria and appointments, outclassed the eight other pairs, Mr. Vanderbilt remarking that the New York Show had none better, nothing could be more complete.

There is a very keen interest being taken by all the exhibitors and it is generally conceded that the Montreal Show is a hard place to win ribbons. Mr. Stratton's horses lead the show in the winnings, especially in the harness and appointment classes.

CITIZENS ARE PROCLAIMING MADERO AS PRESIDENT

Special to The Examiner.

JUAREZ, MEXICO, MAY 11.—Anticipating the advance of a large federal force and more fighting the Insurrectos this morning have established forts on all the hills around the town and with reinforcements are garrisoning them to advantage. Federal General Navarro and his officers have been given their parole by Madero on the understanding that they don't leave Juarez. The citizens are joyfully proclaiming Madero President. He says he will fight until Diaz resigns.

Mr. Mantell Celebrates His 102nd Birthday

Mr. Joseph Mantell, Peterborough's oldest citizen, yesterday celebrated his one hundred and second birthday at his home, 540 Downie street. The brethren of Peterborough Lodge, A. F. and A. M., sent a bouquet of flowers to Mr. Mantell, who is a member of the Masonic Order and Bro. G. Walter Green entertained the veteran to a ride around the city in his motor-car, accompanied by Bros. Rush and Morrow, and an interesting feature was that Mr. Mantell's great grandchild, Ralph Edwards, was one of the party. Mr. Mantell, the Examiner is pleased to state, is enjoying splendid health, and is enjoying daily the little recreation he finds in spading and planting his garden, at 540 Downie street. He is almost daily seen walking about in various parts of the city, accompanied by his three-year-old great grandchild and the two make an interesting picture, indeed.

Mr. Mantell wishes to express his thanks to his brother Masons of Peterborough Lodge, No. 155 A. F. and A. M., for their remembrance and to Messrs. G. W. Walter Green, Dr. Morrow and ex-Mayor Rush, for the pleasant motor ride.

KILLED IN A DUEL

Special Wire to the Examiner.

BERLIN, MAY 11.—In a duel over a gambling debt in the forest near here this morning, Baron Oswald Von Richthoff killed a fellow officer, Capt. Wilhelm Von Gaffron. The Emperor has ordered the arrest of Von Richthoff and a thorough investigation.

An aviation recruit named Bekemuller, was killed when his machine crashed against a brick wall in the early morning mist.

REFORM IN DIVORCES

OTTAWA, MAY 11.—Senator Ethier chairman of the Divorce committee, announced this morning that the committee had declared for immediate reform in divorce proceedings in Canada. There must be something more than hearsay evidence and general scandal presented, or the Senate would decline to hear them. Two applications have been thrown out during the last few days.

EYE-STRAIN IS BRAIN STRAIN

For the eye is practically the brain turned to face. Eye-strain, in some degree at least is probably universal. The percentage of those with perfect eyesight is very small.

Some of the effects which cause eye-strain are easily explained. One's eyes may be of unequal length. The inequality may measure but one four-hundredth of an inch; still that slight inequality hinders good team-work, and causes eye-strain. Astigmatism in one or both eyes is seldom absent and is one of the most potent causes of eye-strain. It is caused, generally, by the pressure of the upper lid upon the upper cornea. The effect of the pressure is to alter the curvature of the cornea, disturbing the refractive power, and giving a distorted image on the retina.

Properly fitted glasses will remove all eye-strain.

BEHIND THE TIME.

Ecclesiastes tells us there is a time for everything; but our city fathers do not always have practical appreciation of the dictum of "The Preacher." There was a proper time to order oil for the streets. It seems to have been let pass and now we have grave complaints of the dust nuisance, for we have neither oil nor water to keep down the dust as it should be kept down. The other night a committee gravely decided to procure trees for planting. There is a time for planting trees and that is not when they are in leaf. There is no greater bungle made in anything than in tree planting, by both corporations and individuals. First, because trees are not planted early enough, and, secondly, because they are not planted properly. Trees should be planted before the buds fully open. There is always risk after that date. There are mistakes in both uprooting a tree for replanting, and in the way of planting it. A tree is grubbed up with a very large part of the roots destroyed, and it is planted with all the top left on; the result is nearly always failure. The top should be pruned back in proportion to the loss of roots. In an effort to make one-third of the roots support the full complement of top, the tree exhausts its vitality and dies. A striking example of this is furnished on Margaret avenue. In front of one place, two years ago, the owner planted three or four elms. The tops were cut back to almost bare poles. Now, there is a fine, strong, lusty growth of top, and the trees will live and grow, and flourish. In front of another place, last year, three splendidly shaped and thrifty elms were planted. Nearly the whole top was left on. The consequence is the trees are all dead, and the splendid tops they bore are dry twigs. If the trees had been cut back almost to bare poles they would have lived. There is a right time, and a right way, to plant trees. If both are not observed there will be failure. The City Council committee in thinking of ordering trees for planting after the leaves are out are behind the time, even if they are not behind the times.

AN EXAMPLE FOR ONTARIO.

The Examiner, in its advocacy of the mark of the highest civilization - good roads—has frequently insisted upon the state—the province of Ontario in our case—assuming large responsibility, if not full responsibility, for the construction and maintenance of highways. Nothing that the province could do would be so much in the interest of the farmers and the whole community as its assumption and construction of public highways throughout the province. We have a great revenue, we are a rich province, and could well afford to expend one or two million a year in the construction of a permanent system of roads. The Government, in the interests of the towns and cities, primarily, has undertaken a great work, carried on by the Hydro-Electric Commission. Without minimising the value of this Commission, and the importance of its functions, a Provincial Good-Roads Commission would be productive of greater and more generally distributed benefit. That an undertaking of this kind would be feasible is shown by the example and experience of other countries. New York state, right at our doors, furnishes a demonstration, example and an inspiration. State control of highways obtains there to an extent that is gridironing the state with the highest quality of good roads. Every mile of country highway in New York is under the control and administration of a state highway commission. The Brantford Expositor thus summarised the character and work of the Commission in New York State:

> The extent to which road improvement has progressed in New York state is probably not realized by many Canadaians. Every mile of highway in the state, outside the incorporated villages and cities, is under the direct charge of the New York Highway Commission. State roads, of which there are about 3,200 miles, are being constructed entirely at the cost of the state. To county roads, the state contributes one-half the cost of construction, and to township roads the state gives one-third of the cost. The maintenance of these roads is similar to the French system, in which a patrolling foreman takes care of each five or ten miles of road. He works eight or nine months a year, furnishes a cart and horse, is provided with the necessary stone and implements, and makes all minor repairs in the highway as soon as they are required. In that way, the road is kept in perfect condition. While state aid is given to townships, yet all the work on these roads is subject to the direct control of the state highway commission. State control has been found to be essential in securing a proper administration of highway expenditure. The abolition of statute labour has been brought about by a system under which the state contributed 25c for each dollar of expenditure, raised in the township. When 600 out of 900 townships of the state had adopted this system, statute labour was abolished by an act of the State Legislature. Automobiles are taxed $5 for each machine up to 25 h.p. A car from 25 to 30 h.p. pays $10 a year. From 35 to 40 h.p., $15 per year. From 45 h.p. upwards, $20 per year." The automobilists have been willing to pay this tax, upon a guarantee that it would go into the state treasury, for the purpose of building good roads. In Ontario, we are still far from occupying the position we should, and greater energy in the matter of high way improvement is sadly needed.

Who that reads this can withhold approval of a system of state controlled highways? The farmers, who, throughout the Province lose millions of dollars a year in wasted time, wear and tear of vehicles and horse flesh from bad roads, must be convinced that a liberal provincial expenditure upon the construction and maintenance of highways would be the greatest boon that could be devised. And the town dwellers, the merchants, and others, would immensely benefit by the improvement in trade that would result from the whole countryside being provided with good roads that would bring the farmers over good roads to town twice or thrice, where he now struggles to town once, over muddy or rough bone-shaking highways.

MUST BEAR THE ILLS THEY HAVE.

The Conservatives — or a great many of them—in their desire to place the leadership of their party on a winning basis, rather placed the cart before the horse. They tried to oust every bush. The first putative successor. In this latter quest they have not met with much success. Winning Conservative leaders do not grow on every bush. The first portative successor to Mr. Borden has failed on a "try-out." Mr. McBride, premier of British Columbia, was regarded as the man from Galway, the rising hope of the party. But according to a newspaper correspondent at the Capital, he has been weighed and found wanting. This writer says:

> The appearance which Premier McBride made at the Borden dinner last Friday night was a distinct disappointment and is still the chief subject of discussion among Conservative members. His visit to Ottawa has been looked forward to with great interest, and after he arrived his picturesque appearance attracted a great deal of favourable attention. In the lobbies of Parliament there was a crowd following and a tendency to speak of him as the future prime minister of Canada. This was before the dinner. The announcement that he was to be one of the speakers credited in every opposition member being present, with the exception of the faithful band who had to stay by the House and the unfaithful French eight from Quebec, who have ceased herding with Mr. Borden's bunch. Both Liberal and Conservative correspondents were among the guests.
>
> Mr. McBride maintained the splendid reputation he has acquired for distinguished appearance. One of the newspaper correspondents declared "He had Laurier beaten for hair, and that is going some." He showed up, big and hearty, as healthy as an Esquimo. He was the figure of the function.
>
> When he began to speak, his stock started down. The audience was friendly. The opportunity was unique. A man with a message could not have asked for a better chance to lay the foundation of his political fortunes. But the general verdict was that Mr. McBride fell down. He sidestepped an invitation extended by Mr. Borden to leave British Columbia and come to Ottawa as one of the opposition leader's lieutenants. That was about all that he did and that could have been done better. On the other hand, Mr. Borden excelled his usual speaking performance. He made a good fighting speech. The contrast made by the two men will probably be fatal to Mr. McBride's ambitions to become opposition leader if he has such ambition.
>
> Last week a majority of the Conservative members of the House would have hailed with delight the announcement that Mr. McBride had decided to enter the Federal House. It may be safely said that there wouldn't be the same enthusiasm to-day, but as a Conservative member said this morning, "He is doing pretty well in his own little province and he had better stay where he is."

Mr. Borden's failure as a leader is conceded by his own party, and he is adding to his unfitness every day; he took a double stand on the naval question; he flew in the face of the traditions of his party in making opposition to reciprocity, a part of his policy. He is now going west to ride two horses; to try to placate the west, which wants less trade restriction, and at the same time not offend the east which wants more. But the Conservatives can't lose Mr. Borden. He is a fixture till a successor turns up or is turned up. Till then, they must bear the ills they have.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Montreal Herald bemoans the separation of the statue of Jeanne Mairne from its stone basis, and apply demands that no "stone be left unturned" to discover the perpetrators of the vandalism.

Margaret Anglin (or rather Mrs. Howard Hull) is not, says the Ottawa Free Press, only "the first actress born in the Canadian Parliament buildings." She is the only person born in the Speaker's apartments of the Canadian House of Commons.

The Montreal Herald, in its report of the horse show, says the most successful outsiders were Hon. J. R. Stratton and Hon. Clifford Sifton; and adds that there seems some connection between being a retired Liberal minister and ownership of first-class horses.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Fielding urge Hon. Geo. E. Foster to go to the Coronation as one of the parliamentary representatives of the Conservative party. Mr. Foster refuses to go because some of his Conservative friends have "made remarks" about him. It seems our Conservative friends have two opinions of each other, as they have two policies, in regard to reciprocity—one for the East and one for the West.

New Phases Of Constructive And Developmental Statesmanship

(Montreal Herald.)

The new programme of constructive development now announced from Ottawa can hardly have been issued as an answer to the Opposition's challenge to an election; there is too much of it, and it carries evidence of having been too long in process of elaboration, for that. But taking the political history of the Dominion for what it is, there are some things about the programme which make the Liberals feel easier in their minds if the Opposition are determined to force on an election this coming autumn. The construction of the Canadian Pacific taught us once for all that the people of Canada like a government that gets big things done. The same lesson has been learned more recently from the construction of the National Transcontinental. As we interpret the despatches, Mr. Graham is disposed, with the full backing of the Government, to commit the Liberal party definitely to several enterprises of prime importance, affecting, between them nearly all the provinces of the Dominion.

In Nova Scotia and New Brunswick there is still the problem of the Intercolonial. It is not a simple one, for there are those who object to increasing in any way the responsibilities of Parliament concerning it, there are those who want it to expand in its operations like any other railway, there are those who think it would be better leased or sold to a transcontinental line, there are those who will not hear of it being so disposed of, and there are those who want to let the Canadian Pacific, and soon the Grand Trunk Pacific, use its rails and compete for the business originating on its lines. What is a Railway Minister to do? Mr. Graham seems to have made up his mind. He will build some branches, where ordinary railway practice would appear to justify doing so. He will link up the main line with the Canadian Northern under a business bringing arrangement. And it is reported that will acquire, as branch lines, some privately owned properties, which are not doing well, but without which some important communities would be without a service, and which at present supply a certain amount of traffic to the Intercolonial that would, if the roads fell into other hands, be diverted to other lines.

Coming West, it is next proposed, by means of a gaurantee to help the Canadian Northern forge the last link in their transcontinental chain. They have their line completed from Port Arthur to the Rockies. The McBride Government is seeing them through to the British Columbia coast. They have a line from Ottawa to Quebec. A working arrangement with the Intercolonial will carry them to Halifax. In Nova Scotia they aready have a considerable milage. The hiatus is between Port Arthur and Ottawa, with Montreal, of course, as the main objective. The Herald's information is that the line is to be run between those of the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific, the expectation being that the opening up of the clay belt in Northern Ontario will make the enterprise well worth while. That this final linking up of the third transcontinental system is an affair of enormous interest for the country might go without saying. There are already abundant signs that it means for Montreal just what the growth of the other two great railway systems has meant. Ten years will undoubtedly suffice for the provision, on the plain between the Mountain and the Back River, of railway yards equal in importance and extent to any of those with whose magnitude we are now familiar.

In regard to the Hudson Bay road, Mr. Graham has yielded to the protestations of the West to the extent of agreeing to have the construction of the road undertaken by the Government. Rightly or wrongly, the feeling in the West is intensely hostile to private ownership of this road, which is the outcome of fierce agitation by the producing classes as against the existing railways. Most of those who want it, as a means of controlling the freight rates charged by the other railways, would, feel that the enterprise was worse than useless if the road should come to be controlled by those it was mean to control. The situation so created is one of great difficulty, and the trouble will not be all over when the road has been constructed. The choice will then be between Government operation and a lease under whose terms the best was be done to make the road serve the purpose of its creation. Meantime, those who know the feeling in the West must agree that the wisest course is being followed for the first stage.

It is also rather confidentially announced that an almost immediate beginning will be made in the improvement of the Welland Canal and on the Georgian Bay-Ottawa River Waterway —on both, because both will ultimately be necessary and because neither, apparently is ready to cede the place to the other.

Here, assuredly, is a programme of construction and development which might satisfy the largest appetite. The country will await with interest the amplification of the earliest announcements, for there must be many details that will call for inspection. At first glance one would say that a good ten years' work is outlined, with parts of its extending considerably beyond that period. Still, it is already eight years since we first heard of the Grand Trunk Pacific, and that great enterprise now draws close to the phase where construction ceases and operation begins. We are straightening out for a fresh start. But then we seem to be always doing that in this country, and the chances are we shall continue to be so for a long time yet.

PROTECTION AND RECIPROCITY.

(Toronto Star)

Originally introduced in Canada as an expedient, and defended upon grounds of expediency, protection has gradually established itself as a sort of religious creed. The founders of the N. P. desired freer trade with the United States, and argued that the N. P. would force the United States to give us reciprocity. Mr. Henry Chaplin, an English protectionist, is still in this stage of belief. He thinks that Great Britain ought to have a protective tariff in order that she may have a leverage for the negotiation of reciprocity agreements with other countries. The argument is that if you have protection you have something to offer in return for free admission to other markets; but under free trade, you have already given away everything, and have, therefore, no basis for bargaining.

It is not necessary to inquire whether this contention is sound, for in Canada at least it has been heartlessly abandoned by protectionists. They now declare that a protective tariff must not be used for the purpose of negotiating a reciprocity agreement, no matter how good the terms may be. By the present agreement, comparatively small reductions are made in Canadian duties, and very large reductions in the duties on Canadian products entering the United States. Duties are removed or brought down to a common level. So far as agricultural products are concerned, our long standing complaint against the United States is removed. If a British Government could obtain similar advantages by negotiation with any foreign power, it would be regarded as a triumph of diplomacy.

The explanation of the uproar of the last three months must be that protectionists, abandoning the more reasonable ground that was taken by the authors of the N. P., have fallen in love with the restriction for its own sake. They have actually convinced themselves that the prosperity and even the existence, of Canada, depend upon the barriers to trade erected along the frontiers of Canada and the United States. Free traders are ridiculed for making a fetish of free trade. In this country restriction and taxation are set up as objects of worship.

New tariffs imposing high duties have been enforced in Canada on the day after they were announced, and it was not contended that the liberties of the people were endangered by this summary proceeding. But it appears that while burdens may be imposed without consulting the people, it is a crime against public liberty to take them off after three months' discussion. The farmer is oppressed because he is to be at liberty to sell more of his products in the United States. The consumer is oppressed because he is to be allowed to buy food grown in the United States. Mr. Borden, like an inverted Hampden, proclaims himself the dauntless champion of taxation, the guardian of Canada, who will save the country from the awful consequences of selling wheat and barley to the detested foreigner. That protectionist practice should have led sane men to offer such arguments is an awful warning to Mr. Chaplin and other English tariff reformers.

"THE BLACK CROSS"

By OLIVE M. BRIGGS

"Yes," said Ritter, "He is gone, and the door is closed; we are alone."

"Then put your head lower," whispered the girl, "and I will tell you. Perhaps, when you—know!"

"Go on," said the Kapellmeister, "I am here, child, close to you, and no one shall hurt you. Don't tremble."

"Do you see my hands?" said the girl, "Look at them. They are stained with blood—stained with— Ah, you draw away!"

"Go on," said Ritter, "you drew away yourself, child. What do you mean? What could you do with a hand like that, a rose leaf? Ha!" He laughed and clasped it with his the pillow. Then she went on:

"You are not a Russian," said the girl, "so you can't understand. When one is not Russian—to be an anarchist, to kill—that is terrible, unpardonable! But with us—my father is Meskarpin," she whispered, "you have heard of him—yes? The great General, the friend of the Tsar! And I am the Countess Kaya, his—his daughter!"

Her voice broke, and she was silent for a moment, leaning against the pillow. Then she went on:

"There is a society," she whispered "in St. Petersburg. It is called 'The Black Cross'; and whosoever is a member of that order must obey the will of the order; and when they pass judgment, the sentence must be fulfilled. They are just and fair. When a man, an official, has sinned only once, they pass him by; but when he has committed crime after crime, they take up his case and deliberate together, and he is judged and condemned. Sometimes it is the sentence of death, and then—" she hesitated "and we draw lots. The lot fell to — me."

She shut her eyes, and as the Kapellmeister watched her face, he saw that it was convulsed in agony, and the boyish look was gone.

"He was warned," she whispered—"three times he was warned, according to rule, and I—I killed him." The lines deepened in her face, and she half rose, leaning on her elbow, staring straight ahead of her as though at a vision, her lips moving:

"In the name of the Black Cross I do now pledge myself an instrument in the service of Justice and Retribution. On whomsoever the choice of Fate shall fall, I vow the sentence of death shall be fulfilled, by mine own hands if needs be, without weakness, or hesitation, or mercy; and if by any untoward chance this hand should fail, I swear—I swear, before the third night shall have passed, to die instead—to die—instead."

She struggled up on the bed, kneeling.

"I killed him!" she cried in a whisper. "I killed him! I see him lying on the floor there—on his face! There—there! Look! With his arms outstretched and the blood in a pool!"

She was leaning forward over the edge of the bed, staring with her eyes dilated, pointing into the shadows and shuddering. "Don't you see him—there?"

The Kapellmeister was white and his hands shook. He took her strongly by the shoulders. "Lie down," he said, "You are dreaming. There is nothing there. Look me in the eyes! I tell you there is nothing there, and your hands are not stained. Lie down."

Kaya gazed at him for amoment in bewilderment: "Where am I?" she said, passing her hand over her eyes. "Who are you?" I thought you were — Why no, I must have been dreaming, as you say."

"The hunger has made you delirious," said the Kapellmeister: "Look me in the face as I tell you, and I will smooth away those lines from your forehead. Sleep now—sleep!"

The girl sank reluctantly back on the pillows and the Kapellmeister sat beside her, his gaze fixed on hers with a strained attention, unblinking. He was passing his hand over her forehead slowly and lightly, scarcely touching her: "Sleep—" he said, "Sleep."

Her lids wavered and drooped slowly, and she sighed and stirred against the pillows, turning on her side.

"Sleep—" he said.

The garrett was still, and only the moonbeams danced on the floor. The boys in the eaves slept with their heads tucked under their wings, and the spiders were motionless in the midst of the webs; only the water was splashing below.

The Kapellmeister watched the girl on the pallet. He sat leaning back with his arms folded, his head in the shadow, and his face was grim. "She will sleep now," he said to himself, "sleep until I wake her. She is young and strong, and there is no harm done; but she has had some fearful shock; and it has shaken her like a slender birch struck by a storm. I will send my old Marta, and she will look after her—poor little bird!"

Kaya lay on her side with her face half turned to the pillow; her cheek was flushed and her breath came gently through the arch of her lips. Her curls were like a halo about her, and her right hand lay on the blanket limp, small and white with the fingers relaxed.

"I am getting to be an old man," said the Kapellmeister to himself, "and my heart is seared; but if I had a daughter, and she looked like that—I would throw over the Tsar and all his kingdom. The great Juggernaut of Autocracy has gone over her, and her wings are bruised. It is only her voice that can save her now."

He rose to his feet slowly, and in the dim light of the moon his hair was silvered, and he seemed weary and worn. He stood by the pallet, looking down at the slim, still figure for a moment; and his hand stole out and touched a strand of her hair. Then he covered her gently. "Sleep," he said, "Sleep!" And he turned and went out, closing the door.

CHAPTER XVII.

"It is only a week that I have been ill, Marta? It seems like a month."

"A week and a day, Fraulein; but you are better now, and to-morrow, the Doctor says you shall go out on the promenade and smell the rose buds."

Kaya was half lying, half seated, on the pallet, with her hands clasped behind her head; she was dressed in a blue gown, worn and shabby, but spotlessly neat, and her throat and arms were bare. "But how soon can I sing, Marta? Did he say when? Did you hear him?"

The old nurse sat by the bed-side, knitting and counting her stitches aloud to herself from time to time.

"One—two — four — seven!" she mumbled, "Sing, Fraulein? Ah, who can tell! You are weak yet."

"No," said Kaya, "I am strong: see my arms. I can stand up quite well and walk about the room with the help of your shoulder; you know I can, Marta."

The old woman gave her a glance over her spectacles: "Seven—ten!" she repeated, "if it were your spirit, Fraulein, you would be Samson himself; but your body—" She shook her head: "Na, when the master comes, ask him yourself. It is he who has talked with the Doctor, not I."

"He is coming now," said Kaya. "I hear his step on the stairs, quick and firm like his heat. Don't you hear it, Marta?— Now he has stopped and is talking with the miller." She leaned back on the pillows and her eyes watched the door.

"Eh, Fraulein! Nein, I hear nothing! What an ear you have—keen as a doe's when the wind is towards her! At home, in the forest, where the deer ran wild and they come in the dawn to the Schneide to graze—whisch! The crackle of a leaf and they are off flying, with their muzzles high and their eyes wild. Na! I hear nothing, but the wheel below grinding and squeaking, and the splash of the water.

"He is coming up the stairs," cried Kaya, "open the door for him, Marta, and let the Kapellmeister in."

The old woman rolled up her knitting slowly: "It was just at the turn o the chain," she grumbled, "and I have lost a stitch in the counting. The master can come in by himself."

Kaya gave a gleeful laugh like a child, and slipped her feet to the floor: "Oh, you cross Marta, you dear humbug!" she cried, "As if you wouldn't let the master walk over you and never complain! Go on with that wonderful muffler of his, and I will let him in myself. No, don't touch me! Let me go alone and surprise him."

She steadied herself with her hand to the bed-post, then caught at the chair: "Don't touch me—Marta! I am quite strong—now, and able to—walk!"

A knock came on the door, and she made a little run forward and opened it, clinging to the handle.

"Du himmlische Gute!" exclaimed the Kapellmeister, "if the bird isn't trying its wings! Behute, child!" He put a strong arm about her, looking down at her sternly and shaking his head: "Do you call this obedience?" he said grimly, "I thought I told you not to leave that couch alone—eh?"

"Don't scold me," said Kaya, "I feel so well to-day, and there is something leaping in my throat. Herr Kapellmeister—it is begging to come out; let me try to sing, won't you?" She clung to his arm and her eyes pleaded with him: "Don't scold me. You have put 'Siegfried' off twice now because you had no bird. Let me try to-day."

"Tschut—" he said, "Bewahre! Marta, go down and bring up her soup. When your cheeks are red, child, and the shadows are gone from under your eyes, then we will see."

Kaya pushed away his arm gently, and there was a firmness about her chin as of a purpose new-born. "You have paid for my lodging, and my food, Herr Kapellmeister," she said, proudly, "you have sent me your own servant, and she has been to me like a foster mother. You have cared for me, and the Doctor and the medicines are all at your cost." She steadied herself, still rejecting his hand, "And I—" she said, "I have earned nothing; I have been like a beggar. If you will not let me sing, Herr Kapellmeister, then—"

He looked at her for a moment in a wounded way and his brow darkened: "Well—?" he said.

"Then you must take away your servant and the Doctor, and — and your kindness," said Kaya, bravely, "and let me starve again."

"You are proud, eh? You remember that you are a Countess?" The Kapellmeister laughed harshly.

"I am not a Countess any more," said Kaya, "but I am proud. Will you let me sing?"

"When you are strong again and your voice has come back," he returned dryly, "you can sing, and not before. As for paying your debts—There is time enough for that. Now, will you have the goodness to return to the couch, Fraulein or do you prefer to faint on the floor?"

Kaya glanced at the stern face above her, and her lip quivered: "You are angry," she said, "I have hurt you. I didn't mean to hurt you."

"The Doctor will be in presently" continued Ritter coldly, "I daresay he can restore you, if you faint, better than I. Perhaps you will obey his orders as you reject mine." There was something brutal in the tone of his voice that stung the girl like a lash. She turned and tottered back to the couch, the Kapellmeister following, his arms half extended as if to catch her if she fell; but she did not fall. He was still frowning and he seemed moody, distraught. Shall I cover you?" he said.

Kaya put out her hand timidly and touched his: "You have been so kind to me," she whispered, "every day you have come, and when I was delirious I heard your voice; and Marta said me afterwards how you sat by the bed and quieted me, and put me to sleep. Don't be angry." All of a sudden she stooped and put her lips to his sleeve.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

"WELL," sighed the little stenographer lady, as she passed me a newspaper indicating three tiny lines which set forth the portentious fact that Theodosia So-and-So's parents were announcing her engagement to Roderick Bingham Such-and-Such,—tiny as it looks to us I've no doubt the agate type stands out like seventy-point headlines done in scarlet to Roderick and Theodosia—"I hope this will teach me a lesson."

"About what?" we naturally inquired.

"That it's time persons of your advanced age were thinking about their futures," suggested the wants-to-be cynic.

Molly apparently didn't even hear this interpolation.

"Well, my dears," she answered us, "Theodosia, as you know, is an old chum of mine and last time she came to visit me she told me all about her love affairs and asked my advice. There were two men and she said she wanted my honest opinion of them. And what do you think I did? I actually gave it. I told her I didn't see how she could have a moment's doubt. I said that one of them was a nice, clean looking, clean minded, whole souled, honest young chap that any girl would be proud to have love her, and that the other was a perfect pill. I said he was the most totally and thoroughly uninteresting man I ever talked to, that his looks made me think of an undertaker, that I knew he was the kind of man that would never expect her to stray from her own hearth once she was married, and that I'd heard he was terribly close.

"Well, what of it," we queried. "Are you sorry she took your advice?"

"But she didn't," wailed Molly, aroused by her own graphic recital of her advice to the full horror of her offense. "She didn't; Roderick is the pill. How shall I ever face her again? She'll never forgive me and once we promised each other that whoever was married first would have the other for a bridesmaid, and I never was a bridesmaid, and now I don't suppose I'll ever be one."

"Oh, cheer up," urged the lady-who-always-knows-somehow. "She'll forget it."

"Sure," said the cynic. "Anyhow she probably just thinks you said all that because you were jealous and wanted to go in for Roderick what's-his-name yourself."

This time Molly heard the cynic sufficiently to cast a withering glance in his direction.

"Maybe she will forget it," she accepted the lady's comfort, "but anyhow I'll never give anyone advice about love affairs again. I think people just ask it so they can have the pleasure of not taking it. I won't express an honest opinion of any man to a girl even if he's only called on her once, because it's just my luck that if I do the next thing I know she'll be marrying him and hating me because I said he was a pill.

"Hereafter when anyone insists on my telling them what I think I'll always say, 'He seems like a very nice man, but I don't really feel that I know him well enough to judge.'"

"Ruth," said the want-to-be-cynic, "tell Molly you have discovered a tender feeling in your heart for me and you'd like to know her honest opinion of me."

"Ruth," said the little stenographer lady, "you wouldn't force me to break my good resolutions so soon?"

Tired In Body and in Mind

Worn Out by the Monotonous Indoor Life of Winter

Spring Finds the Blood Weak and the System Run Down—Vigor is Restored by

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food

Just at the time when the buds are bursting and the birds are singing merrily in the treetops, many people feel most keenly the debilitating and enervating effects of indoor winter life.

The blood is so thin and watery that it fails to supply nutrition to the nervous system and to the vital organs. You feel tired, weak and discouraged, appetite fails, digestion is impaired, energy and ambition are lacking, and strange depressing feelings come over you.

But nature has provided certain restoratives to be used at this time of year to form new, rich blood and create new nerve force. These elements are found in condensed and easily assimilated form in Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Thousands of men and women have learned to escape this spring depression and weakness and discouragement by using this great restorative.

Vitality is increased, strength and confidence return, buoyancy is felt in every movement of the body, pallor and weakness and disease give place to the glow of health and vigour of mind and body.

Dr. Chase's Nerve food, the great spring tonic and restorative, 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

SLEEPLESSNESS

Its Cause and Remedy

Do you know what it is to lie awake nights, fidgety, restless, tossing about, counting 100 backwards, or sheep jumping over a fence, all in a vain endeavour to lose yourself in slumberland, and get the rest which you so much need.

No one, unless they have been troubled with insomnia, can begin to realise it's horrors and how wearing it is.

In nine cases out of ten it is simply a case of overworked nerves or derangement of the digestive system. Thousands of such cases are being cured by Vinol. As proof we quote from a letter recently received from Marion, Ind.

"I could not sleep nights, was run-down, nervous, had no appetite and was all discouraged. Vinol made me well after all other remedies had failed. I sleep splendidly, and have gained in strength." Mrs. L. E. Heinlein. (We guarantee this testimonial to be genuine.)

We ask every person who suffers from sleeplessness or who is nervous or run-down to try a bottle of Vinol with the understanding that their money will be returned if it does not help them. Vinol contains no drugs or oil, and agrees with everyone. McDermid and Jury, corner George and Charlotte streets; also Payne's drug store, corner George and Simcoe streets.

WHAT I WENT THROUGH

Before taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Natick, Mass.—"I cannot express what I went through during the change of life before I tried Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I was in such a nervous condition I could not keep still, My limbs were cold, I had creepy sensations, and I could not sleep nights. I was finally told by two physicians that I also had a tumor. I read one day of the wonderful cures made by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and decided to try it, and it has made me a well woman. My neighbors and friends declare it had worked a miracle for me. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is worth its weight in gold for women during this period of life. If it will help others you may publish my letter."—Mrs. NATHAN H. GERATON, 31 N. Main Street, Natick, Mass.

The Change of Life is the most critical period of a woman's existence. Women everywhere should remember that there is no other remedy known to medicine that will so successfully carry women through this trying period as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

If you would like special advice about your case write a confidential letter to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

INTERESTING LECTURE ON HYDRO ELECTRIC

undertaking, with the Ontario Government as the banker, as it were. The Province of Ontario financed the work, loaning the money as required on a cost basis; there was no revenue to the Government. The whole benefits were attained by the municipalities and in turn to the users of electric light and power.

The speaker referred to the inception of the scheme at a meeting of representatives of municipalities held in Berlin nine years ago. Boards of Trades, manufacturers and labour organizations sent representatives with a view of forming an association to devise ways and means of securing cheaper power. It was realized that a conservation of the natural resources of the province was necessary. The Liberal Government had realized this in connection with the timber of the province and had placed what was practically an export duty on timber not cut in the province. As a result saw mills and similar woodwork industries had sprung up everywhere in Ontario. The same policy had been carried out in regard to the manufacture of pulp wood into pulp. Yet again the same spirit of conservation of resources had been adopted by the Dominion Government in conserving the water supply, especially in regard to the Trent district and great credit must be given to that government for the policy they had adopted in making the streams navigable, preventing floods and creating a valuable source of power for the people. The speaker remarked that the water power of Ontario was the white coal area for the province and would have to be utilized if the industrial supremacy of Ontario was to be maintained. This had been the feeling of the municipalities whose representatives met at Berlin. The Legislature had heeded the appeal of the municipalities and legislation was enacted, a bill placed before the House and was now on the statute books—as far as its principles were concerned, he was pleased to say not a line of the original legislation had been changed. The work of the Commission had been a pleasure because of the cooperation of the people. Objection had been made at first that it was a scheme intended only for the benefit of the City of Toronto, but the speaker pointed out that the Commission had entered into contracts with Fort William, Ottawa and other municipalities in different parts of the province and it was felt that in a short time the number of municipalities doing business with the Commission would exceed one hundred. It was really a provincial undertaking and was not confined to or, for the benefit of, any one district.

There had been difficulties in the way. Thescheme was a novel and original one; new methods of power transmission had to be adopted but in spite of these things he was of the opinion that the project had been carried out expeditiously; in fact with some degree of haste. Its success had been based on the confidence of the people of the province in the Hydro-Electric Commission, in the project and in themselves.

Unless public men had the confidence of the people they could accomplish little good in the interests of the people. Canadians should have confidence in themselves and in their country, and he was certain that not even the most optimistic man or woman in the Dominion had the right conception of the riches and blessings this country would enjoy if the resources were made use of to the best advantage. The Hydro-Electric proposition was going to mean a great deal for the province. Ontario had many advantages—lack of coal was the only disadvantage .The province had natural resources, raw material of all kinds, fertile lands and a thrifty earnest people naturally manufacturing and agricultural. All that was needed was confidence in these things. The object of the Hydro-Electric Commission was to supply power at cost and it was simply created to act as the transmitting agency between the producer and consumes.

The commission had been given somewhat drastic powers, being given authority to expropriate . any water powers ,plants and the product of water-power plants, within their jurisdiction. However, it was never intended that these powers should be used unfairly and the commission had never coerced, threatened or intimidated any private owners in furthering their power project. That Peterborough with all itsnatural advantages in the way of water powers should be one of the last municipalities in Ontario to apply for municipally-owned power, was to him, as a citizen of the Province, something that he regretted exceedingly.

Hon .Mr. Beck took up the situation at Hamilton at some length. Hamilton, which styled itself the electric city, had, before the event of the Hydro-Electric Commission, been seeking power at the rate of 10 and 12c. per kilowat hour, while in Toronto 8c. and 10c. were being charged. This high price was the result of company controlled power, the situation being in the hands of the Cataract Power Company.

The Minister of Power then dealt with the case of Ottawa, where the Commission had been asked to come to the assistance of the municipal power scheme of the city, and although power had to be purchased in Quebec, the result had been a reducing of the rate from 15c. per kilowat hour to 4 1-2c. in three years, and a saving of a quarter of a million dollars to the consumers. Peterborough was paying 10c. per kilowat hour or 7c. with the cash discount off. If Ottawa had power at the rate of 4 1-2 cents, there was no reason why Peterborough should not have the same advantage, and if Peterborough was not an electric city in the future, it was the fault of the citizens.

The object of the Commission, Hon. Mr. Beck explained, was to have one transmission system throughout the province to connect in the west as far as Windsor and Sarnia, to operate in the north and to reach Brockville, Prescot, Morrisburg and other towns in the east. The power should be a natural monopoly. The speaker did not believe in dual systems, either in telegraph, telephone or power business.

In London as the result of the Hydro-Electric Commission, power was being sold at 4 1-2 cents. If it was possible for London to carry power 120 miles from Niagara Falls and sell it at 4 1-2 cents why should the people of Peterborough with power at their own door have to pay 10c?

Dealing with the situation locally, Hon. Mr. Beck stated that when on the solicitation of Mr. Bradburn and the City Council, the Commission had been asked to go into the matter, he had asked the Seymour Power Company for a supply of power for Peterborough and other municipalities and had received an answer that the Seymour Power Company might be able to do business with the Commission after eighteen months. This, the speaker said, meant after they had entrenched thmselves by getitng control of the powers and of the consumption. It was business on their part, and the speaker contended that it was the policy of a company to get franchises on any terms at any price. In Lindsay, where Mr. Beck had taken up the matter for the town, the Seymour Power Company had at first refused to supply power, but afterwards when Mr. Beck had prepared a report advising the town to buy out the existing power company, the Seymour people had come to him and offered to supply the necessary power. This offer had been refused. Lindsay, the speaker said, had thrown off the yoke.

The Reading of the Report.

Hon. Mr. Beck said that he wanted to make clear a matter that had he had learned caused some trouble. When he came to Peterborough before and presented his report, he had no thought of being discourteous to the governing body, the Council and the Mayor, at whose request he had prepared the report. It was customary for him after he had checked such reports to forward them to the clerk of the municipality asking for them. Mr. Duggan, Peterborough's industrial commissioner, who had been most zealous and earnest in his attention to power had several times visited the office of the Commission and in this case had urged upon him to come down to Peterborough and address some of the citizens. He had decided at the last minute to come, had brought the report with him and had found a gathering of what he judged to be representative citizens, as vitally interested in the power question as he was himself and he had read the report. "If there has been any friction caused," remarked Mr. Beck, "I want to be blamed."

He did not think that the reading of the report had however done any real harm in affecting the city's power scheme generally.

Healey's Falls Power.

In regards to the power possibilities for Peterborough there were three still available, the Lakefield dam, the Otonabee Power Company's plant and Healey's Falls. As to the latter he had the authority to say that the Healey's Falls Power was available for the use of Peterborough. Furthermore there were applications from two companies who wished to operate Healey's Falls power under the direction of the Commission and at the rates set by the Commission. The advantage with the Otonabee Power Company's proposition was that it would do away with one of the existing companies, but Hon. Mr. Beck wanted bigger things for Peterborough. He wanted them to take hold of something bigger because they would require something bigger — he wanted to make electricity as common as water in every household. The services of the Commission 's engineers were available for the use of Peterborough and the Commission would pledge itself to advance the money necessary to transmit power on the usual terms enacted by the Commission that the loan should be paid back in thirty years.

Ald. Bradburn in moving a vote of thanks to Hon Mr. Beck said that the matter would be taken up with the assistance of Hon. Mr. Beck and the Commission, an da proposition would be submitted to the people.

Ald. Baller seconded the motion, which was enthusiastically carried.

The meeting was closed with cheers for the King and Hon. Mr. Beck.

IT IS NOT IN THE BLOOD

Medicine Taken Internally Cannot Cure Eczema—It is Caused by Germs

Eczema cannot be overcome by ordinary treatment and the old-fashioned way of dosing the system with drugs. Eczema is caused by a parasitic germ that bores into the skin. It is generally a contagious disease. Until the parasite is completely destroyed and removed eczema cannot be cured. Fully one-third of skin diseases are in the form of eczema.

We so thoroughly believe that Rexall Eczema Ointment will overcome eczema and allied skin ailments, that we unhesitatingly promise to promptly return the money paid us for it should it in any way be unsatisfactory to the user.

Because of its remarkable cleansing, antiseptic, germicidal, soothing and healing influence, Rexall Eczema Ointment has a very pronounced value in the treatment of skin diseases, especially where the form of ailment is of the chronic ,aggravating sort. We highly recommend it for the dry, scaly form or the weeping type, where there is a constant flow of ill-smelling excretion.

Rexall Eczema Ointment is very prompt in relieving pimples, blotches, skin discolourations, ringworm, acne, nettle rash, tetter, hives, ulcers, insect bites, and for healing sores and wounds. It is a pleasant smelling grayish-white ointment, and is very cleanly for use. Two sizes, 50c. and $1.00. Sold only at our store.—The Rexall Store, McDermid and Jury.

ASKED HIS OPINIONS.

Prof. Workman Compelled to State Religious Beliefs.

Montreal, May 11.—Yesterday afternoon's session in the case of libel brought by Prof. Workman against the Wesleyan Theological College was converted into a series of disquisitions on the Methodist belief. Dr. Workman was at first reluctant to state his views, but on Mr. Justice Weir pointing out that it was essential that he should declare himself on the various subjects touched upon in the allegations brought against him, he consented to reply to the questioning. No admission, however, could be secured from him that the views were at variance with the standards of Methodism.

Cross-questioned as to his creed, he maintained that the virgin birth was not a cardinal doctrine of Methodism and that he could not express an opinion on the matter. It is a question yet to be settled, he said.

He said on the doctrine of the atonement that the sacrifice of Calvary was not a propitiation or expiatory act.

He also said that he was not inclined to regard the portion of Scripture telling of Christ partaking of bread and fish after the resurrection as an allegory.

On the subject of original sin witness declared that children were born in innocence.

Asked whether the standards of Methodism permitted one to doubt whether Christ was God or not, Dr. Workman gave an affirmative answer.

CAUGHT AT THE EDGE.

Woman Saved From Plunging Over Niagara Falls.

Niagara Falls, N.Y., May 11.—Mrs. Elizabeth Hartley, an inmate of the Buffalo State Hospital for Insane, is dying at the Memorial Hospital from shock as the result of being rescued from death over the falls late yesterday afternoon.

Mrs. Hartley, who was not considered a dangerous patient at the Buffalo Asylum and was allowed entire freedom, came to this city to seek employment. She wandered through the reservation viewing the falls. After thinking the matter over she thought it would be "nice to die in that beautiful water," she said, and waded into the rapids a short distance above the cataract.

Park Policeman Harrington was nearby when the woman entered the water, rushed to the river bank, where the police are always in readiness for just such emergencies. Out into the rapids the woman waded until she lost her footing. Then she was swept out stream. She was within fifteen feet of the cataract when Harrington fastened the pike pole into her clothing and hauled her ashore. The woman was then in a semi-conscious condition, and she was rushed to the hospital.

This is only the second time in the history of the falls that a brink rescue has been recorded. The former one was the rescue of Amos Schweitzer of Toronto, who was saved after nearly an hour's fighting.

The property is located near the Linwood water tower, overlooking the Little Miami River, and affords an unobstructed view of the Ohio River and Ohio Valley. The only condition attached to the gift was that the city improve Principio street, as an approach to the park, which has been named the Ault park. Mr. Ault has notified Park Expert Kesler to let him know of other properties adapted for park purposes, as he plans to give these to the city.

Bell Co. Must Connect.

Toronto, May 11.—After an almost interminable discussion between the independent municipal and Bell Telephone companies over the question of long distance connections, and many hearings before the board of Railway Commissioners, Chairman Mabee put the matter in a nutshell yesterday afternoon.

In delivering judgment he said that the connections should be made with the independent and Bell switchboards, that a terminal or additional charge of 15 cents be made for each outgoing call from business originating on an independent line, that a record be kept of all such business and a monthly return be made to the board, and at the end of a year the board will determine whether the granting of such facilities at competing points is detrimental to the Bell Co.'s business, and if any compensating charges should be levied.

FINE SHOWING MADE BY PETERBOROUGH HORSES AT MONTREAL SHOW

The Montreal Gazette says:

Locally owned horses did well all along the line, each class having a Montreal steed among the first four. In the jumpers open class Mr. Ross H. Sims' Golden was third and W. F. Bodden's Billy fourth. In the lightweight saddle class W. T. Bodden's Blue Mouse was a good second only her bad manners keeping her out of first place, and as she is new to shows, this is easily accounted for. In fact, this local mare was picked by the experts to be good enough to compete in the big New York show, and her owner might well feel proud of her. George and May, a pair of dark browns, exhibited by John Stewart of Westmount, beat out such a well-known pair as My Pride and Premier, belonging to Hon. J. R. Stratton, for first honours in the pairs in harness class. Finally the Duchess of Marlborough and Lady Brilliant, exhibited by the King Edward Park Stables, came in for high commendation in the harness tandem class.

Of the outside exhibitors, the Hon J. R. Stratton was perhaps the most fortunate. None Nicer took a first for him in the lightweight saddle class, and in the tandems Lochryan Princess and Latest News also won him a blue ribbon. His My Pride and Premier, in the pairs, ran Mr. Stewart's entries close for second place.

The first class to be judged was the jumpers. Forty-four were entered but all of them did not turn up, there being not more than thirty-five in the ring. Competition was close and the jumping particularly good. Jos. Kilfour's Touraine was given first place with Lieut. W. B. Sifton's Flying Dutchman second. The two local horses already mentioned, Golden and Billy ,taking third and fourth, places, respectively.

Mr. C. Ed. Gudewill was fortunate in the horses to runabouts class, his two entries capturing first and second place. Fluffy, driven by H. H. Learmont, and Frills, with W. Grant in the carriage, were first and second, respectively. Kitty, the King Edward Park entry, driven by Mr Larendeau, was third, and W. H. Paul's Teddy, driven by himself, received the H. C.

None Nicer, exhibited by Hon. J. R. Stratton, pulled out ahead of the Blue Mouse in the lightweight saddle class, with Mr. Geo. Pepper's Swell third, and Hon. Clifford Sifton's Last Post fourth.

In the class for pairs in harness, George and May, Mr. John Stewart's entries, and My Pride and Premier, belonging to Hon. J. R. Stratton's pair seemed to be in a class by themselves, the judges calling for a little extra work from both of them before deciding the winner. The former was successful, the Stratton entry being placed second.

A bad accident was averted when the tandems came into the ring. Mrs. H. V. Meredith's entry, Tissington Glitter and Tissington Royalist, became, for a moment, unmanageable, and started to bolt, but were stopped before they had gone many yards. Hon. J. R. Stratton's entry was the popular, as well as the judge's choice here.

IN MEMORIAM.

In loving memory of little Orville Ausbin Griffin, who fell asleep in Jesus on Wednesday, May 11, 1910, aged 4 years, 9 months, 22 days.

Oh, sad and lonely is our home,
The long, long weary days,
Life seems but just a heavy load,
Since Orville went away.

In early youth God called him home.
We know His ways are best;
That up in Heaven our darling's safe
For ever with the blest.

But, ah, the empty aching void,
That's left within our home,
Since death's cold hand was laid upon
Our Orville for the tomb.

We loved him, yes, we loved him;
But Jesus loved him more,
And so He sweetly called him
To yonder shining shore.

The pearly gates were opened,
A gentle voice said come,
And with farewells unspoken
He calmly entered home.

There was an angel band in heaven
That was not quite complete,
So God took our little Orville
To fill the vacant seat.

MOTHERS' DAY

A mother's love is, indeed, the golden link that binds youth to age, and he is still but a child, however time may have furrowed his cheek, or silvered his brow, who can yet recall, with softened heart, the fond devotion, or the gentle chidings, of the best friend that God ever gives us. —(Boyce).

Miss Anna Jarvis, 2031 North 12th street, Philadelphia, is the founder of Mothers' Day. The purpose of Mothers' Day is to have a simultaneous observance in every part of the world for filial reverence. The memorial badge is a white flower—the white carnation by preference.

COMBINED ATTACK

Enemies of Reciprocity Are Heard at Washington—Speaker Assails Papers Using the Associated Press.

MANUFACTURERS HEARD

Washington, May 11.—Vicious assaults on the Canadian reciprocity bill marked yesterday's hearing on that measure by the Senate finance committee. Farmers from the border states, fishermen from Gloucester, Mass., manufacturers of wire cloth for papermaking, and manufacturers of book, wrapping and news print paper all poured forth hottest against the bill.

Probably the greatest outburst occurred when former Governor John Strange of Wisconsin introduced, as representing wrapping paper manufacturers and the Boards of Trade of Neenah and Menasha, Wis., addressed the committee. He swerved from criticism of the bill to attack the American Publishers' Association and its related organization, the Associated Press, until finally Senator Penrose asked him to limit his remarks to his specific objection to the bill.

Mr. Strange characterized the bill as a "backwardly" measure and as lacking love of country, and brought forth at the demand of "the greatest trust in the world."

He said that Congress would not be in session yesterday considering the bill "if it had not been for this combination in restraint of trade."

"When a man who occupies an exalted position listened to such demands for fear of failure of re-election, rather than to the welfare of his nation, it is time to stop," he exclaimed. "Why should the Secretary of State be influenced to become an auxiliary to the purchasing department of the newspaper trust of the country?" he asked.

"To what trust do you refer?" enquired Senator Stone.

"The newspaper trust, the most vicious in the world," responded the witness.

"Well, you manufacturers have an association?" suggested Mr. Stone.

"It is only social, like the lawyers," responded Mr. Strange. "It is not to control prices, but is for the purpose of defence."

The witness contended that the "purpose of the alleged newspaper trust was to monopolize news through the incorporated Associated Press."

Judge Charles F. Moore of New York, for the book manufacturers, characterized the measure as "a sterilized variety of reciprocity that really does not reciprocate."

J. T. Carey, president of the International Brotherhood of Paper Workers, and Barnard Benson, of Kalamazoo, Mich., opposed the bill on behalf of paper mill workers.

Guy Cunningham and Thomas J. Carroll of Gloucester, Mass., filed a brief in opposition to the bill on behalf of the fish industry.

Frank W. Cabel of New York, on behalf of the wire cloth manufacturers, told the committee that they would be seriously injured by their patrons, the American paper manufacturers, losing trade.

LEVEE STICKS.

Chairman of Toronto Board of Education Will Not Resign.

Toronto, May 11.—Although sharply criticized in Judge Winchester's report, Chairman Levee of the Board of Education refuses to resign.

The report, which was read at a special meeting yesterday, was couched in direct language. It stated that in the opinion of his honor, the charges made by Saturday Night had been sustained by the evidence, and, moreover, that promises made by Mr. Levee as to generous melon-cutting operations for the benefit of fortunate holders of Slocum shares were, to say the least, rather more optimistic than past earning records justified. The merits of the medicine itself were not entered into.

After hearing Secretary W. C. Wilkinson read the voluminous report, Trustee Fairbairn was seized with a bright idea. Mr. Levee should resign—very simple solution. Trustee Dr. Noble thought so too, and seconded the motion, which went so far as to propose the instant appointment of a successor. It looked like a landslide for a minute, but the chairman resolutely declined to offer himself for the obsequies. Could he be forced to do so? Nobody knew, save Mr. Levee himself, and he was quite positive that he could not be.

An opinion from the board's solicitor will be asked.

EGYPT NEEDS RULER.

Constitutional Government a Failure, Says Gorst.

London, May 11.—Sir Eldon Gorst, the British agent and consul-general in Egypt, in his report on Egyptian affairs, which has been issued as a Parliamentary paper, frankly acknowledges that the efforts made to develop self-government have been disappointing. The legislative council and the general assembly, he says, have become mere instruments of Nationalist agitation against the occupation. They seek to render the business of the Government impossible.

"The conclusion to be drawn," says Sir Eldon, "is that the policy of ruling this country in co-operation with native Ministers at the present time is incompatible with that of encouraging so-called representative institutions."

The British agent adds:

"We have to make the Egyptians understand that the Governments do not intend to allow themselves to be hustled into going further or faster in the direction of self-government than they consider to be in the interests of the Egyptian people as a whole. Until this elementary lesson has been thoroughly learned, no proposals looking to the further developing of the legislative council can be usefully entertained."

W.F.M.S. In Session.

Chatham, May 11.—The ladies of the Women's Foreign Missionary Society of Western Canada for the Presbyterian Church in conference here, have decided to reject the basis of union proposed by the foreign missionary committee of the church for the home and foreign missionary societies. Objection is made to the union on three points, first, in reference to the proposed new name for the amalgamated society, second, the manner in which the estimates are proposed to be made for the different branches of missionary work, and third, the proposed manner in which the field will be covered by the united association.

The ladies of the foreign society prefer their estimates shall be made up by the missionaries and officers of their society in the mission field, instead of by the church at home, and they also think that the work among the heathen of foreign lands should be kept entirely separate from the schemes of the church, just as it is at present.

HOUSE TO ADJOURN

Sir Wilfrid Makes Announcement in Commons—No Session from May 23 to July 18—Does not Want to Leave Burden on Colleagues.

CIVIL SERVICE

Ottawa, May 11.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier announced in the Commons yesterday that Parliament would adjourn from May 23 to July 18. The fact that he had decided upon these dates after consultation with the leader of the Opposition was stated last week.

The Premier said that ten days ago the leader of the Opposition had drawn the attention of the House to the approaching Imperial Conference and the coronation of the King, and had alluded to certain rumors that he (the Premier) might not go to England for these events. Accordingly Mr. Borden had made three suggestions regarding the course which might be pursued in order to make possible the attendance of the Premier. The first of these was that the House should continue sitting, second, that Parliament should prorogue after completing its business, and third, that there should be an adjournment, the House previously voting sufficient supply to carry over the period of adjournment.

With regard to the second suggestion the Premier said it would be convenient to have the House prorogue with no part of the work undone; however, there still remained work to do.

As to the first suggestion there were two or three precedents. In 1894 Sir John Thompson, while Premier, went to Paris to take part in the negotiations regarding pleagic sealing; in 1897 Sir Wilfrid Laurier himself had gone to England to attend the celebration of the jubilee of Queen Victoria; and again in 1897 he had left the House in session to attend the Imperial Conference.

In each of these cases, said Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the business of the House was practically at an end. This year he had felt somewhat unduly to leave such a heavy burden on his colleagues; however they had undertaken to take care of the work, and he had, therefore, consented to absent himself, leaving the work to be done in their hands.

With regard to Mr. Borden's third suggestion he agreed that there should be an adjournment in order to allow members to attend the coronation.

The question then arose as to what time the House might adjourn. He had thought it might sit until the end of May, but it had been represented to him that there were two holidays during the last week of May, Victoria Day and Ascension Day, so on the whole he considered that it would be well to adjourn on May 23, and meet again on July 18. Meanwhile the House would go on with the session, and try to advance legislation as far as possible until May 23.

There remained the question of supply, said the Premier. After consultation with members on the other side of the House, it had been agreed that money should be voted to carry on until Sept. 1. Some supplies would have to be voted entire, such as the expenses of the coronation contingent, the festival of the Empire, and the annuities to Indians, which are under treaty obligation.

There was an animated discussion over Mr. Paterson's bill providing that clerks three years in the outside customs service could be transferred to the inside service. The Opposition thought that this provision would discriminate against men long in the service, especially if their politics did not suit the Government. There was also a discussion of the salaries of collectors of customs in large cities. Mr. Pateson said the Montreal collectors got $4,500 a year, and that Toronto would soon be advanced to that figure.

Mr. Crosby complained that the Halifax collector got but $3,500 a year, the same figure that was paid at Confederation.

The steamship subsidies were also discussed. The Opposition criticised the vote for the Australian and New Zealand subsidy, on the ground that there was more business from those ports to Canada than from Canada there. Sir Wilfrid said he defended the subsidy on patriotic and imperial grounds.

Mr. Lewis introduced a bill to amend the criminal code by the insertion of various provisions designed to impose various penalties for certain offences, which, in the opinion of the member, ought to be brought within the scope of the criminal laws of the Dominion.

They were: That a bank director is guilty of an offence, who makes a false statement as to a bank's affairs, whether he knows it to be false or not; that a bank official is guilty of an offence who accepts a loan from a bank of a bank director; that a director of a bank or other corporation is guilty of an offence if he assists in what is commonly described as a stock-watering question; that a director who makes a loan on the stock of a mining company not listed, is guilty of an offence, punishable by imprisonment for a period not exceeding five years; that in future it will be an offence against the laws for banks to compel clerks to work more than eight hours a day with one hour for luncheon, except in the case of tellers, on the day when the monthly returns are made up.

In commenting on his last proposal Mr. Lewis said that as the banks grew more prosperous they became more miserly, and that there were hundreds of young men being worked to death through the Dominion, for salaries ranging from $300 to $400 per annum.

A BLOODY BATTLE

Insurrectos Win Juarez After a Hard Fight in Which Sixty-five People Were Killed—Navarro a Prisoner.

MADERO'S POSITION

Ciudad Juarez, Mexico, May 11.—This little bullet-riddled city to-day is the provisional capital of Mexico, and Francisco I. Madero, jr., provisional president, and his staff have taken possession after winning the bloodiest battle of the Mexican revolution.

In a corner room of the barracks in which for two days he held out against the fire of the rebels, Gen. Juan Navarro, the federal commander, is a captive, having surrendered yesterday with almost his entire garrison of several hundred men. His face is sunken, his head is bowed, and he does not talk, for the bitter sting of defeat has disheartened him.

In contrast, in another part of the town, is Francisco I. Madero, jr., the conqueror, surrounded by members of his family and his staff, joyous, exultant and flushed with victory; yet ready, he says, to make peace with the Mexican Government if it is disposed to deal frankly and sincerely with the revolutionists, and without such vague promises as "President Diaz's manifesto contains."

All the dead are being buried today. A conservative estimate of physicians as well as of insurrecto leaders who surveyed the fighting puts the federal dead at nearly fifty and the rebel loss at about fifteen, with a total of nearly 250 wounded on both sides.

Gen. Madero, who arrived yesterday afternoon at the corrall where the Federal prisoners are quartered, made an address full of sympathy and encouragement.

"You fought for Gen. Diaz," he said at the conclusion of his speech, "because you had to, because you were a part of that system which we are trying to dissolve. In a few days perhaps peace will be restored. You soon will be free. If the war is to be continued you can have your choice of being paroled or joining the army of liberation. In the meantime, we shall treat you as brothers, not as foes."

Orders were being issued by Gen. Pasqual Orizaco all afternoon to guard streets and houses to prevent looting. Gen. Orizaco is said to have shot two men he caught trying to steal.

Gen. Navarro tried about noon yesterday to arrange an armistice, but the rebels would accept nothing except immediate surrender.

The grey-haired general stood in the doorway of the barracks and received Col. Garibaldi. Raoul Madero, a brother of the rebel leader, dashed forward with his gun pointed at Navarro ready to shoot if Garibaldi was hit. Federals and insurrectos alike, however, withheld their fire while the surrender was being arranged.

The federals in their humiliation tore off their silver caps and uniforms and under guard of the rebels walked dejectedly in their underclothing down the street to the corral. They numbered about five hundred. Last night it was reported that 150 of them had taken the oath of allegiance to Gen. Madero and will join his forces.

The amount of ammunition in Juarez is beyond the expectations of Madero. While he still wants peace, the condition will have to be broader, as he will now be in a position to recruit thousands.

The insurrectos now have two mortars, three machine guns and two field pieces.

RENDERED VALUABLE SERVICE AT THE BRIDGEWORKS FIRE

A Number of Citizens Ably Assisted the Firemen. Their Work Appreciated by the Chief of the Fire Department

At the fire of the old bridge works yesterday morning Chief Howard and members of the Fire Brigade received considerable assistance from a number of persons who volunteered their services, for which the firemen, and the Chief, are very grateful.

Mr. Gen. Hurtubise of the C. G. E. Co., and Mr. Archie Barbeau of the Peterborough Fuel and Cartage Co., have, on more than one occasion, rendered valuable assistance to the brigade.

Mr. Hurtubise was a fireman on the Ottawa Fire Department for a number of years. Chief Howard says that he is one of the best drilled men in the Province, therefore his assistance at a fire is very acceptable. The night of the Bridge Works fire Mr. Hurtubise and Mr. Barbeau were placed in charge of a section. They were also assisted by Mr. Jas. Le Bar and Mr. Sturgeon and a number of there, whose names the Chief was unable to procure, but nevertheless was very grateful for their valuable services.

Don't forget the performances on Saturday, matinee and Saturday evening at the Grand Opera by the Toronto Rowing Club Minstrels. The company numbers fifty—ten end-men and an orchestra of ten. he first part includes five end men, songs, solos and ballads. The chorus is the best on the road to-day. The Rowing Club played at the Royal Alexandra heatre and Grand Opera House, Toronto, and other western cities, to packed houses, which they well deserved. he second part, which consists of buck and wing dancing, comic sketches, and Vic. Lewis, late Interlocutor with Al. Field's Minstrels, in impersonation, which are great. Big street parade, with Band, at 11.30 a.m.

MARKET REPORTS.

Liverpool and Chicago Wheat Futures Close Higher—Live Stock—Latest Quotations.

LIVERPOOL, May 10.—Wheat opened easy, ½d to ¾d lower, with the principal weakness in near months; sympathy with decline in America and weakness in Winnipeg, together with the decline in Buenos Ayres yesterday. Following the opening, shorts covered freely, together with speculative support in July and the market became firm, with offers light. Support in the distant months was attributed to sympathy, and on rumors of continued dry weather in Southwestern Europe, and a revival of continental demand.

CHICAGO, May 10.—Hot winds in Oklahoma and Kansas helped to send wheat up to-day. Private thrisuit Southern Russia had a similar effect, and so did the notion that the rainfall in the spring crop belt on this side of the Canadian line was inadequate. Firmness prevailed at the close, which was ⅝c to ¾c to ⅞c above last night. The day's trading left corn with a net gain of ⅝c to 1c to 1⅛c; oats of ⅝c to ⅞c advance, and hog products more expensive by 5c to 60c.

Montreal Grain and Produce.

MONTREAL, May 10.—Business in Manitoba spring wheat over the cable was dull, but there continues to be a fair inquiry for oats from foreign buyers, and, as bids were in line in some cases, further sales were made for June-July shipment. The local market was easier for oats, and prices are ½c per bushel easier. Round lots of No. 2 Canadian western, for May delivery, afloat, were offered at 40½c, but the demand was slow. There was some demand from foreign buyers for winter wheat flour, but the bids were 5d per sack out of line. The local and country trade in spring wheat flour is fair, and prices show no change. Demand for bran and shorts is good.

Oats—Canadian western, No. 2, 40c to 40½c, car lots, ex-store; extra No. 1 feed, 41½c to 41¾c; No. 2 C.W., 40c to 41¼c; No. 3 local white, 40c to 40½c; No. 2 local white, 39½c to 39¾c; No. 4 local white, 38½c to 39c.

The Little Singer.

He was a little singer.
He sang a little lay,
A little song of happiness
To cheer us on our way.
He bade us stop together
And trample down the weeds.
A sturdy call to cheerfulness
Ran through the little song.

He bade us love the sunshine,
He bade us scorn the rain,
And when he'd sung his verses through
He sang them all again.
If he had other talents
He always kept them hid.
He sang his song of happiness,
And that was all he did.

Play Days.

Jus' feelin' round when skies are blue
An' wintry snows are almost through,
When sunshine lingers for a day
With gentle promises of May,
A-Summin' for the robin's trill
Or prowlin' through the woods so still
Where the arbutus might be found—
It keeps you busy feelin' round.

There's pleasure in the mighty game
Where people play for wealth or fame,
But when your memory brings once more
To mind the hope you knew of yore
It does not turn to pomp or state
An' cheers from humble folk or great.
The greatest quiver still resound
From times we spent jus' feelin' round.

Down on the Farm.

How dear to our hearts was the old horse and cutter,
The old horse and cutter we knew long ago!
We would get them both out with the first snowflake's flutter
And keep them both going six hours or so.

When the woodpile was white and the north wind was raw.
For the horse was a nuisance, and so for the cutter,
It was only an old fashioned jerky took saw.

Roaring Horses.

Roaring or whistling has ruined many a promising young race horse and his owner's pocketbook at the same time. A horse that is a roarer when he gets heated begins to make a sound that can be heard sometimes as far as a city block, and some roarers will choke and fall down right on the track.

Accurate statistics covering a number of years in a German state indicate that lightning strikes more frequently in marshy than in dry sections and that the frequency of strokes increases as forests are cleared away.

Aphasia.

Aphasia, or the loss of memory or comprehension of speech, is a queer complaint. A man who had forgotten his sister's name always referred to her as "that other woman." A person apparently otherwise in perfect health will substitute the name of one article for another totally different in the most ludicrous way.

DEATH OF CITY'S TWO WELL KNOWN RESIDENTS

REV. WILLIAM BENNET.

In the death of Rev. William Bennet at his residence, 558 Gilmour street on Wednesday, May 10th, there passed away from the activities of life one of our most highly respected citizens and a veteran minister of the Presbyterian church, highly esteemed in love for his work's sake. Rev. Mr. Bennet has to his credit over half a century of work in the Christian ministry, and during that time has occupied positions of prominence in the Presbyterian church.

Rev. William Bennet was born in Lisbane, County Down, Ireland, in 1828, and had reached the age of 83 years at the time of his death. He was educated at Belfast and Edinburgh. He was ordained by the Presbyterian Church of Ireland, with special reference to mission work in New Brunswick. Accordingly he came to Canada in 1856, his first charge being St. George, New Brunswick. His next charge was Windsor, Ont., and successively he had charge of Winchester and later Kemptville, and then Springville. Here he ministered many years, being succeeded by Rev. Geo. Yule, who by a rather striking coincidence, for the second time succeeds to a charge formerly occupied by Mr. Bennet,—Winchester.

Rev. Mr. Bennet, was clerk of the Presbytery of Peterborough for the long space of 27 years, and during that time discharged the duties of the position with a fidelity and pains-taking accuracy which were characteristic of his relations to the church in his ministerial capacity. In September, 1906, he celebrated his ministerial jubilee, and on that occasion the Presbytery of Peterborough honoured him by the presentation of an illuminated address, in which his long and faithful services were fittingly and officially recognized. In 1858 Rev. Mr. Bennet was elected moderator of the Synod of the Presbyterian church in New Brunswick, and in 1898 he was elected to the high and responsible office of Moderator of the Synod of Toronto and Kingston. By his long years of service, Mr. Bennet well earned his retirement for the active duties of the ministry in 1898. Since that time he has lived quietly and happily at his Gilmour street residence, his one great sorrow in that time being the death of his wife in May, 1909.

He leaves behind him two sons and one daughter, Mr. J. W. Bennet, barrister, city, and Rev. Otr Bennet, Presbyterian Minister of the Almonte charge, and Miss Bennet, at home.

The funeral will take place on Friday at 3 o'clock; service at the residence, 558 Gilmour street at 2.30 p.m.

JOHN WOOD.

This afternoon Mr John Wood, perhaps the oldest resident of Peterborough, who in his sixty-four years in this community, has won and held the universal high respect, died at the family residence, 404 Belmont avenue, at the age of 87 years. Mr. Wood, though in somewhat impaired health for some years, had no serious ailment till within the past month or so. A little over three weeks ago it became necessary for him to sumbit to a rather severe surgical operation, from whose effects he rallied at the time, thanks to his robust constitution and vitality, preserved by a life of good living and regular habits. But his condition did not improve, and death closed the scene this afternoon at half past twelve.

The deceased gentleman, was born in the County Fermanagh, Ireland in 1824, so that if he had lived till June first he would have completed his eighty-seventh year. Mr. Wood came to Peterborough from Ireland in 1847, and has since that time continuously been a resident of the city or vicinity. In his earlier days—and for more than thirty years—he was engaged in teaching in Douro township and also in North Monaghan. He was, for a time, township clerk of North Monaghan and for many years, and till the time of amalgamation of Peterborough and Ashburnham, was village clerk of the latter. He was also on the Commission of the Peace as J. P. In his official relations Mr. Wood was scrupulously conscientious, a characteristic which entered into his whole life and went to forming the high character which won for him the universal respect of the community in which he passed the long years of a useful life.

In early life Mr. Wood was united in marriage to Miss Porter, daughter of the late David Porter, and sister of Mrs. J. T. Wright, East City. Mrs. Wood survives, together with seven of the twelve children born of the union. These are Mr. George A. Wood, of Messrs. Hermann & Company, Rhode Island; Mr. E. R. Wood, Managing Director, Dominion Securities Corporation, Toronto; Mr. S. W. Wood, of Messrs. Trites-Wood Company, Fernie, B.C.; Mr. F. P. Wood, of Messrs. Baillie Wood & Company, Toronto; Mr. W. T. Wood, of Messrs. Wood, Barnett & Co., Toronto; and Misses Annie L. and A. E. Wood, at home. Mr. Wood was very fortunate in living to see his sons, not only comfortably and prosperously settled in life, but some of them occupying positions of special prominence, in the business world and all a credit to his name, due in large part, no doubt, to the high principles in which they were reared, both in the way of precept and example. To few men is vouchsafed so much comfort in his declining years, so much tangible kindness as Mr. Wood received at the hands of his sons.

In politics he was a Liberal of strong, but undemonstrative convictions, and in religion a Methodist.

Mr. Wood leaves behind him the memory of a life of usefulness, marked by the characteristics that distinguish the highest type of Christian gentleman and a name held in respect and esteem by all who knew, or knew of, him.

WINNIPEG IS HIT BY A SEVERE STORM

Electrical Disturbances Cause Great Havoc

City Lights Snuffed out and Power Station is put out of Business by Lightning Bolt That hit Transmission Line.

GENERAL MISERY

Winnipeg, May 12.—Winnipeg was the centre Wednesday night of a violent electric storm that in the space of a couple of hours tied up almost every modern convenience driven or operated by electrical enegy. It was a wild night, with a conglomeration of weather suitable to every season of the year, and vivid lightning flashes lit up the heavens even while hail and snow descended. At one stroke the lights of the city were snuffed out and the power transmission station of the Winnipeg Electric Railway was put out of business. Not a street car was running at 10.30. Officials of the company state that one of the transmission cables from Lac Du Bonnet was struck by lightning fourteen miles from the city, which resulted in the cutting off of the current.

The telephone lines were temporarily affected and the telegraph wires running into the city were damaged to such an extent that Winnipeg was all but cut off from the outside world. Over the few wires that were operated, however, came the gladsome news that the precipitation extended all over the province, and that on a million fields the moisture was sinking to the ground to generate life in the young wheat.

The rain started to come down late Wednesday afternoon and since that time there has been a continuous downfall of hail, snow and sleet. The electrical storm broke about 2 o'clock and the reverbrations of the thunder over the city were so loud as to waken the majority of the citizens. The hail that ascended at the time came in such volumes as to test the strength of window glass. Yesterday morning the unique sight of the trees all in leaf and the ground covered with snow was seen.

St. John's Observatory recorded 2.4 inches of rain Wednesday night, which is almost unprecedented here. Power was turned on again yesterday afternoon.

Must Fill Out Immigration Form.

Montreal, May 12.—Immigration officials yesterday announced that the new regulations, which state that everybody coming into Canada on a sleeping car must fill out a Canadian immigration form before retiring for the night, would be strictly enforced. Even a Canadian-born passenger is obliged to fill out a statement, giving details of address, accompanied by a declaration that he is a Canadian citizen. No exceptions will be allowed.

Not Criminally Liable.

Montreal, May 12.—Ambroise Lafrance, charged with being responsible for the death of Mrs. H. F. Coulson, as a result of an accident in which her husband's automobile collided with excavation work in front of Mr. Lafrance's property on Park avenue, on the night of April 28, was acquitted yesterday morning by Judge Lect.

Two Camorrists Sick.

Viterbo, May 12.—Gennaro Abbatemaggia is suffering an acute attack of laryngitis and was unable to appear at the trial of the Camorrists yesterday, much to the disappointment of the spectators, who had expected to see him confronted by Enrico Alfano, the alleged actual head of the Camorra.

Maria Stendarano, the woman prisoner, was also reported to be critically ill with pneumonia. The session was occupied with testimony of minor importance.

POWER FOR KINGSTON

Hon. Adam Beck Promises Limestone City Electric Energy at the Rate of $25 per Horse Power.

ADDRESSES MEETING

Kingston, May 12.—That in five years Kingston would be in a position to supply power to manufacturers at $25 per horsepower was the prediction of Hon. Adam Beck, addressing a meeting of citizens in the City Hall last night, at which Mayor Graham presided. Mr. Beck was listened to attentively for two hours.

The estimate made by Assisting Engineer Yates of the commission, at present in the city, is that the city's requirements to-day are 4,100 horse power. Mr. Beck made it quite clear that the commission is not a competitor. He said that many in Eastern Ontario were of the opinion that this was the case. His advice to Kingston was to keep control of the market if had in the supply of electrical power, and not to allow a company to come in and divide it. He said he was sorry that the Seymour Co. had commenced business in Central Ontario with the Trent waterpower, and were buying franchises. If the city dealt with a company, it would not receive as favorable terms as if dealing with the commission. One reason would be that it would get advantage of the overlapping in power supply. He pointed out that the question of price was not the whole issue, but it was a case of principle. Reference was made to Port Arthur City, which had refused to deal with a private company.

Continuing, Mr. Beck said that the contract which had just been made with the New York & Ontario Power Co. was at lower rate than that from Niagara Falls. It was necessary to have a company at Waddington, N.Y., to reduce the power to the necessary voltage, because the Ontario Government could not build apparatus outside the province. The company's figure for a minimum of two thousand horsepower was $13; for 10,000 horsepower, it was $11. The prices for power for Kingston would be lower than those quoted a month ago. For 1,200 horsepower, $26.83; for 1,800 horsepower, $20.31; for 2,400 horsepower, $22.91.

Advices received yesterday relative to the situation in Morocco say that Col. Brulard's relief expedition has started from El Knitra for Fes.

While working in a gravel pit at Britannia Park, Ottawa, yesterday a falling mass of earth struck Fred Rose, a workman, and he was killed.

Prominent Kent apple dealers look for a bumper crop of fruit this year in that district. There is a very heavy show of bloom for pears, cherries and plum trees.

Fire, which broke out in the superintendent's office of the G.T.R. station at Richmond, Que., at 11.15 last night, almost totally destroyed that structure. The damage is estimated at $5,000.

Constable McKay and Mr. Gordon were bringing two prisoners across Cobalt Lake in a canoe, when one of the men stood up and the craft turned over. They clung to the canoe and were saved.

Dr. E. A. Falconer, president of the Toronto University, delivered the convocation address at Manitoba University to-day, and he and Sir Daniel McMillan, Lieutenant-Governor, received the honorary degree of doctor of laws.

Word was received in Quebec of a fatal accident at Syringue River. Five men were on a jam, one of them, Art. Rousile, fell off and was not again seen. A second, Thomas L. Tremblay, after trying hard to remain on, disappeared in his turn.

A Russian Appointment.

Berlin, May 12.—The Lokal Anzieger yesterday published a despatch from its correspondent at St. Petersburg saying that Baron Rosen, the Russian Ambassador at Washington, has been appointed temporary director of the Russian Foreign Office.

Madero Establishes A Real Government

Provincial President Chooses his Cabinet and has Things so Well Under Control That Voting is Almost Absent.

ORDER PREVAILS

Juarez, Mexico, May 12.—Mexico's Provisional Government, composed of insurrectionists, became an established fact yesterday with the naming of a Cabinet by Francisco I. Madero, jr., Provisional President, and with the establishment of the capital city of Juarez, where Gen. Navarro and his federal troops are held prisoners.

Secretary of War Carranza will have charge of railways and telegraph. His first act was to grant permission for the repair of the Mexican Northwestern Railroad. Men immediately began repairing the roadbed south of Juarez.

Gonsales Cuena will have charge of the mail service and Secretary of the Treasury Madero will direct the affairs of the customs house.

That the insurrecto army is more than an armed mob, was shown yesterday in the absence of general looting and intoxication and the quickness with which the shattered city was cleared of its dead and wounded. The embargo against visitors was removed during the day and sightseers in thousands poured across the bridges from El Paso.

Only occasional cases of looting were reported, and these not by the insurrectos themselves, but by insatiable curio hunters, one of whom triumphantly displayed in El Paso two silver candlesticks, taken from the big church in which the federals made a desperate stand.

The insurrectos are not overlooking the possibility of attack from Col. Ensago, reported approaching from Chihuahua with a relief force.

KILLED BY TRAIN.

Toronto Boy Was Picking Up Coal Along the Track.

Toronto, May 12.—Seven-year-old Albert Hutchins, 35 Delaney crescent, was jolted from the footboard of a G.T.R. engine, at the foot of St. Clarens avenue, at 11.20 yesterday morning. The lad had been picking up coal along the track.

The engine steamed into a siding with its train to allow another train to pass and the lad jumped on the back of the engine. When the other train had passed Hutchins started backing out of the siding and the lad was jolted off. He fell on his head, clear of the tracks and was carried home dead. The mother says that a brakeman saw him jump on the engine and warned him off, but before he could reach him the lad had been jolted off.

An older brother of the dead boy lost both legs in jumping from a moving train at Brock avenue, three years ago.

Hopewell Will Not Go.

Ottawa, May 12.—Mayor Hopewell of Ottawa announced yesterday that under existing prospects he will not attend the coronation either in an official or private capacity. When told that Mayor Geary of Toronto had stated that he would attend in any event, Mayor Hopewell said:

"No, I am not going over to take a chance on getting a seat on the 'fence' to see the procession. I had a talk with Toronto's mayor over failure to provide accommodation for visiting civic officials from the Dominions, but he and I do not hold the same views."

A Seven-Year Term.

Toronto, May 12.—Fred Watson, alias Casey, a well-dressed, well-educated Englishmen, was given seven years in the Police Court by Magistrate Kingsford yesterday upon the uncorroborated testimony of a seventeen-year-old boy for the committing of an unnatural offence. The man has previous convictions in England, Canada, and the United States. In addition there were convictions on two charges of theft of jewelry from houses in which he had lodged. On these the terms were three years each, to run concurrently with the other term.

Get Leave to Appeal.

Ottawa, May 12.—The Supreme Court yesterday morning rendered judgment in the case of Shanti vs. Good, granting special leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada from the judgment of the Court of Appeal for Ontario, upon payment of the costs already taxed in the court below. The suit was over the transfer of a number of shares in a company.

Church to Support Professor.

Kingston, May 12.—Dr. Dyde, principal of the Presbyterian Theological Seminary, of Strathcona, Alberta, writes that Knox Church, Calgary, has promised to pay the salary of one professor at the new college, commencing at $2,500, and raising $100 yearly until $3,000 is reached.

Suing Dun's Agency.

Kingston, May 12.—Justice Clute will, in June, hear the case of Telfer v R. G. Dun & Co. Telfer, proprietor of the British American Hotel is suing the company for $50,000 for the published statement that the bailiff was in charge of his place.

MUST HAVE THE LINES

Hon. Mr. Graham Explains The Guarantee of the Canadian Northern Bonds Great Prosperity is Coming to Canada

EVERY LINE NEEDED

Ottawa, May 12.—That Canada is on the eve of a spell of expansion that will need every available transportation line was the reason which Hon. G. P. Graham gave in the Commons yesterday for the guaranteeing of the C.N.R. bonds. The bill was introduced in the House and with it an opposition resolution of protest, which, however, lacked any real backing.

Hon. Mr. Graham explained the new move and showed that the guarantees would probably never cost Canada a dollar. In the slight chance that they showed the Dominion would be richer by a transcontinental railway.

The Prime Minister moved the appointment of the following committee of five to try the charges recently made about Hon. Mr. Oliver in connection with the alleged receipt of $70,000: Messrs. Clark (Essex); Carvell and Geoffrion (Liberals), and Meighen and Crothers (Conservatives).

Haughton Lennox made enquiry as to when the Government would introduce the new Bank Act. He presumed it could not be before the adjournment, but expressed the hope that it would be introduced and considered when the House met in July.

Hon. W. S. Fielding said he doubted much if the proposed act would be introduced during the present session of Parliament, but he was willing to keep an open mind on the matter. He gave notice, however, that he would before adjournment introduce a bill having for its object the extension of the bank charters for one year.

In introducing his resolutions providing for a Government guarantee of 3 1-2 per cent. on $35,000 per mile for that section of the Canadian Northern to be constructed between Port Arthur and Montreal, Hon. George P. Graham, Minister of Railways, expressed the opinion that a bargain had been made which would be of the utmost advantage to the entire Dominion.

Mr. Graham said that coming eastward from Port Arthur, except for a few miles, the C.N.R. would serve an absolutely new territory from that now served by the C.P.R. and the G.T.P. Except in one or two instances it would not come nearer than 20 miles to the existing roads. In many cases it would be from 60 to 70 miles from the Grand Trunk and from 20 to 40 miles from the C.P.R.

Explaining the provisions of the route, he said that it was a 3 1-2 per cent. 50 years bond that was guaranteed by the Government. The road would have 80 pound rails, with good modern bridges. The C.N.R. would add its guarantee and would stand in between the Government and any possible loss.

Mr. Borden asked the Minister to give his views as to what public necessity would be benefited by the building of this road and what necessity there was for a subsidy, assuming that the road was not only desirable but necessary.

Mr. Graham replied that with the rapid growth of Canada, and the fact that the country had now 5,000 miles of railway in the west, and were increasing it rapidly and gathering up traffic, it made it absolutely necessary that there should be another line for the carriage of the products of the west to the east, as well as feeding that line from the east to the west. "I believe," he said, "that there is a day of prosperity near at hand, that will extend clear through to the Maritime Provinces, a prosperity which I do not think will be secondary even to that of the west. My own conviction is that we cannot get these lines constructed too rapidly to meet the absolute necessity that will then exist for the carrying trade of our own products, to say nothing of the carrying trade we might do for any other country.

"As to the necessity of a guarantee, this company might in a few years proceed to work this line through. They have done a good deal, but they have been aided by subsidies, and aided by guarantees. But in order that we may have this line constructed, and constructed without undue delay, constructed in a way that we should have something to say about its construction, and in order that we may be able to finance such an undertaking in the best possible method, so that the freight rates might be based on the least possible cost of construction, I believe it is in the interests of the people who have to ship goods, that the Government should enable the company to borrow their money at the best possible rates in the old country. I do not believe that this guarantee will ever cost the Dominion of Canada a dollar, and if we can ensure the rapid construction of this road at the cheapest possible rate merely by lending the name of the Dominion of Canada to the company to secure its money.

R. L. Borden protested against so important a measure being delayed until the eve of the adjournment of the session. He would postpone consideration of various points in the resolution until the discussion in committee. The questions he had asked the Minister of Railways had only been answered in general terms. He would point out, however, that between the east and west there was a stretch of country that had no appreciable population, yet a railway had been constructed through it, and had been in operation for twenty years.

Hon. John Haggart said that the Minister of Railways had not made it clear that there was room for this additional transcontinental line.

Haughton Lennox criticised the proposals. What with the proposed grand surplus and the three railway systems he believed there would be no necessity for this line. The result might be that all would become impoverished and compelled to charge rates which would afford no measure of relief to the western farmer.

ITALIANS SENTENCED.

Torpetto Gets Three Years and Francisco Six Months at the Soo.

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., May 12.—At the assizes yesterday morning the Italians Torpetto and Francesco received sentences for the stabbing affair in Little Italy last Easter. Torpetto will serve three years at Kingston, and Francesco six months in the Central Prison. The third Italian, Stonnelli, was allowed to go. Justice Britton charged strongly against the prisoners, believing that the use of offensive weapons amongst the foreign element should be discountenanced.

William Carroll, 55 years of age, is now on trial for the murder of Joseph Talion, in a lumber camp forty miles from Rhind River, last November. Evidence given yesterday by those in the camp show that Carroll had no provocation, and Provincial Constable Taylor, who made the arrest, testified that Carroll had told him he had struck the wrong man with the axe. Dr. Bruce Smith said he believed Carroll to be sane, although of an excitable nature. In Dr. Smith's opinion Carroll was fully responsible at the time he struck the blow, although, having been confined in the London Asylum in 1908, was suffering from acute melancholia. The defence is endeavoring to prove insanity.

Dr. Carman Called.

Montreal, May 12.—Dr. Carman, general superintendent of the Methodist Church in Canada, took the witness stand in the Workman libel case yesterday and gave evidence on points of Methodist belief involved in the alleged assertions of Dr. Workman. Dr. Carman claimed that from his position his testimony could be regarded as the voice of the Methodist Church. His statements on points of Methodist belief, he declared, were the interpretations of the Methodist Church courts. His testimony on many points was directly opposed to that of Dr. Workman, who in testifying Wednesday refused to admit that the beliefs which he held were not in accord with the standards of Methodism.

Dewy Merger Story.

Montreal, May 12.—A flat denial was yesterday given by Mr. C. J. Smith, general manager of the Richelieu & Ontario, to a story that with the practical consummation of the Richelieu Northern Inland Navigation merger three Toronto concerns, the People's, the Hamilton, and the Ontario Navigation Companies, would later be involved.

Col. Matheson Ill.

Perth, May 12.—Hon. Col. Matheson, Provincial Treasurer, lies at his home threatened with an attack of pneumonia. He returned from Toronto on Tuesday and on Wednesday evening was in a serious condition. Yesterday morning he was reported by his physicians as resting much easier.

Want Tracks Underground.

Montreal, May 12.—The plans which the Grand Trunk Railway Co.'s engineers have submitted to the city authorities for the elevation of the company's tracks running from Bonaventure Station westward to the city limits, were disapproved at a conference of aldermen, controllers and citizens yesterday. A resolution calling for a revised scheme to provide for the railway tracks being placed underground, or if it were found by the engineers that an underground railway was not feasible, that new plans for elevated tracks should provide for concrete and stone embankments instead of earth embankments specified in the present plans.

Ministers Off to Coronation.

Ottawa, May 12.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Sir Frederick Borden and Hon. L. P. Brodeur, Canada's representatives at the Imperial Conference, left Ottawa yesterday afternoon to sail on the Virginian for Liverpool to-day. Accompanying the Ministerial party were Lady Borden and Miss Borden, Madame Brodeur; Mr. J. G. Dunlop, etc, Deputy Minister of Naval Affairs; Sir Wilfrid's nephew, Robert Laurier, and the Ministers' secretaries.

Sir Wilfrid goes through by train to Quebec, where he will board the Virginian this afternoon. The other members of the party take the steamer at Montreal.

Officers Resign.

St. Catharines, May 12.—In consequence of objections made some time ago liquors have been entirely banished by the Nineteenth Regiment from the Officers' Mess, Sergeants' Mess and every other part of the armories. As the Thirteenth Regiment is coming here on Victoria Day it was proposed that prohibition should be suspended for that day. Two of the officers, understanding that such were the orders, asked to be relieved of their commands and placed on the corps of reserves. One of these was yesterday morning asked to resign the command of his company.

Bones in Chimney.

Kingston, May 12.—Workmen engaged in making alterations at the Albion hotel came across a number of what are supposed to be human bones stored away in an old chimney.

In connection with the finding of the bones a strange tale is told. Old residents say that many years ago the building now used as the Albion hotel was the military headquarters and that one day an Indian who had some trouble with the militia suddenly disappeared and was never heard from again. The finding of these bones has led some to believe that the Indian met with foul play and that these are his bones.

EYE-STRAIN IS BRAIN STRAIN

For the eye is practically the brain trying to see. Eye-strain, in some degree at least is probably universal. The percentage of those with perfect eyesight is very small.

Some of the effects which cause eye-strain are easily explained. One's eyes may be of unequal length. The inequality may measure but one four-hundredth of an inch; still that slight inequality hinders good team-work, and causes eye-strain. A stigmatism in one or both eyes is seldom absent and is one of the most potent causes of eye strain. It is caused, generally, by the pressure of the upper lid upon the upper cornea. The effect of the pressure is to alter the curvation of the cornea, disturbing the refractive power, and giving a distorted image on the retina.

Properly fitted glasses will remove all eye strain.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

IT WAS unnatural, unphilosophical, unscriptural, unpractical and anti-Christian—in short, all the epithets in the dictionary that begin with "un" and "in" and "anti" were hurled at it.

So Mary Lyons, the founder of Mt. Holyoke, one of the first two womens colleges in this country, describes theopposition to higher education for women, which she had to meet.

Her description forcibly reminds me of some of the tirades one hears against women suffrage.

And to-day—70 years later—the higher education of women is a commonplace, accepted and approved by the most conservative.

In 1870 occurred the first strike in economic history. The strikers were bookbinders—they were working fourteen hours a day and struck for thirteen. Their action was stigmatized as ridiculous and unheard of and sure to come to no good.

And to-day the ten-hour day is a commonplace, and the eight-hour day has even been obtained in some professions.

Fifty years ago in the meetings of the National Educational Association women were graciously allowed to write papers, but a man must read them, as it would not be proper for a woman to appear upon the platform.

Last year a woman — Ella Flagg Young — was elected president of this whole association.

Eighteen or twenty years ago, when electrics were first run through the town in which I then lived, one of the foremost men of the community, a very fine doctor, prophesied in all seriousness that trolley cars would never become common because horses would never be able to get used to them.

To-day—well if either is disappearing from the landscape it certainly is not the trolley car. And as for equine ability to get along with electrics, why it is only in the remoter country districts that horses have any objection even to the most thunderous of automobiles, to say nothing of comparatively staid trolley cars.

A few days ago I heard an anti-suffragist announce with great aplomb that equal suffrage would never be established because, forsooth, it never had been.

No, this is not simply an argument for women's suffrage.

It is not meant for an argument at all, merely a suggestion, a thought stimulant, a reminder for that kind of person who is in the habit of thinking that woman suffrage or any other great change or reform will not come to pass merely because "it never has been."

"THE BLACK CROSS"

By OLIVE M. BRIGGS

He snatched his hand away roughly. "You have nothing to be grateful for," he cried. "Pah! If a man picks up a bird with a broken wing and nurses it to life again for the sakeof its voice, is that cause for gratitude? I do it for my own ends, child. Tschut!" He turned his back on her and went over to the window. "If you want to know when you can sing, ask the Doctor. If he says you may—"

"You are still angry," said Kaya. "Don't be angry. If you don't want me to sing, I will lie here as you tell me and—try to get stronger." She moved her head restlessly on the pillow. "Yes—I will!"

Ritter began to strum on the window-panes with his strong fingers. "The Doctor is here," he said, "ask him. I don't want you breaking down and spoiling the opera, that is all. The rest is nothing to me. Come in!" There was a certain savageness in his tone, and he went on strumming the motive on the panes. "Come in, Doctor."

The door opened and a young man came forward. He was short of stature, and slight, with spectacles, and he stooped as if from much bending over solos.

"My patient is up?" he said.

"Walking about the room!" interrupted the Kapellmeister curtly.

The Doctor sat down by the pallet and took the girl's wrist between his fingers. "Why does it throb like this?" he said. "What is troubling you?"

"I want to sing," persisted Kaya defiantly. "If I sit in the flies with cushions behind me, and only a small—small part—couldn't I do it, Doctor?"

The young man glanced at the Kapellmeister's rugged shoulders, and shrugged his own. "Why should it hurt you?" he said. "You have a throat like a tunnel, and a sounding board like the arch of a bridge. Your voice should come tumbling through it like a stream, without effort. Don't tire yourself and let the part be short; it may do you good."

Kaya's eyes began to glisten and sparkle: "It is only the bird's part!" she cried, "and I am hidden in the flies, so no one can see me. Ah—I am happy! I am well, Doctor—you have made me well!"

Presently the old woman brought in the soup and the Doctor rose: "Will you come with me, Herr Kapellmeister?" he said, "we can smoke below the mill, while the Fraulein eats. I have still a few minutes."

Then the Kapellmeister left the window, and the two men went out together.

"Marta!" cried the girl. "I can sing! Did you hear him say it? Give me the soup quickly, while it is hot. I feel so strong — so well!"

She began taking the soup with one hand, and rubbing her cheek with the other: "Now, isn't it red, Marta? Look—tell me! Nurse, while you knit, tell me—did you see how angry he was, and how he went out without a word? It is he himself who asked me to sing, so why should he be angry now?"

The old woman clicked her knitting needles: "How do I know!" she said, "he lives alone so much, and he is crusty and crabbed, they say. I nursed him when he was a child, just as I nurse you now. He has a temper — the master! But his heart is of gold. His wife—" she hesitated "she was a singer, and she ran away and left him. They say she ran away with the famous tenor, Brondi, who used to sing Tristan. Since then the master has been soured-like!"

"That is strange," said Kaya, dreamily, "to run away from some one you love, when you can be with him night and day and never leave him! Sometimes there is a curse and you are torn by your love, whether to go or stay. But if you love him enough, you go—and that is the best love—to save him from the curse and suffer yourself alone. Perhaps there was a curse."

"What are you saying?" cried the old woman, "when you were delirious it was always a curse you raved of, and stains on your hands. Mein Gott! My blood ran cold just to hear you, and the Kapellmeister used to come—"

Kaya turned white: "He came?" she said, "and he heard me? What did I say, Marta, tell me! Tell me quickly!" She caught the old woman's hands and wrung them between her own.

"My knitting!—what you said, Fraulein? How do I remember! Stuff and nonsense, mostly! You were crazy with fever, and your eyes used to shine so, it made me afraid. Then the Kapellmeister would come and put you to sleep with his eyes.—Let go of my hands, Fraulein, you are crushing the wool! Is it the fever come back? Oh Je!"

"No," said Kaya, "No. You don't remember, Marta, whether I said any name—any particular name? I did not—did I?"

The nurse pondered for a moment, then she went on knitting: "I can't remember," she said, "There was something you used to repeat, over and over, a single word—it might have been a name. Won't you finish your soup, Fraulein?"

"No," said Kaya, "I am tired. Will you go down, Marta, and ask the Kapellmeister if he will come for a moment? I have something to ask him."

The nurse rose: "They are smoking still," she said, "yes, I smell their cigars! If you have finished the soup, I will take the tray. You are flushed, Fraulein, and before you were so white! You are sure it is not the fever come back?"

"Feel my hands," said Kaya, "is that fever?" Then she shut her eyes. She heard clumsy footsteps descending the stairs, and then a pause; and, after a moment or two steps coming back but they were firm and quick, and her heart kept time to them.

"What did I say in my ravings?" she cried to herself, "what did he hear?"

"Nun?" said the Kapellmeister.

"I see now what hurt you," said Kaya, without raising her eyes, "You thought I wanted to repay your kindness that can never be repaid; that I was narrow and little, and was too proud to take from your hands what you gave me. Forgive me."

The Kapellmeister crossed the room and sat down on the chair that the nurse had left. He said nothing, and Kaya felt through her closed lids that he was looking at her. "How shall I ask him?" she was saying to herself, "how shall I put it into words when perhaps he understood nothing after all?"

"If you think your voice is there" said the Kapellmeister, "fresh, and not too attained for the high notes, why you can try it now. If it goes all right, I daresay we could announce 'Siegfried' for the end of the week."

"Will you give me the note?" said Kaya.

"I will hum you the preceding bars where Siegfried first hears the bird." Ritter began softly, half speaking, half singing the words in his deep voice, taking the tenor notes falsetto. "Now—on the F. The bird must be heard far away in the branches, and you must move your head so—as it flutters from leaf to leaf."

Kaya lifted herself from the pillows until she sat upright, supporting herself with one hand. She began to sing, and then she stopped, and gave a cry. "It is there!" she said pitifully, "I feel it, but it will not come!—I can't make it come! It is as if there were a gate in my throat and it was barred!"

Tears sprang to her eyes. She opened her lips farther, but the sound that came was strange and muffled; and she listened to it as if it were some changling given to her by a mischevious demon in exchange for her own.

"That isn't my voice," she said, "you know as well as I—it never sounded like that before! What is it? Tell me—"

The Kapellmeister laughed a little, mockingly: "I told you, child," he said, "I warned you. Don't look like that! When you are stronger, it will come with a burst, and be bigger and fresher than ever before. Siegfried must wait for his bird, that is all."

Kaya clasped her throat with both hands as if to tear away the obstruction: "I will sing—I will!" she cried "it is there—I feel it! Why won't it come out?" She gave a little moan, and threw herself back on the pillows.

The Kapellmeister stooped suddenly; a look half fierce, half pitying came in his face. He bent over her until his eyes were close to hers, and he forced her to look at him:

"What is that word you say? When you were raving, you repeated it again and again: 'Velasco—Velasco.' There is a violinist by that name,—a musician."

"A—musician!" stammered Kaya. She was staring at him with wide-open and frightened eyes.

"His name is Velasco."

"Ve—las—co?"

The syllables came through her lips like a breath. "No—no!" she cried, suddenly, hoarsely, "I don't know him! I—I never saw him!"

She struggled with the lie bravely, turning white to the lips and gasping. "It was some one I knew in Russia; some one I—I loved." She sat up suddenly and wrung her hands together: "You don't believe me?"

"No," said the Kapellmeister, "you can't lie with eyes like that."

Kaya gazed at him desperately: "Don't tell him," she breathed "Ah—don't let him know—I implore you!"

Ritter gave a sharp exclamation and caught the little figure in his arms. "She has fainted!" he cried. He laid her back on the pillow and stood staring down at her, breathing heavily and clenching his hands.

"If I were Velasco!" he muttered, "Ah Gott—I am mad! Marta—Marta!"

CHAPTER XVIII

The day was very warm and sultry and the visitors, who flocked to Ehrestadt for the opera season, fanned themselves resignedly as they sat in the shaded gardens, drinking beer and liqueurs, and gossiping about the singers. The performance of 'Siegfreid' was to be given that night for the second time, and they discussed it together.

"The tenor—ah, what a voice he had, and what acting, but Brunnhilde—bah!" They shook their heads. "The Schultz was growing old, and her voice was thin in the upper register: it struck against the roof of her mouth when she forced it, and sounded like tin. In the love-scene, when Brunnhilde wakes from her sleep—Tschut! What a pity a singer should ever grow old; and a still greater pity—a Jammerschade that she should go on singing!"

"The Conductor was in despair, and so were the Directors; but the contract was signed, it was too late. Ach bewahre, poor Ritter! He was in such a pique," they said, "der Arme! The bird—that was poor too, shrill and cheap! Die Neumann, who was she? Someone out of the chorus, perhaps. But the Mime was splendid."

And ten they went back to the great Siegfried again and praised him—"Perron! He was worth the rest o fthe performance together, he and the orchestra; but when he had sung it with the Lehmann last year, ach—that was a different matter. He had gone through the part like a Siegfried inspired, and she—ah divine! There was no Brunnhilde to compare with her now. What a night it had been! Do you recall it?" they said—"Do you remember it?" And then the opera goers closed their eyes ecstatically.

"The season before was better, far better! — Tschut!" And then they went on drinking their beer and liqueurs, and fanning themselves resignedly. "If the heat did not break before night-fall there would be a thunder-storm." The clouds were gathering far in the West, and the insects were humming. The air was heavy with the scent of blossoms; and the waitresses ran to and fro, dressed in Tyrolese costume; the prettier they were the more they ran.

"One beer!—Three liqueurs!" "Sogleich, meine Herren!" The garden was shady, and the glasses clinked; the tongues wagged.

"You are not afraid; you are comfortable, child, swing up there in the tree-tops?"

Kaya's eyes shone like two stars down from the green. "My heart beats," she said, "but it is only stage fright; it will pass. Is the House full?"

"Packed to the roof!"

PRUSSIAN MILLIONAIRES

They are Said to Number 6,300—Income May be Published

Prussia is full of millionaires, who are said to number no fewer than 6,300. They are, of course, only "mark" millionaires, but even so they form quite a considerable class.

These "mark" millionaires received an unpleasant shock the other day at the announcement that Herr Rudolf Martin, formerly a high official in the Prussian Civil Service and a well-known writer, who achieved fame some years ago by his indiscreet revelations concerning the bankruptcy of the Russian Treasury, intended shortly to issue a "year book of the Incomes and Fortunes of Prussia's Millionaires."

The Prussian Finance Minister a few days ago had Herr Martin's flat searched by the police, and all the author's proofs and manuscripts of the Year-book were seized and taken away on the ground that Herr Martin had obtained his information by bribing an official of the Income Tax Commission. Herr Martin declares in defence that he has bribed nobody, but has simply employed his intelligence to deduce the facts from the income tax reports of the different towns. However this may be, many millionaires have admitted the accuracy of Herr Martin's "deductions."

BURGLARS' UMBRELLAS

The Most Ingenious Affairs Ever Used by a Thief

Among a collection of articles used by burglars when engaged in their nefarious calling is one particular contrivance that arouses great interest.

In appearance it resembles a large umbrella that has seen hard service. It was formerly the property of a burglar, and it was by its means that he was able to enter the second story of a building. Removing the cover a stick wound with ropes is revealed. The stick opens like a telescope or a jointed fishing-rod. Wound round it is a rope ladder, made of strong material, and about 13 feet in length.

The ladder is only wide enough for one foot to be placed on the rungs. The extending stick was used to raise one end of the ladder to the window through which the operator wished to enter, and on the upper end of the ladder are two hooks to be fastened to the sill.

Your Danger From Kidney Troubles

BEGINS WHEN YOUR BACK ACHES.

Backache is the first and the sure sign of kidney disease.

When the back aches or becomes weak it is a warning that the kidneys are affected in some way.

Next to the heart, the kidneys are, perhaps the most important organs in the body. It is no wonder then that if the kidneys are affected the whole system must be.

On the first sign of backache Doan's Kidney Pills should be taken. They go right to the seat of the trouble, heal the delicate membranes of the kidneys and make their action regular and natural."

Mr. E. J. Saubrier, Lake Annis, N.S., writes:—"I take a great deal of pleasure in telling you the benefit I have received from the use of Doan's Kidney Pills. I was troubled with my kidneys for several years; my back was weak, I had terrible headaches, and was so restless I could not sleep at night. I commenced using Doan's Kidney Pills and in a very short time I was right and fit again."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50c. per box or 3 for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

If ordering direct specify "Doan's."

WOOING BY PROXY

A Short Story.

They could not speak a word to each other, for she was English and he was German, and neither knew the language of the other. They had no friends in common unless one could call Ned Brook a friend. Ned Brook was acquainted with Mrs. Cheshire, Dora Cheshire's aunt and guardian, and of course with Dora. He had introduced himself to Theo Edelstein by a piece of friendly good nature. He was sorry for the poor young beggar whose tongue was tied, the disadvantage of the silence being increased by the state of his health, which the Englishman would have described as "fishy" in the extreme.

Brook found Edelstein an eager, impressionable, impulsive young fellow, bound for the Cape, from which he was to go up country and start as a farmer.

The idea of that scarecrow manoeuvring with a wagon and a span of oxen, exploiting Kaffir labor, building a log house and settling down to sow and reap, to rear herds of cattle and flocks of sheep when in six months or less all he would require of Mother Earth would be crammed up in a grave!

But as for strenuousness the word hardly expressed the energy and determination which dwelt in the long bag of bones. Brook could not have believed that so much will power could survive in so shattered and enfeebled a frame.

But the great bond of union between the two young men and the girl was that they were to be fellow passengers for a time in the "Fair Winda." Dora and her aunt with Ned Brook were going on a holiday trip to the Canary Islands, and Edelstein was on the way to the Cape.

"If the unfortunate chap does not kick the bucket before he sees the shore again," said Brook lightly, in discussing the ailing passenger with the ladies during his last call at their hotel, "I shall be astonished."

Mrs. Cheshire was roused into a protest. "Ah, I hope he won't die before we reach the Canaries. I think he ought not to be allowed to come into the saloon. I will speak to the Captain first thing. We will hold this miserable Mr. Edelstein at arm's length."

But her aunt's careful arrangement was exactly that which Dora did not choose to follow. She contrived to slip away from her relative, and to seat herself with an air of perfect innocence between Brook and Edelstein. Once seated she said it was "very nice" where she was, and declined to be dislodged.

"I don't mind," Dora told herself, "though Aunt Cheshire and people in general count me forward and insubordinate—and pretend that I have laid myself out to engross the attention of a couple of young men—a couple did I say? A man and a half—a man so sick as this poor German is only half a man; but at least he shall have somebody who will not shrink from him, who will look kindly at him, and be attentive in passing him the salt and mustard. I wish I could do more. Ah! I know: I will get Mr. Brook to speak German across me to him, so that a forlorn invalid, courageous enough to venture on exile, may not feel himself utterly lonely."

At the first luxurious, elaborate dinner, Dora sitting dumb beside her right hand neighbor could at least beam upon him till his gaunt face and sunken bright blue eyes were lit up with half puzzled and eager admiration. She plied him with every toothsome dainty in her vicinity, making expressive signs of what she held most worthy of his patronage.

At the time she wondered which was good and which was bad for him. She took it for granted that it was consumption which had left him a walking skeleton. She had heard that one of the last accredited cures was feeding the sufferers up. She did her best by expressive looks and encouraging smiles to get the scarecrow to begin to stuff himself. She shook her head disapprovingly when he declined oysters. She made the waiter pause significantly at Edelstein's shoulder with a chocolate cream.

"Take care, Miss Dora," said Ned Brook warningly.

"What, are you, too, frightened for infection?" she demanded scornfully, while both speakers were unfettered in their discourse because of the dead wall which Edelstein's practical ignorance of English had erected between him and them.

"Not particularly," he answered with a laugh, "but there are other dangers quite as deadly. I have heard that for pure blind concert this kind of unfortunate beggar is unequalled. Don't play up to his vanity."

Dora with a pretty little wall of her own was not only undeterred by Ned Brook's caution, she was confirmed by it in her cares for the invalid.

When he was not able to join in the game of quoits and shovel-board which the passengers played on deck, she managed to spare him the mortification of helplessness by standing looking on with him, as if his passiveness was not due to incapacity, but to the duty of attending to a lady, albeit it had to be in dumb show. She challenged him to games of back gammon, draughts and dominoes in quiet, sheltered corners. She hunted up "The Buchhols Family," and other modern German classics in the original from the polyglot library, and laid them before him with ingenuous triumph.

Theo Edelstein would have been the basest of ingrates if he had not responded to the tender, generous compassion of the young girl, the picture of health, who had never been ill in her life, with whom he had not exchanged a word.

He was no ingrate. He was touched to the core of his romantic honest heart. To be with her—to look at her seemed to do him good, to transplant some of her abounding vitality and vigor into his faintness and lassitude. He pulled himself together, held up his head, and in spite of the fever flush on his cheek bones, and the baneful fire in his eyes, looked twice the man he had looked when he came on board.

The "Fair Winda" was nearing the Canaries. Mrs. Cheshire was so much in advance that she was interviewing the stewardess and the man who had charge of seeing the luggage on shore.

Then in the middle of the bustle and commotion Ned Brook came in search of Dora Cheshire.

He found her standing watching for the boats coming out with fresh fruit and vegetables. She had a disengaged air just tinged with the excitement of landing.

He looked half provoked, half pitiful, with a stirring sense of waggish amusement getting the better of both provocation and pitifulness.

"I told you so, Miss Dora, you have been and gone and done it. You must come with me to the saloon, which at the present moment is empty except for one individual. You must pay the penalty you have incurred. You must come. You owe it to the ill-fated mortal whom you have enticed and deluded to the bad quarter of an hour in which his eyes will be opened."

"What do you mean?" she asked, remaining where she was, but opening her eyes more widely.

"Herr Edelstein desires me as a third party acquainted with the language, to act between you two as interpreter."

"What does he want?" enquired Dora beginning to move towards the stairs.

"He means nothing less," said Brook, "than to make you an offer of marriage by the lips of your humble servant."

Dora fairly jumped and then stood rooted to the spot. "Impossible," she cried. "You must have misunderstood him, Mr. Brook; such an insane, ghastly idea could never have entered into his head."

"Fact, I assure you; granted that it nearly took my breath away when he broached it to me."

"Tell him it is out of the question—it is preposterous—it is the next thing to an insult," declared Dora hotly. "I will not go down, I will not put myself into such a ridiculous, affronting position. You must explain this for me and make him understand."

"That is exactly what I cannot do," he said, more gravely than he had hitherto spoken. "You are seeing the thing from the woman's point of view only, as your sex is apt to do. You must look at it from the man's side also. Think of his mortification, of his disappointment, when he has worked himself up to the pitch of making this proposal—not to speak of the delicate state of his health, about which you have been so much concerned!" There was a gram of malicious mischief in the emphasis with which he uttered the last words.

"If I had thought that he was equal to anything of the kind!" protested Dora indignantly. "Don't tell me that he ever imagined I was leading him on to this folly," she forbade Brook vehemently, "else I shall not only not see him, I shall be tempted not to forgive you."

"How grossly unjust! And you must see him—he is entitled to that grace. You misled him—quite unintentionally, no doubt, still the truth remains. Had it not been so, do you think that even a romantic, passionate lad—as dogged as he is passionate, and in the fever of his pitiable state of health, would be so far left to himself as to pester you at such a moment with such a suit, and press me into his service? He has transferred his own feelings to you. He fancies not only that you in your 'grand generosity' and 'exquisite sympathy' have 'stooped to care for a poor fellow in his humiliated condition'—his own words, I assure you—but that you will set the seal on your goodness by consenting to become his bride. (A German bride or braut, you must know—not necessarily as in England a newly wedded wife, merely an engaged girl who may have to wait a dozen years before she is a married woman, and wait faithfully all the same.) He is under the delusion that you (being one of those wrong-headed, devoted angels, whom poets and men of his kidney find among women) like him well enough to follow him (he would have followed you to the world's end in other circumstances)—to the Cape, to trek up country after him, and when some Dutch pastor has made you man and wife, to be contented to find your happiness in nursing him back to health—as if that were not a desperate job. There you are to work with him, a household drudge, a notable farmer's wife, without a civilized creature, save himself, to speak to far and near ((and even to speak to him you must pick up German), without a decent shop to enter, without a log-built church in which to say your prayers. Assuredly our friend is not 'Latin,' as the Scotch say."

"Friend!' I do not count madmen among my friends. He is beside himself," declared Dora, with uncompromising severity.

"Beside himself? Yes, with unrequited love—only he does not dream that it is unrequired, with the enthusiasm which we call 'gush,' and the weakness consequent on the poor sinner's illness. And I must warn you, Miss Dora, that if you were the infatuated being he thinks you, if you gave up for his sake every worldly prospect, every intellectual satisfaction, and every family tie, I believe by sheer dint of will he would fight off death, he would live on and cheat you for years of the deliverance which widowhood might bring to you."

She said nothing for a moment, standing silent, with a face from which the rich colour had fled, with knitted brows, and set lips. Then she spoke abruptly.

"I will go down with you, Mr. Brook, since you think he is entitled to my presence on the occasion, only let us get through with the—the horrid ordeal as speedily as possible."

She walked down the stairs, and entered the saloon with her head held high, and pride and scorn in every line of her figure and lineament of her face. She had said he had insulted her—more he had cruelly wronged her in the mistake he had made. He had abused her womanly good will, distorting it in his foolish fancy, and employing it as a weapon against her. He was compelling her to endure a detestably painful, awkward, grotesque ten minutes.

He was standing near the door of the saloon as she entered. He bowed low with a foreigner's instinctive gesture of the hand to the heart, which indicates profoundest homage.

She met his eager eyes devouring her, and tendering to her grateful thanks for her infinite condescension in complying with his daring summons, with a slight bend of her head, and a resentful glance. It wavered and fell before his ardent regard, while her heart suffered a sharp pang and sank like lead in her breast.

Two saloon chairs had been drawn forward for Dora and Ned Brook. Edelstein took up his position on the other side of Brook, standing there as at once the boldest and the humblest of petitioners.

Brook accepted the arrangement until he remarked how Dora, who had come in with a rigid air, was beginning to fidget uneasily, as if she would rise from her chair; for she was saying to herself, as he soon guessed. "I am very angry and I do well to be angry, but I would not for worlds sit here and hurt him in that way. It would be mean to force him to realize his weakness. He cannot stand there and be agitated, and argue the matter as a strong man would."

Ned Brook comprehended, got up and pulled forward another chair, saying hastily to Edelstein.

"You had better sit down, you are not up to much, and this must be rather a trying explanation for you."

The suitor sat down on the other side of Brook, who was between him and Dora, and for a moment sank back with a forced sigh of relief, for welcome rest. The next instant he was bending forward with intense earnestness, and speaking some eloquent words in his mother's tongue, with glowing eyes fixed upon Dora, who turned away impatiently.

"He says," interpreted Brook with a carefully repressed grin, "that his proper place, which he is ready to assume, is on his knees at your feet."

"Oh! don't let him! For mercy's sake prevent him!" cried Dora in very real trepidation, catching hold of her countryman's arm.

Edelstein had cast a glance of mystified annoyance at Ned Brook, when Dora's action appealing for Brook's intervention met his eye.

"Good Heavens! the beggar is prepared to be jealous," murmured Ned half audibly, putting up his hand to conceal the tell-tale mouth of a laughing face.

Dora understood both the murmur and the movement and drew herself up in a statelier pose, which implied a mixture of reproach and displeasure.

Theo Edelstein was speaking again. It was forcible speech from pale lips which trembled under the burden of it.

"He confesses he has nothing to give you save his love, but that is so great it surpasses even the love of women. It will surmount every obstacle. In the future it will wrap

STOMACH LIVER LUNGS

Each of the chief organs of the body is a link in the Chain of Life. A chain is no stronger than its weakest link, the body no stronger than its weakest organ. If there is weakness of stomach, liver or lungs, there is a weak link in the chain of life which may snap at any time. Often this so-called "weakness" is caused by lack of nutrition, the result of weakness or disease of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. Diseases and weaknesses of the stomach and its allied organs are cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. When the weak or diseased stomach is cured, diseases of other organs which seem remote from the stomach but which have their origin in a diseased condition of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition, are cured also.

The strong man has a strong stomach. Take the above recommended "Discovery" and you may have a strong stomach and a strong body.

GIVEN AWAY.—Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Advisor, new revised Edition, is sent free on receipt of stamps to pay expense of mailing only. Send 21 one-cent stamps for the book in paper covers, or 50 stamps for the cloth-bound volume. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

SAVING THE GREAT AMERICAN LOBSTER

HOW Uncle Sam, Working with the New England States, Has Won the Long, Hard Fight to Avert Extinction of the Crustacean.

(Copyright, 1911, by the New York Herald Co. All rights reserved.)

THE American lobster is saved. The tide of events has turned in his favor at last. His race is not destined to become extinct. This means that the United States government, working together with the New England States, has won a great victory. Only time will tell how great it is, but there is enough information at hand to-day to prove beyond all question to anybody who cares to study the question that baby lobsters—beg pardon, lobster fry—have not been hatched from lobster eggs by the government and thrown back into the sea since the year 1885 without result.

In 1889 the total catch of lobsters in the New England States, off whose coasts practically all of the lobsters in American waters are caught, was 30,436,800 pounds. In 1908 it had dropped to less than half that amount—14,735,009 pounds. The value of the catch in 1889 was $634,000, and in 1908, notwithstanding the enormous falling off in the catch, it reached the sum of $1,857,000. That indicates the desperate straits in which the lobster found itself. The Bureau of Fisheries in Washington redoubled its efforts. More eggs were obtained and more small fry were hatched and let loose in the sea.

The result is that a report just received in Washington from the government agent at Boothbay Harbor, in Maine, shows that in that State alone 19,836,000 pounds of lobsters were caught by fishermen in the year 1909. The value of that catch was $2,145,204.

For many years the government hatcheries were operated on faith. Millions of eggs were hatched, millions of little lobsters were liberated, but the number of lobsters caught continued steadily to decrease. It takes from five to seven years for a lobster to attain its full growth and be ready for the market.

Question:—Were the little lobsters thus liberated dying as soon as they gained their freedom or were they living to augment the lobster supply? Nobody knew for a long time. To-day the fishery experts are certain that most of them lived and those that are being liberated to-day will live to find their way some day into a kettle of boiling water.

Encouraged by its success, the Bureau of Fisheries is working harder than ever. When it publishes the prediction that the prices of lobster salad and broiled live lobster will tax the pocketbook of the chorus girl's "angel" less and less each year it is not guessing. It may not be long before anybody who wants can eat lobster without hurting his conscience or straining his income.

The government could not have done the work alone. It required the help of the lobster itself, and but for the lobster's ability to help there is no telling what might have happened. The chances are a lobster to-day would be as rare as an elephant on a Jersey farm. The lobster is a marvellous breeder. One eight inches long produces five thousand eggs at a time; if Mrs. Lobster is sixteen inches long she produces as many as eighty thousand eggs at one time. This goes on every season of two years' duration, and if the greedy fishermen with their thoughts on the New York and Boston markets would only throw back every egg-bearing or, as they are called, "berried," female the lobster might be depended upon to keep itself from dying out. It is because, laws or no laws, the fisherman cannot be made to do this that the government is forced to pay twenty-five per cent above the market price for "berried" lobsters and strip them of their eggs for hatching.

The story of the fight for the life of the lobster is a long and exceedingly interesting one. The real name of the American variety is Homarus Americanus. He belongs to the group of mammals known as crustaceans, and his immediate family is named Decapoda because all of its members are provided with ten feet that are more or less adapted to walking. Crabs, shrimps, prawns and crayfish belong to the same family. All but the crabs are first cousins, and the crabs are fourth or fifth cousins.

The lobster is found from Labrador to Delaware, its range covering 1,300 miles of coast line. Some stragglers have even been taken on the coasts of Virginia and North Carolina. They are usually found not more than one hundred fathoms from the shore, although occasionally they are picked up on the fishing banks off the New England coast fairly far out to sea.

At the approach of spring the lobsters move in great numbers toward the shore. On the eve of winter they turn about and head for deeper water. They eat fish, dead or alive, and all sorts of living things that exist on the bottom of the ocean. They sometimes eat one another's eggs. Fish, however, is the bait most frequently used by the lobster fishermen.

Lobsters are very queer creatures in a great many ways. They never grow unless they shed their shells. This they do pretty often when they are young and at much rarer intervals as they get older. They might be raised from infancy to the full marketable size artificially were it not for their cannibalism. When cooped up together and unable to roam about in search of natural food they do not scruple to eat one another with great relish. This is particularly true of them when they are young.

The importance of the lobster is shown by the fact that lobster fishing ranks fifth among the baking industries of the United States. The lobster also is the most important crustacean in the United States, which is of itself a distinction. Then, too, he is not caught like other beings that live in the sea. He is caught in "pots" or traps. Not many years ago the fisherman would have ten or twenty traps. To-day he has one hundred and even two hundred to catch the same number of lobsters as formerly. But this is not strange in view of the fact that in three years previous to 1908 the supply diminished more than sixty-six per cent in the neighborhood of Boston. Thousands of men are engaged in the work and hundreds of thousands of dollars of capital invested. Only a few years ago a small number of fishermen in Narragansett Bay caught $250,000 worth of lobsters in twelve months.

There are government hatcheries at Boothbay, Me., Wood's Hole, Mass., and Gloucester, Mass. The apparatus consists of a houseboat built like a catamaran of two pontoons, with a well or open space between them. The houseboat floats on the water, moored securely in a small cove directly over the channel in a good tideway. It forms the nucleus of a collection of skeleton rafts which nearly surround it and which altogether occupy a considerably larger area than the houseboat itself. Four large rafts lying two deep on each side of the houseboat contain cars for hatching and rearing the lobster larvae. These cars hang into the water and revolving paddles are employed to keep the water in motion.

The old females carrying eggs about ready to hatch are put into these cars or boxes and the paddles are set in motion. As the old lobsters crawl about on the bottom of the cars the eggs hatch out one by one and the larvae, caught immediately by the upward revolving current of water, are taken off the bottom as they are in the ocean. From twenty to one hundred females can be put in one car. As soon as a sufficient number of fry have hatched out the lobsters are removed to another car to repeat the performance.

The length of time required to hatch out a complement of fry in one box varies, but it is of great practical importance to have a complement hatch within a single day, so that they all will be about the same age. Otherwise when the fry moult the older individuals, having passed through the moult and recovered their strength and appetites, are apt to turn on their defenceless, shell-less brothers and sisters and eat them alive.

Once hatched and transferred to rearing cars, the fry need the greatest care. They have to be carefully fed. They are inordinately fond of fresh fish, especially of the oily variety, but they leave uneaten scraps about that befoul the car and make it an objectionable place to live near. Fresh beef and boiled Hamburg steak are often used with good effect. The object is not only to keep the fry well fed, but satiated so as to prevent cannibalism. When they get large and strong enough to swim about and take care of themselves without too much danger to their lives they are liberated in coves and inlets and seen no more by those who started them on their career.

It is a curious thing that many lobster fishermen do not think it is a good plan to have the lobster hatched artificially. They believe the best way is to throw them over into the natural element and let them do their own hatching. One plan that has been followed by the government agents is to say to the fishermen who objects to the taking of the "berried" females, "We will buy the lobster and you may throw it overboard in the ocean and if you catch the lobster to-morrow we will buy it again."

That at least gives the female a chance to do her own breeding, which she would not have if sent on her way to market. In order to find out whether they are getting "stuck" the government lobster breeders have taken a small punch and made a little hole in the thin part of the tail. This does not hurt the lobster. When it has thus been marked they can keep tab on it and learn how many times they buy the same lobster in the same year. In one case a lobster was bought four times, but very seldom have they been bought the second time even.

The average size of lobsters caught for market now is much less than it was in the early days of the fishery. Their average weight is probably not more than two pounds. By law they must be at least nine inches long, and in the State of Maine ten inches. A nine inch lobster weighs on the average one and one-sixth pounds. A fifteen inch lobster weighs from four to five pounds. Twenty inch lobsters sometimes weigh as much as twenty pounds. Up until about fifteen years ago the largest lobster of authenticated weight was about twenty-five pounds. In 1897, however, three lobsters each weighing more than thirty pounds were taken off Sandy Hook, N. J., the weight of the largest being thirty-three pounds. But a fifteen pound lobster is uncommon and one weighing twenty pounds is very rare indeed.

Some idea of the extent of the government's lobster breeding operations can be had from the fact that in the fiscal year ended June 30, 1910, the total number of fry, eggs, yearlings and adults on hand or distributed was 169,236,092. This was about equal to the output of the year before.

Increase of Cambling Among Women

IN view of Deputy Police Commissioner Flynn's war on gambling and the Federal Government's raid on a women's bucket shop in New York, it is interesting to note a Chicago University professor's speech in which he calls attention to the increased amount of gambling among women in the upper circles of society. He says this is due in part to the wave of economy which is at the present time sweeping over the business world and in which every man is cutting down his expenses both at home as well as in his business. He says the wives of these men have contracted the gambling habit from a desire to replenish rapidly diminishing personal accounts.

Gambling among women, however, is by no means a thing of recent years, for two hundred years ago women of fashion lost thousands nightly and no comment was made. Pepys, that entertaining gossip of history, wrote in his diary in 1667:—"I was told to night that Lady Castlemaine is so great a gamester as to have won 15,000 pounds and lost 25,000 pounds another night at the card table." He continues:—"This evening going to the Queen's side to see the Ladies, I did find the Queen, the Duchess of York and one other Lady at cards, with the room full of ladies and great men, the which I was amazed to see on a Sunday."

History tells us that it was no unusual thing for women of fashion to sit in a card game from Saturday night until Monday morning. Marie Antoinette was a slave to cards, and was known to play for thirty-six hours. Emperor Joseph wrote of her:—"The play at the Queen's table was like that in a common gambling house. Persons of all kinds were there and mingled without decorum. Great scandal was caused by the fact that several of the ladies cheated."

Charles II., on the last Sunday which he passed on earth, as history tells us, spent the time playing cards with his three favorite duchesses. Also, Anne Boleyn was never so happy as when she was gaming for high stakes. Even the pious Mary was not proof against the lure of the cards, and "to counterbalance these vanities she paid for the education of a poor child and the expense of binding an apprentice."

WOMAN COMPARED WITH MAN.

WOMAN'S strength at most is only about two-thirds of that of man, while her height is as sixteen to seventeen and her weight as nine to ten. In woman the trunk is, relatively to the arms and legs, longer than in man. The head is also carried less upright, and the gait is comparatively unsteady and indirect. The greater length of the first finger, as compared with the third, is a feminine peculiarity. This relation, seldom found in man, is not uncommon among women.

Woman's lung capacity is in proportion to her size much less than man's, and the amount of carbonic gas expired is consequently less. Differences in the blood are well marked and are said to be significant. In woman it contains a less number of red corpuscles—about 4,500,000 in a cubic millimetre to 5,000,000 in a man. And this calculation, delicate and painstaking, has figured in more than one murder trial, the one most recently in the public eye being the case of a dentist in England convicted of the murder of his wife.

you round like a mantle, it will shield and shroud you from every genuine trouble and sorrow, even though you have to face hardship and loneliness by his side."

"Oh, that is enough!" protested Dora bowing her head to hide her blushes, and clasping her hands in futile vexation. "Leave out anything else of the kind. Tell him straight out that I have not had a thought of love and marriage in connection with him. Oh! I am ashamed to speak of such a thing. Say, if you like, that so far as I can judge I am not a marrying woman. Impress upon him that even if I were willing, and I am not willing, my aunt would never consent to my taking such a step. Why, she has not so much as spoken to him. Say, that I am English and provincial to the last degree. This trip to the Canaries is only a holiday excursion, nothing could induce me to quit my country for a permanency, or to unite myself to a foreigner—not though we were the only man and woman left in the world. For I know when we came into close quarters every prepossession and prejudice would be different, and we could not dwell together in peace." She delivered her decision, not with calm, cold deliberation, but with exasperated rapidity, looking down at her hands which she sat clasping tightly in her lap.

The man whose sentence she was thus glibly pronouncing, could not follow a word she said, but he could read her face in a measure. He never lifted his eyes from it, he sat gazing at her with beseeching yearning.

It took some time for Ned Brook to translate her answer, softening its inflexible harshness, so as to render it as little hurtful to its recipient's feeling as it could be made.

To the surprise alike of the original speaker and of the interpreter Edelstein was not silenced nor even seriously rebuffed by the refusal—it was as if he would take no refusal. He grew pale to wanness certainly. But he said Dora was shy, was frightened, she was ignorant and inexperienced in her proud maidenliness, she could not understand her own heart or his—how could she when this was the first time his great love had been put into words, for her hearing, and that, alas! by the lips of another man?

"Do not say another word," gasped Dora, no longer dictating, but imploring as she sprang up. "He is raving. Bid him good-bye from me," she said more gently. "Tell him that I wish him well, and that I trust he will regain his health in the milder air at the Cape. I hope he will prosper and be a great stock-holder and a mighty farmer. I suppose there are mighty farmers as well as mighty hunters, and oh! after that, come away."

Brook obeyed her, and added on his own account, "I am sorry, Edelstein, but time is up. Miss Cheshire is on the point of landing with her aunt, and so for that matter am I. I think I hear the bell warning those who are going ashore. Good-bye, old fellow, and permit me to wish you better luck another time."

Theo. Edelstein stopped his remonstrance and fell into silence. He rose with an effort, and grasping the back of his chair, bowed low once more to Dora, and held out a shadowy hand to her companion, in recognition of an obligation and as a sign that he bore no malice. It appeared to the two on looking back, that he had tried to conjure up the flicker of a pathetically forgiving, friendly smile where they left him standing, supporting himself wearily in the solitude of the saloon.

"Queer mediæval beggar!" remarked Ned Brook, while Dora hung her head and said nothing.

Years passed. Time and change did their best and their worst for the actors in the little drama on board the good ship "Fair Winds."

Mrs. Cheshire had died suddenly, leaving no will (for wills are unpleasant topics to deal with when the testatrix is in health). In this instance the negligence was disastrous, for there was a nearer relative than Dora who, though he had been a reprobate refused admittance to Mrs. Cheshire's house, did not on that account forfeit his legal birthright.

Dora found herself without a penny of her aunt's property, while she had nothing to expect from the generosity of the heir.

She rose to the occasion, and secured a situation in one of those establishments to supplement the Board Schools, as a day helper. Her salary just sufficed to furnish her with food and clothing and a fairly comfortable lodging in one of the streets between the East and the West Ends of London.

Soon the novelty of Dora's independence and hard work passed away. A certain reaction followed. She was as brave and resolute as ever, but the world grew occasionally drab coloured. She could not help wondering what was to become of her in sickness and old age.

It was rather a cheerless prospect accentuated by the rain pattering against the window panes, the dull little side street—dreary as well as dull. Suddenly there rose up before her a vivid remembrance of the far-away islands, their sunshine, their moonlight, their half-tropical vegetation, their dark-eyed population, and their blue sea-setting.

It was the setting more than the jewels it enclosed to which Dora's memory clung. Herr Theo Edelstein not Ned Brook filled the foreground of Dora's mental vision. Had he been dead for half a score of years! Had he died at sea as she and others thought possible? Did he remember her to the last? Was he loving her through eternity as he had vowed he would love her? His declaration had only shocked and affronted her. His ardour, so out of place in a dying man, had simply distressed her, and beyond the shock and the distress there had been an exasperating fringe of unwilling, unwelcome, half hysterical laughter at the absurdity of having a proposal of marriage, and such a proposal, so passionately pled, translated by a third party in the presence of the two persons principally concerned.

She had not believed Edelstein's representation of his feelings. She could not realise them. They were incredible, and in the circumstances utterly distasteful to her—a profanation of what ought to have been a dying man's sentiments.

But after the lapse of time in the altered world in which Dora moved, and the altered woman she was, she believed him, she recognised that he had spoken the truth of the value of the love she had rejected, which it would have been impossible for her to accept. No worldly advantage would weigh a thistle down in the scale against such love as she had inspired once—but once in her life. Like the blossom of the aloe it could only be counted upon to appear at rare intervals, to a few individuals. How strange and sad that when the precious gift was offered to her, it was in connection with a situation which precluded any chance of its being taken—even if she had been worthier of it!

But it was not of herself she thought beyond the fact that she was haunted with an aching regret for not having been kinder, more forbearing.

What did it matter? What could her gratitude or ungratitude signify to a disembodied spirit, which had long ago entered into eternity, and been employed, she trusted, in heavenly praise and heavenly work for a longer period than that in which she had taken up her life task in earnest.

Dora was disturbed in the look she had cast backwards by her landlady's voice speaking to somebody on the door mat.

"Yes, sir, Miss Cheshire is at home. Will you please to walk in?"

"Give her my card."

The second voice spoke with a foreign accent. To whom could it belong? It was a big man who was shown in, and seeing that he was there in propria personæ. Dora laid down the card without looking at it, and waited for the stranger to tell his errand.

He loomed almost gigantic in his long ulster and the broad felt hat he held in his brown hands. He seemed to fill the little room to the blotting out of Dora—herself a tall woman.

"Oh! (he pronounced it 'noh!') Miss Cheshire." He hailed her by her name, adding with lingering emphasis "at last!"

She had only listened to that voice for any length of time on one former occasion, but its tones thrilled her with a sense of some sound she had heard and been impressed by, in the past. In the same way the face, hugely changed, broadened, bearded of a hale weatherbeaten tan, and the corn flower blue eyes with the glint of steel in their keenness and strenuousness truck her as strangely, distractingly familiar.

"Do you not know me?" he was asking her with tender reproach which no amount of respectful restraint could altogether check, vibrating through his guttural accents. "I would have known you among a thousand. Why, of course, I am Theo Edelstein."

"No, no, it cannot be," she gasped, putting out her hands in a desperate impulse as if she would thrust away from her the dead come alive again of whom she had been idly dreaming this very morning. "You were desperately ill ten years ago. It is an age since you must have—"

"Died?" He finished the broken sentence, catching and holding the hands that would have pushed the vision of him beyond touch. "Nothing struck her as strangely, distractingly I remembered you always as I said I would. I learnt English. I should have written but I feared to put my fortunes to the test of paper. Had they not failed when they were urged by another man's tongue? I would plead my own cause, and if you were still free—(if you had died I should have known it)—you might yield, you might still be mine. I would do all that I had promised to do. You had wished that I might be a mighty stockholder and farmer. I have oxen by thousands and sheep by tens of thousands. I have many a field of nodding grain and barns to receive it. My house is built and furnished and standing and waiting for its mistress; your very garden is laid out like the English gardens English women delight in. Our next neighbour is an Oxford man who took honours at his college as I did at mine, but his health also gave way and he too was fain to turn to primitive nature as the great healer she is, and to lead the life of an old patriarch, throwing his books and papers overboard. But we are not without books; I have laid the foundation of a library—I shall do as he does every time he goes to the nearest town. He brings back for himself and for his young wife—a bishop's daughter—books and magazines, as well as new music, and pretty dresses as I shall bring for my wife when I have won her. Our neighbours on the other side are a dear old German couple who nursed me when I first arrived, and have been like a father and mother to me. I have told them that if I take you back, you will be another daughter to them as I am another son. Will you come, my one and only love, and make my life and my home complete?"

"I—I cannot tell," she faltered. "You have taken me so by surprise. It is not a couple of hours ago since I thought of you as long dead. In one light you are an utter stranger to me. Recollect this is the first time we have spoken together. In another sense I seem to know you well, and to owe you a mountain load of gratitude for thinking of me so much oftener and better than I have deserved, and for forgiving me for the harshness of your dismissal in the dining saloon of the "Fair Winds."

"There was nothing to forgive," she said simply. "How could there be forgiveness between you and me? And the second light in the true light—you do know me—you will come to me, my gift from God?"

"The gift is mutual," she said, speaking softly, "if there is any meaning in the name common to us both."

THE CORONATION NEXT

For the Crown Prince of Germany—He and Princess Home from Asia

The Crown Prince and Crown Princess, of Germany, are at home again, much to Potsdam's joy, after their long five months' sojourn in Ceylon, India and Egypt. Like the ardent soldier that he is, the Crown Prince went promptly back to his military duties, as major of a battalion of the Guards at Doberitz, to be warmly welcomed by his comrades, among whom he is extremely popular. The Crown Prince's next trip abroad will be in June, when he goes to London to represent the Kaiser at the Coronation.

WHERE ARE THE CATS?

Many residents of Brighton and other towns on the south coast are complaining of the mysterious disappearance of black cats. It is stated that the inhuman persons who are stealing them kill them and convert the skins into coats, boas, and ruffs. A Brighton furrier states that such is the demand for black furs that skins of every kind of animal suitable for the purpose are being used. "On the Continent," he said, "cats are used extensively, and no doubt the practice is growing in this country."

ZAM-BUK CURES PILES

Read What Those Who Have Proved It Say

Mr. Thomas Pearson, of Prince Albert, Sask., writes: "I must thank you for the benefit I received from Zam-Buk. Last summer I suffered greatly from piles. I started to use Zam-Buk and found it gave me relief, so I continued it and after using three or four boxes I am pleased to say that it has affected a complete cure."

Mr. G. A. Dufresne, of 183-185 St. Joseph street, St. Roch, Quebec, P.Q., writes:—"I can highly recommend Zam-Buk to everyone who suffers from piles. I have also found it most effective in curing a sore thumb with which my little son was suffering. The thumb had begun to swell and fester and had lost the nail. I persevered in the application of Zam-Buk and the sore is now entirely healed."

Not only for piles, but for inflamed sores, ulcers, eczema, ringworm, boils, eruptions, scalp sores, itch, children's sore heads, old wounds, etc., Zam-Buk is without equal as a healer, and also for cuts, burns, stiffness and wherever and whenever a handy balm is called for. SINGLE-LETTER BLUNDERS

Some That Cost People Dearly—Others that Caused But a Laugh

The inhabitants of the coast town of Almeria, in Southern Spain, have been enjoying themselves hugely of late at the expense of a lady who has been involved in a law-suit as a result of her illegible writing. She sent a letter to a fruit-grower in the country asking him, at his earliest convenience, to forward by train to her address one thousand "naranjas" (oranges). The person to whom the letter was addressed construed the badly-written order as being one for a thousand "naranjos" (orange trees). Imagine the surprise and feelings of the fair Almerian when twenty heavily-laden wagons stopped next morning at her front door, each one filled with young orange trees, all ready for planting! The lady refused to pay for them, because, she said, it wasn't her fault if the man was unable to read. The merchant, on the other hand, declared it was her duty to pay, as he wasn't to blame if customers couldn't write legibly. Experience is a dear school; but the signers learned what a big difference one little letter may make in a word.

This difference was equally evident to the famous professor of Greek at the University of Edinburgh, whose students rubbed out the initial letter "c" from the class-room notice, so that it read: "Professor Blackie will not meet his lasses to-day"; and also to the students who beheld the amended and final decree: "Professor Blackie will not meet his asses to-day." The genial professor used to deny the authenticity of this story, when Mrs. Blackie would laughingly say, "It was just what you would have done."

This incident reminds one of the amusing blunder made by a servant-girl who had been dismissed from her situation, and, seeking to soften the heart of an obdurate mistress, begged to be reinstated in her service in a letter which began with the startling salutation, "Dear Madman"! Even such a term of endearment, however, failed to produce the desired effect.

Most people will have heard of the ludicrous mistake, due to the difference of a letter, that was made by an old man, who, uttered the somewhat astounding complaint that he had suffered for years from "ulsters" in the stomach.

A LIVELY TIME

Omnibuses and Taxicabs Will Keep Pedestrians Moving

Visitors who anticipate having a real lively time in London this summer are quite likely to have their anticipations fulfilled if the intentions of the omnibus companies are realized. Already in certain parts of central London pedestrians have to skip about like cats on hot bricks in the main thoroughfares to avoid being run down either by motor-bus or taxicab, and there are only 900 buses on the road; by the summer there will be 1,400 of these rushing, tearing vehicles in use.

BROKE WIFE'S ARM TO CRIPPLE HER

A Russian Judge Punished a Tartar For Cruelty to His Wife Sixteen

A remarkable light has been thrown upon Tartar marriage customs by a case which has been disposed of by the St. Petersburg courts. Abul Schabai had lived in St. Petersburg five years when his father called him home for the purpose of marrying him to a neighbor's daughter. This neighbor, a Tartar, named Mullah, had two daughters—Mariaka, who was very pretty, and Dionoro, who was not noted for her good looks. Abul Schabai bargained with Mullah. The latter wanted three hundred roubles for Mariaka and one hundred for Dionoro. Finally a bargain was struck. Abul Schabai would be permitted to marry Mariaka for one hundred and fifty roubles. Now a Tartar never sees his bride until after the wedding. Abdul had seen the Mullah girls when they were children, and knew that one was pretty and the other plain. After the wedding he discovered that he had been tricked. He had been married to the plain Dionoro instead of to the pretty Mariaka. He ordered his bride to go back to her father, but she refused to go. It was only when he used the knout as an argument that she consented. But her father would not receive her back, and she returned. In order to secure a separation the Tartar beat his wife until her body was black and blue. Still Mullah would not take his daughter back. As a last resort, the Tartar resolved to cripple his wife. It is a belief among the Tartars that when a wife becomes a cripple her husband can receive another woman in the house. Abdul Schabai therefore broke his wife's arm. But he found that this custom of crippling wives was not recognized by Russian judges. His wife took an action against him for having made here a cripple, claiming 150 roubles damage. Abdul Schabai was sentenced to three months' imprisonment and ordered to pay the damages claimed.

ROMANTIC OLD LADY

Mrs. Betts, Even at the Age of Ninety, Would Not Yield to Misfortune

A romantic personality is removed from North-East London by the death, at the age of ninety-five, of Mrs. Charles Fitzgerald Betts, of Lauriston Road, who was at the same time a retailer of cat's meat and claimant to the title and estates of the Knight of Glin, of Glin Castle, County Limerick. Mrs. Betts, who was the daughter of Thomas Fitzgerald, M.D., of Glin Castle and Trinity College, Dublin, contracted a marriage which her relations did not approve, and her little savings were lost in the Liberator crash. The spirit of the warlike Geraldines, one of whose numerous Irish titles she claimed, possessed Mrs. Betts, for she declined to bend her head before misfortune. She went into business as a purveyor of cat's meat and dog's meat, and for years her aristocratic voice might be heard calling her wares in the streets of North-East London. Even when health was failing her, Mrs. Fitzgerald Betts did not yield. She refused to seek an old-age pension, pursued her calling in a bath-chair pushed by an old family retainer, and, withal, maintained the family dignity despite all attempts by either customers or fellow-traders at familiarity. It is understood that the "Lady of Glin" has disposed in a will of the property she did not possess, one of the clauses providing a soup kitchen for the poor of South Hackney. Mrs. Betts was associated in her early days with Florence Nightingale, and in the East End the part she played during the smallpox epidemic of 1864 is still remembered.

LOAN EXHIBIT FROM THE KING

Interesting Collections For the Scottish National Exhibition at Glasgow this Year

Interest in the Scottish National Exhibition in Glasgow from May to October has been greatly stimulated by the promise of the King to send a loan exhibition. His Majesty has promised to lend a small portrait of Lord Darnley with brother, portrait of sixth Earl of Angus, and portrait of King James V., a flintlock pistol of silver, two carved dirks, targets with pierced bosses, and three swords with basket hilts of silver. The portraits are of special interest. The portrait of James V. is one of the few existing representations of His Majesty's ancestors, the Stuart Kings of Scotland, while that of Lord Darnley is closely connected with the tragic story of Mary Queen of Scots. The decision, reluctantly given by the Queen Dowager of Spain, that she finds herself unable to lend the crucifix in her possession said to have been worn by her lineal ancestor, Mary Queen of Scots, on the day of her execution, has been a disappointment. Her Lord Chamberlain, however, is endeavoring to procure a copy of the book giving the history of the crucifix and containing an engraving of it. An interesting display in connection with the opening ceremony will be given on the River Kelvin of the successive types of ships used in Scottish waters from the earliest times to the present day. Some twenty-three vessels, represented by models worked by operators inside or underneath the floating model, will sail in procession down the Kelvin on the opening day of the exhibition, the types varying from the "dug out" canoe of the early Britons to the liners and battleships of to-day.

The exhibition will be held at Kelvingrove Park, Glasgow, and will be opened by the Duke of Connaught, who will be accompanied by the Duchess of Connaught and Princess Victoria [illegible].

SIR "SAM" EVANS

Sir Samuel Evans is a capital story-teller, and one of his most humorous yarns concerns a man accused of having stolen a pair of trousers. There were several witnesses, but the evidence was rather meagre, and so the accused was acquitted. He was told to go, but would remain. His lawyer, to whose successful defence he mainly owed his liberty, blated to him again that he was free to depart, but still he stayed. There being no more cases to be heard, the court was getting empty, when the lawyer, growing impatient, asked, with some asperity, why he didn't go. The injured, innocent man whispered in his ear, "The fact is, sir, I did not like to move till the witnesses had left the court." "Why so?" "Because, sir, I have got on the trousers that I stole."

SIR HIRAM MAXIM

He Retires From the Directorship of the Great Firm that Bears His Name

Few men have crowded more into seventy-one years of life than Sir Hiram Maxim, who is retiring from the directorship of the great business which bears his name. More than half a century has passed since he put together his first gun, a pea-shooter, in his father's workshop at Sangerville village, in Maine, and eschewed Fenimore Cooper to revel in Comstock's "Natural Philosophy." His scanty schooling over, the bedding inventor had two spells as apprentice to coach-builders before he began his roaming in search of fortune.

He was in turn mechanic, foreman in carriage works, and in a surgical instrument factory; and saved enough in these lowly roles to buy a house and farm for his father. But he had to wait until he had passed into the thirties before he patented his gas-generating apparatus, and later an improvement in electric lamps, and got a firm footing on the road to fame and fortune. At forty-four he was settled in England, with a gun-factory of his own in Hatton-Garden, a snug estate, and a fortune in shares.

YOUNG GIRL OF TO-DAY

Lecturer Says She Has an Appetite for Intellectual Culture

Monsignor Henry Bolo, in a lecture in London on "The Young Girls of To-day," said that between the girl of 1900 and her sister of 1910 a great gulf lay. The modern girl was distinguished by an intense appetite for intellectual culture. She wished to study everything, and she indeed learned a great deal. Monsignor Bolo was not quite convinced that the change was altogether for the better. He did not like young girl authors or students any more than he liked those who nourished themselves on the garbage of cheap novels while making skirts which were trousers in disguise or hats which might serve for pantry boxes.

His sympathy was reserved for the young girls who wished to breathe a higher atmosphere and who refused to consider the domains of art, science and literature as closed to them. The young girl of to-day deserved to be encouraged in her aspirations towards intellectual culture, and Monsignor Bolo roundly censured Schopenhauer for his definition of woman as "an animal with long hair and a short mind," and his declaration that her reading ought to be confined to prayer and cookery books.

PURCHASED OLD LANDMARK

An old landmark, the Duke of Cambridge Hotel, Toronto, has been purchased by the C.P.R. The buildings had great historical interest to the old residents, and particularly the veterans of 1866 who served in the Fenian Raid. The property was a great military headquarters, and some of the tables and furniture used by the soldiers are still there and highly prized by Mr. and Mrs. Crawford and the family. It was on these tables the orders for the operations of the defending force were written and despatches sent. The railway will use the property in connection with the new C.P.R. freight yards.

ROUSING SEND OFF

Sir Wilfred Laurier and Other Members of the Canadian Delegation Given a Royal Farewell at Ottawa

SAIL TO-MORROW

OTTAWA, MAY 11.— Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Sir Frederick Borden and Hon. L. P. Brodeur, Canada's representatives at the Imperial Conference, left Ottawa this afternoon to sail on the Virginian for Liverpool to-morrow. Accompanying the Ministerial party were Lady Borden and Miss Borden, Madame Brodeur; Mr. J. G. Desbarats, Deputy Minister of Naval Affairs; Sir Wilfrid's nephew, Robert Laurier, and the Ministers' secretaries.

Sir Wilfrid goes through by train to-night to Quebec, where he will board the Virginian to-morrow afternoon. The other members of the party take the steamer at Montreal..

A Royal Farewell.

At the depot Sir Wilfrid was given a royal send-off by his colleagues in the Government, a large number of members of Parliament and many of the Premier's host of personal friends in the capital. He left in splendid health and spirits, despite the constant and heavy strain of a long session of Parliament. Indeed, in point of buoyancy of spirits of physical endurance the Premier is still one of the youngest members of his Cabinet, and is apparently good for many years of arduous public service yet. First in rank among the overseas Premiers at the Conference, his is also first in point of his experience of preceding similar Councils of the Empire. This is his fourth Conference, and he is the only surviving member of the Conference of 1897.

REV. DR. WORKMAN'S THEOLOGICAL VIEWS

Brought out in his Evidence in the Ten-Thousand Dollar Libel Suit Brought Against the Wesleyan Theological College Montreal

MONTREAL, MAY 10.—Rev. Dr. Workman was closely examined this afternoon regarding his theological views, in the course of a hearing on his $10,000 libel suit against the Wesleyan Theological College. Dr. Workman at first objected to this examination, claiming that his religious belief was not germane to the case, since he had formally denied the allegations made against him, and which had led to the loss of his position as professor at the college. Judge Weir, however, held that it was important that Dr. Workman should state his views on doctrinal points.

He was examined regarding the virgin birth of Christ, and expressed the opinion that the contentions of Matthew and Luke that Joseph was the father of Jesus were unhistorical, and declared that he had an open mind regarding the virgin birth, it being a question yet to be settled.

With regard to the doctrine of the atonement, Dr. Workman said he did not regard the crucifixion as a propitiatory or expiatory act on the part of Christ, and that the effects of the atonement were on man, not God. As to the resurrection, Dr. Workman said he accepted it. But there were four theories as to whether Christ rose in his earthly body or in a spiritual body, all of which were left open to accept by the Methodist Church, the general view being that of a spiritual body. As to Christ having eaten bread and fish after His resurrection, Dr. Workman was inclined to view this as allegorical, and this view, he contended, was not at variance with Methodist doctrines. He supported this by declaring that the writings of Luke on the subject did not concur with those of Paul, who was a theologian.

Dr. Workman also combated the doctrine of original sin, declaring that children must be born innocent, since sin implied consciousness of wrong, which could not exist in a new-born child.

Doctrine of the Trinity.

As to the doctrine of the Trinity, Dr. Workman said it had always been a moot question whether Christ was God or not, and that the Trinity referred to the tri-personality of God rather than a God in three persons. Even if Christ were declared to be a man, the doctrine of the Trinity, he declared, would stand. With regard to the Scriptures, Dr. Workman divided them into their Divine element and the human, the former being inspired, but the latter open to laws of literary criticism. In any event he argued that a professor must be allowed more latitude than a preacher.

HUSBAND AND WIFE ARE INSTANTLY KILLED BY TRAIN AT NORWOOD THIS MORNING

Waggon Containing Mr. and Mrs. Frank McMillan of Dummer Struck by West-bound C. P. R. Double Header Freight and Occupants Were Hurled to Their Death---A Horrible Double Fatality.

Special to The Examiner

NORWOOD, MAY 12.—Frank McMillan, aged thirty-eight years, and his wife, aged thirty-three, well-known residents of the Township of Dummer, were instantly killed here at 11 o'clock this morning, when the waggon in which they were riding, was struck by a west-bound C.P.R. freight train. The unfortunate couple were hurled some yards and were dead when picked up.

It appears that Mr. and Mrs. McMillan were in Norwood on business and were driving home, when the accident happened. As they approached the station crossing a Canadian Pacific freight train, going at a considerable rate of speed, was coming along from the east. Apparently Mr. and Mrs. McMillan did not mark the approach of the train, but drove on right in front of the engine, which caught the waggon fairly in the middle, smashing it to pieces, and throwing the occupants out with such force that death was instantaneous. The horses had gotten clear of the rails and were not injured.

The victims of the double fatality were widely known and most highly respected by the people of this district and the accident, the news of which spread rapidly, has been a shock to the community.

The bodies are being kept at the station until the arrival of Coroner Dr. Kindred of Havelock, who, it is expected, will likely order an inquest.

Two children, a son and daughter, survive hte unfortunate couple .

Bomb Shell Is Sprung In Private Bills Committee

Examiner Special:

OTTAWA, MAY 12.— A bombshell was sprung before the Private Bills committee in the commons this morning, when Sir Sanford Fleming, formerly honourary president of the big Canadian Cement Co. merger sent a long letter saying there had been a gross irregularity in the division of stock and certain individuals connected with the company had got more than their share of the stock. Sir Sanford therefore protested against the proposed increase of eleven millions preferred stock, in the public interests. This company practically controls the cement output of Canada.

LACROSSE

The following letter will be of interest to lacrosse enthusiasts in Peterborough, although there seems but a very remote chance of this city having a team.

Mr. R. M. Glover, Peterborough.

Dear Sir,—I am anxious to know if Peterborough is going to have a lacrosse team this year, and I thought that you would be the best one to write about it. We have a number of boys in Oshawa who are anxious to play and if Peterborough and Port Hope would enter teams we could have a nice little district. I would very much appreciate it if you would, at your earliest convenience, let me know if there is likely to be anything doing in Peterborough.

Thanking you in anticipation, I am

Yours truly,

Two Steamships Collide Fifty Miles off the Coast and Battle ship Arrives in Time to Rescue the Passengers and Crew

SHOWED RARE COOLNESS

Special Wire to The Examiner.

NEW YORK, N.Y., MAY 12. — A wireless received this morning tells of a collision between the Steamships Admiral Farragut and Merida, fifty miles from the light ship, half an hour after midnight this morning. The passengers and crew were transferred without loss of life and a panic averted by the cool, determined conduct of the officers and men of the battleship Iowa, which, summoned by wireless, hurried to the side of the Merida, which had a gaping wound in her side and took in water so rapidly that she shortly after sank beneath the waves.

Later wireless reports say the Farragut was also badly damaged and is floating on her bulkhead. Two warships have steamed to her assistance.

NASTY LITTLE FIRE GAVE BRIGADE A FEW ANXIOUS MOMENTS THIS MORNING

Blaze Broke out in Roof at Corner of George and Dublin Sts. and the High Wind and Awkward Location of the Fire Made Matters Interesting---However the Brigade Handled the Situation Well and the Damage was Small

The fire brigade had a nasty little problem on their hands for a few moments this morning, when a fire broke out about 11 o'clock in the roof of the dwellings over J. J. Cock's grocery at the corner of Dublin and George streets. The blaze, which is supposed to have originated from a spark from a nearby chimney, was in an awkward place to get at and with a half-gale blowing there was every prospect of a serious conflagration. However, the brigade arrived in short order and soon had the situation under control. By means of ladders a line of hose was carried unto the roof and the fire which had made its way into the attic, was soon extinguished before it could do much damage. The houses at this point, are close together and if the blaze had been allowed to get a little start, the result would have been a bad fire indeed. The roof was burned in a half-dozen places and the damage to the building, which is owned by W. Taylor, is placed at $150. The grocery beneath, occupied by J. J. Cocks, was damaged by water to the extent of $75, and there would have been more loss here had not the brigade used their big tarpaulins to good purpose in covering up the perishable goods.

The damage is covered by insurance.

MANILLA STATION IS TOTALLY DESTROYED BY FIRE

A serious fire occurred at Manilla yesterday afternoon, when the G. T. R. station took fire and was burned to the ground. The fire started about 2 o'clock in some manner unknown and as the high wind fanned the flames, the station was consumed in a very short space of time.

An engine and crew of men went out and succeeded in keeping the flames from spreading so that the tracks are not injured in any way.

No information could be obtained from the G.T.R. office, as the wires were down and no message could be got through.

An approximate estimate of the financial loss, however, is given as $2,000.

Mr. Culverwell is also an associate member of The American Institute of Electrical Engineers of New York and recently was made member of the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association of Philadelphia, having delivered an address at Atlantic City on "The Trent Canal and the benefits of water transportation" while there taking a holiday. A prominent legislator has stated that Mr. Culverwell has secured stronger municipal endorsation for his undertakings than any man in the history of Canada.

THE SIMPLE TRUTH.

A recent despatch to the Examiner refers to Rev. R. J. Campbell, of "New Theology" fame, who will visit Canada, as the successor of the late Rev. C. H. Spurgeon. He is the successor of the late Dr. Parker in the pulpit of the City Temple, London. When he comes we shall be, no doubt, entertained with another outpouring of new theology, which will, in turn, lead to another outpouring of criticism, controversy and protestation on the part of those who are inclined to hold that truth, like its great Fountain Head, is eternal, "without variableness, or shadow of turning". Then we have a proposal to amend the Ten Commandments. The new theologians, the higher critics, the amenders of the divine law, could be better employed. They would do better preaching the Gospel for a change, and leading people to live up to the old theology. The curtailers of the ten commandments had better be employed in inducing men and women to live up to the demands of the old commandments, which, by the way, have the advantage of being of divine authority. The destroyers of the Bible had better persuade people to live up to the divine truths it unmistakably sets forth. Millions have traversed life's thorny ways and reached the heavenly rest who had no new theology to teach them, had no new Daniels come to judgment in the Word of Life. They believed in the Bible, they kept the ten commandments without abridgement. It is a safe thing to trust the bridge that bears us safely over the stream. In this age we know too much—much learning has made men mad, and the scoff of Felix to St. Paul has become a literal truth. Spiritual pride, human vanity, the pride of learning have set men to undermining the foundations of the Kingdom of Heaven. The Redeemer of mankind opened the kingdom to all believers, but the superfine critics and unsettling preachers are seeking, through destruction of belief, to bar the gates of the Kingdom. We know enough to help us live good lives, and he is neither the friend of God, nor man who blurs the writing of truth, which is so plain that the wayfaring man, though a fool, may read. The old theology sets its disciples on the Rock; the new theology sets people adrift without compass or rudder.

WANTED, A NATIONAL AIR.

A Chicago educationist is promoting a half-million dollar fund as a prize for the production for the best "American" National Anthem. Isn't it singular that the "greatest nation on earth" has had a separate existence for 140 years without having a national air of its own. It has all this time been whistling British airs, set, however, to Yankee words, of the true spreadeagle, rip-snorting brand The "Star-Spangled Banner," with its time-honoured inquiry, "can you see it"; Yankee Doodle" and "My Country," constitute the musical library of the national airs of the United States, and not one but has stolen the music. The stirring staccato of the "Star Spangled Banner" is an old English air used to fillip the starry flag, through the medium of words set in patriotic stills. "Yankee Doodle" is the air which yokels sang on village greens in the merry days of the merry monarch and knew it as "Lucky Locket," and in "My Country 'tis of Thee," Uncle Sam has cribbed the copyright of John Bull's "God Save The King." We don't blame our Yankee neighbours for adopting these airs: it shows their appreciation of a good thing. But it is a surprise that the United States, which is so prolific of inventors, and which has turned out many good poets and literary men and clever musicians, should not before this have been "up to" concocting the music of a national air which would be their very own. But, perhaps, this comes from being a ready-made, or semi-ready country. A real nation grows, and is not made in a day. In the process of growth and development folk-lore and folk songs come into being. The United States has no traditions old enough to have the cork drawn and yield a satisfactory bouquet. They are a great country, because they got their ideas of government from a great country, that grew into greatness. Great Britain, the mother of parliaments, the cradle of real civilisation, in its widest meaning, is the growth of a thousand years. The United States sprang complete from the head of the revolutionary Jupiter — George Washington. They gained a lot of time in this way, but they missed a lot of fun—that goes with ethnical and national development—they missed a great deal of the poetry of life which the primitive or intermedial Britons gathered in the process of growth and embodied in song, which has become a national possession. It is to be hoped that the Chicago Educationist will succeed, but his success is problematic. A poet is born, not made—even by half-million-dollar prizes; neither is a writer of songs that will suit everybody and catch the popular spirit. The modest rhymists, or the amateur composer, may strike the lucky chord that will thrill the national heart sooner than the great poet or the top-notched musical composer.

It is only fair, however, to give Uncle Sam notice, that he cannot expect to enjoy the reversion of Canada's national airs by any process of annexation. Canada will keep forever, for herself, her nationality and her national airs, "O Canada," you shall be Canada as long as the Maple Leaf decks the boughs in spring.

BRITISH-CANADIAN TRADE.

The expansion of the trade of Great Britain, which was so marked in 1910, continues in 1911. The imports for the first quarter of 1911 are £177,278,000, an increase of £12,115,000, or 7.3 per cent. The exports of produce of the United Kingdom were £114,248,000, an increase of £13,361,000, or 13.2 per cent. Cotton played a large part in both increases. The imports of raw cotton in 1910 were greatly restricted by poor crops. The increased importation of raw cotton in the first quarter of 1911 was accompanied by a large augmentation of exports of cotton manufactures. This accounts for half the total increase. There were also large increases in machinery, manufactures of iron and steel, woolen fabrics and clothing, coal, chemicals, drugs, dyes and colours.

Canadian exports of wheat to the United Kingdom fell from nearly two million pounds sterling to one million pounds in the same period. Mainly in consequence of this our total exports to Great Britain fell from £5,537,000 to £3,581,000. On the other hand, the imports of United Kingdom produce rose from £4,572,000, to £4,702,000.

A HOUSE DIVIDED.

Mr. Borden's decision to visit the prairie provinces and speak against reciprocity shows a degree of courage, but it will require a still greater degree if he is to be straightforward with the electors.

The majority of the Conservative members of Parliament from Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta cannot consistently keep Mr. Borden company during his tour. With two or three exceptions, they have bowed to the low tariff sentiment of the prairies. Even in Winnipeg, where eastern interests are strongly entrenched, the Conservative newspaper advises its party to attack the tariff "with an axe". Elsewhere Mr. Borden will find himself in an even more awkward plight. At Portage la Prairie he will meet Mr. Meighen, M. P., who calls himself a Conservative, and moved to put agricultural implements on the free list. At Souris, Man., there is Dr. Schäffner, M. P., who told the House of Commons a month ago that the policy of the Conservative party was a reduction of the duties, on manufactured goods all along the line. At Dauphin, Man., is Mr. Glen Campbell, M. P., who said on April 7:

"We on this side of the House, certainly I myself, have been strongly in favour of a reduction on these (agricultural implements). A gentleman who was my leader in the Province of Manitoba, a man for whom I have the highest possible regard, Hon. Hugh John Macdonald, conducted a contest in the west on that question, and his word was given to every man in the west that were he returned to power he would do everything in his power to put agricultural implements on the free list, for the benefit of the farmers. In that he had my support, I believe in that."

Mr. Borden's difficulties will increase as he moves into Saskatchewan, where every Conservative member of the Legislature voted for a reciprocity resolution. When Mr. Borden's single Saskatchewan follower in the House of Commons, Mr. Lake, of Qu'Appelle, was accused of opposing reciprocity, he hastened to enter a disclaimer, as follows (see Hansard, March 21):

"I have from the first been favourably disposed toward the pact, both on account of the free entry of our grain into the United States, and also from the fact that it was a step which was certain to be followed by a reduction of the present high protection on manufactured goods."

Mr. Borden has three followers in Alberta, and two of them are in favour of reciprocity. In British Columbia he would be more fortunate, but he will not visit that province, where he thinks missionary effort is not so much needed. His tour will excite more interest than any of his previous travels, but not for reasons which his opponents need envy. The public will be curious to see how he will bridge over the differences in his own party. Will he meet the tariff issue or dodge it? He will have to be an artful dodger, indeed, to circumvent the hecklers of the grain-growers' associations.

Civic Government By Commission Considered From Two View-Points

Commenting on some remarks of The Ottawa Free Press the other day that, in order to be convinced that the commission form of civic government would be preferable to the present methods of municipal administration, one must have some assurance that the commission will be composed of men thoroughly competent for the position, the Toronto World says:

In the Ottawa Free Press we find the same stumbling over the commission government idea that befalls all the other people who have been hypnotized by the United States plan of electing commissioners.

Why elect commissioners when the good old British plan for generations past has been to elect a board whose duties it is to appoint them? "We know, dear reader," says Thee Free Press, "that you yourself could sit down and name five gentlemen who would give us a civic administration in Ottawa immensely superior to any that we have hitherto enjoyed. We know we could."

This is an admission of the whole case for civic government by commission. If a council or board were elected whose sole duty it would be to pick those commissioners, the board would pick the five men. The Free Press believes are to be found.

In Germany it is realized that governing a city is just as much a business as running a railroad or managing a bank or conducting a newspaper. The directors of these corporations are elected by the shareholders, and they pick business men to do business. Any city can follow the example.

The World, does not by any means clear away our doubts. It speaks of the commissioners being chosen by a council or board, which is contrary to the plan generally advocated of electing the commissioners by a vote of the city at large. Under the commission form of government the council is to be done away with. The World's council would have nothing whatever to do but select the commissioners. What sort of a board of commissioners would be elected by a majority in the present city council of Ottawa?

Granted, the government of a city is a business and should be conducted on business principles. But so long as the representative and thinking men in a city refuse to take any interest in municipal affairs and thus permit cliques to get in their fine work, that city will have no better business government under a commission than under an aldermanic council. Indeed an incompetent board of commissioners could do even greater mischief than a board of aldermen.

If the selection of the directors of a great corporation was left entirely to the shareholders, a large proportion of whom took no interest in the business, it would be as mediocre and as inefficient as many of our city councils now are.

In every successful business there is some one dominating man, and it is he and his intimate colleagues who select the directors and it is they who choose men whose advice and experience would be valuable to them in the conduct of business. That business in the life and soul of that one man and he is governed in the selection of his aids and his staff by cold, hard business facts unmixed with sentiment or favour.

If it were possible to select municipal commissioners in the same way, if we could have some one big man whose choice of commissioners the electors would endorse without question just as the shareholders endorse the advice of the big men, there might be a chance of having our municipalities governed on business principles.

Far pastures look green. Disgusted at the kind of administration the city of Ottawa has been getting with a city council, the commission idea appears to many electors as a sort of oasis in the desert.

What The Free Press is trying to point out is that the same apathy among the electors which has permitted the council method to sink into disrepute will deprive the principle of government by commission of all the advantages which look so good in theory.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

We are sorry, says the Montreal Herald, that Mr. W. F. Maclean, M. P., will have to stay at home for a few days as the result of his accident at a Toronto suburban station; but we feel impelled to point out that it all comes from a habitual practice of defying railroads. If the railways of Canada did not have a rule against jumping off before the train stops, it is ten to one Mr. Maclean would never have jumped off.

Brantford's three days' campaign to raise $400,000 for a new Y. M. C. A. building resulted in shooting past the mark by $17,000; in all $117,000 was raised in the three days. The City of Brantford and the Y.M.C.A. are both to be congratulated. One feature of the contributions was that nearly a third of the $117,000 was contributed by manufacturing establishments, an acknowledgment of the good influence of the Y.M.C.A. upon their staffs of employees, both in an educative and moral sense.

A CANADIAN FREE LIBRARY FOR THE BLIND.

Of all our public libraries, one of the most interesting and most deserving of public support is the Canadian Free Library for the Blind, which was established at the Village of Markham in 1906. It is now proposed to move the institution to Toronto, in order that it may be more easy of access, and to improve its usefulness by placing some hundreds of additional volumes on its shelves. An effort will also be made to install a press for the manufacture of tactile books, in order that some of the gems of Canadian Literature which have never been reproduced in raised letters may be enjoyed by the blind.

This Library has also a department of free instruction in the art of reading tactile print. While it is difficult for those of us who are blessed with sight to realise fully how much tactile books, and the ability to read them, will mean to our five thousand fellow-Canadians who are doomed to pass their days, as well as their nights, in utter darkness, this Library's appeal for public support on humanitarian ground is eloquent.

When we add to this a consideration of what it means to the State to educate the Blind, patriotic motives should induce generous contributions to the endowment fund of the institution. It is of paramount importance to the State to make the blind population self-supporting, and the way to do this is to educate the blind. The seeing man, without education has hundreds of avenues of employment open to him that are closed to his blind brother. Indeed, there is very little normal labour that the blind can perform, and none that is profitable; while in the realm of intellectual endeavour their opportunities are illimitable.

A good circulating library of books they can read is more important to the blind than is such an institution to people who can see. In these days of cheap literature, even the man of small means can at least own a small library. For the blind there is no cheap literature, owing to its bulk (for the sheets can only be printed on one side) and to the necessarily limited sale. A book printed for the blind costs several dollars, while the same work can be owned and enjoyed by a seeing person by the outlay of a few cents.

This library is established under the Ontario Public Libraries' Act. It is under Government inspection, and its accounts are carefully audited. Subscriptions towards its endowment fund are solicited. Remittances addressed to E. W. Hermon, Treasurer, 37 Balmute street, Toronto, will be gratefully received and duly acknowledged.

The Library is available to all the blind of Canada from Halifax to Vancouver. Books are transmitted free of postage, and the Librarian promptly mails books ordered from the catalogue.

Correspondence is invited with the Secretary, S. C. Swift, M. A., 8 Washington Ave., Toronto.

NOT A MACHINE-MADE EMPIRE.

(London Advertiser)

The British Empire has been made by men, not by machinery. It has long been the pride of Britons that their political constitution was a natural and human growth, a gradual and historical adaptation of and to circumstances, and therefore a healthy and humane, free and elastic organism, rather than a rigid organization. The British constitution is not the hand-made, however skillful, finished document which holds the United States in a vice, and begins to embarass Australia. It is not a made-in-Germany machine. And the same may be said of the British Empire.

Both in Canada, and, still more ominously, in England, there is a party or clique which aims to replace natural sentiment by mechanical bonds, to tie up local liberties, to bind the free and flatten the head of British and colonial democracy by means of tariff chicanery, military and naval conscription, and massed armaments. Machinery, machinery, is the cry of this set.

The London Times, by no means the most rabid spokesman of machine imperialism, declares that:

"The publication of the draft agreement between Canada and the United States has probably done more than any other event of our generation to open men's eyes to the remarkable political conditions under which the empire exists at the present moment—conditions which are the inevitable consequences of the doctrine of colonial autonomy to which we all subscribe, but which are certainly not on that account to be accepted blindly without a full understanding of all that they imply."

If this means anything at all, it means that Canada was presumptuous in negotiating the reciprocity agreement, and that there was something anti-Imperial in the process. There is a school of reactionary opinion which holds that the self-governing colonies have no right to make treaties or even agreements of such weight as that just negotiated. Not yet daring to speak out openly on this point, they nevertheless act upon their theory or argue with implicit reference to it. Plainly one of the aims or logical consequences of this aggressive imperialism is the curtailment of colonial autonomy in foreign relations, and, indeed, by a necessary corollary in home administration as well. Against such views and tendencies Canada's position must be made perfectly clear, and the one man to voice a sane imperialism quite compatible with patriotic nationalism is Sir Wilfrid Laurier. It is reassuring to know that he will even make sacrifices to be present at the coming Imperial Conference. His tact, commanding insight and prestige, will enable him to represent not only Canadian, but over-seas opinion, and there is no doubt that the Government in power in Great Britain, will be deeply impressed by the attitude of this great and truly British statesman.

STORY OF A MASSACRE

Noel Williamson and His Expedition Slain by the Abors in Tibet

The story of the massacre of Mr. Noel Williamson and his expedition by the Abors on the frontier of Assam and Tibet is more hinted at than told in a telegraphic report which the Secretary of State for India has received from the commandant of the punitive police force which is lying, too exhausted to advance, at Panghat.

The tragedy begins with Mr. Williamson's arrival at Riu, leaving Dr. Gregorson at Sishsim. "On Williamson's arrival in the village," says the report, "the baggage was put down, and the coolies taken to a big house where a quantity of drink was produced. Williamson warned the coolies not to drink too much. Williamson was then led away to Maddu Gam, Vichi, Williamson's Naga servant, following at some little distance. They disappeared round the corner, and the coolies were invited into the house. Suddenly Vichi came running about in, 'The sahib is killed.' As if this had been the signal awaited, the village broke into pandemonium. As the panic-stricken coolies burst out of the house they were cut down by the Abors with long swords. One survivor escaped by jumping out by the back of the house and through the other end of the village. Vichi and the cook succeeded in finding two guns and a little ammunition, and with the few coolies remaining retired from the village, using their guns and covering the escape of the surviving Nepalese. It is said that the cook shot himself with his last cartridge. Vichi's fate is unknown. Nothing is known also about the fate of the sepoy orderly. The five survivors fled, chased by the Abors with dogs, eventually reaching the river at Sishsin, where there were no signs of Dr. Gregorson. His tent had disappeared, and only an ominous gathering of crows hung over the deserted encampment. It is said that Gregorson heard firing and started up the hill to help Williamson, being shown the path by Sishsin Abors. Somewhere on the path, with the treacherous Sishsin Abors behind him and Komsing Riu Abors in front, he met his end. One of the sick who remained at Sishsin with Gregorson" was Lal Bahadur, the coolie sirdar. On April 12 a sentry on the river facing Panghat saw a body floating down stream with an arrow wound in the chest. The body was recognized as Sardar Lal Bahadur's.

"The last written words of the expedition came from Katoki to his wife in Sisserimukh. He wrote: 'Have arrived at Panghat. Here Kebong forbid going further. Sahib insists on going into the village. My impression is we shall never return.'

"It is still uncertain whether the massacre occurred at Riu or Komsing. I am inclined to think it took place at Komsing."

NEW WALKING STICK

One That is Capable of Holding a Great Variety of Articles

Young men with smart spring suits are asking themselves the question: "Why have your clothes spoiled by bulgy pockets when by buying the newest type of walking stick this can be obviated?" This new stick, for which there is a great demand in London, is capable of holding a big variety of articles. Of course, the sword stick is ano ld idea, but there is now the matchbox carrying stick, the whistle carrier, the pipe carrier, and the cigarette carrier. Thousands of the latter were sold last year. The surveyor out on business need no trouble about his measuring stick, a the surveyor's stick, in the middle of which is a measure, sees to all the Malaccas and miligiris are immensely popular among young men this season, especially the latter, which, as the name suggests, is an Indian product.

POLICE COURT

Harry Wright was remanded at the Police Court this morning, on a charge of insanity. About a month ago Wright was in Court before on the same charge, having given himself up to the police authorities. It appears that some years ago he hurt his back, while lifting at a railway wreck, and this caused periodical insanity. The last time he gave himself up to the local authorities he had been racing the railway trains and other such things. This morning he was again remanded.

"Do You Buy Clothes "Sight Unseen"

Buying clothes by sample is a delusion and a cause of frequent dissatisfaction on the part of the customer. The trouble with this method of choosing cloth is, that you can have but slight conception of how it's going to look when made up. Buying clothes according to this plan, whether custom made or so-called "special order" is as much of a gamble as buying a corner lot at the North Pole.

Eliminate chance of every kind. Don't buy clothes by the "sight unseen" method. Wear "Sovereign" Brand Clothes. You can see precisely what you are paying for, and you don't have to pay a cent down until you're perfectly convinced in your own mind the clothes are satisfactory in every respect.

Go to the best clothes shop in town—there you will find Sovereign Brand in all the latest spring styles

BONES AND SKULLS WERE UNEARTHED

Fourteen Skeletons Were Turned Out of a Trench Near Weston by Cellar Diggers

Bones and skulls, comprising fourteen skeletons, possibly of Indians, were dug up by a road-scraper at Weston shortly after excavation had been commenced for the foundation of a new Presbyterian Sunday school hall. A remarkable fact in connection with the accidental discovery of the skeletons is that they were only eighteen inches below the surface.

The reasons for the conclusion that the bones were those of Indians are many. The Weston road, which runs along beside the scene of the find, was, according to history, formerly an Indian trail. It is also close to the east bank of the Humber River, which in earlier days was navigable for flat-bottomed boats and canoes. An examination of the skulls themselves reveals unmistakably aboriginal anatomical features. Two years ago a skeleton with Indian beads was unearthed just off the main street of Weston, and four or five years ago the skeleton of an Indian chief was found wrapped in a blanket. The contractor for the excavation work says that while a scraper was at work on a drain being run through the property, he noticed some bones in the earth disturbed. The next turn of the scraper unearthed more bones and skulls, and before the ditch was finished fourteen skulls were found.

One resident says the skeletons were not those of Indians, but the bones of gallant Canadians who fought in the Rebellion of 1837 or the War of 1812. He said that many lost their lives at Weston during the former trouble and that there were so many fatalities that, instead of burying the bodies in separate graves, the people dug a trench and threw them all in together.

The bones and skulls are pretty well preserved and look as if their age should be measured, not by centuries, but by decades or years. An examination of the teeth in some of the jawbones shows them to be in a state of perfect preservation. They look sounder than a lot of the teeth being used in 1911 for purposes of mastication. The skeletons, as an examination of their relative positions before being taken from the ground showed indicated that the bodies at the time of interment were thrown into the trench together without any orderly arrangement.

MATRIMONY AND TRAGEDY

Passing as "Mme. Juliette," a Hapsburg, and a distant cousin of Emperor Francis Joseph, has been unearthed carrying on a dressmaking establishment in an obscure Hungarian town. Tragedy has marred no less than three matrimonial attempts on which she has embarked during her career. Her first husband, a lieutenant of Hussars, spent her fortune, and blew out his brains. The second, a druggist, poisoned himself within six months of the wedding day, and from the third, the Baroness obtained a divorce. Then it was that she entered domestic service. Subsequently better opportunities offered themselves, and she became established as a modiste.

THE LABOR OUTLOOK

Is for Active Resumption of Outdoor Work—Much Building is to be Done—Labor Report

The Labor Gazette's review of industrial conditions is as follows:—

The outlook is for an active resumption of outdoor work on the opening of spring, in view of the many large contracts under way or contemplated in railway construction, building, and civic improvements. The immigration movement is opening with pronounced activity, and gives promise of a heavy year.

The total number of trade disputes reported to have been in existence in Canada during February was six, being two less than in January, and six less than in February, 1910. About six firms and 2,134 employes were involved in these disputes, three firms and 1,067 employes having been involved in new disputes.

Industrial accidents occurring to 264 individual work people in Canada during the month of February, 1911, were reported to the Department of Labor. Of these, 8 were fatal, and 180 resulted in serious injuries. In addition, four fatal accidents were reported as having taken place prior to the beginning of the month, information not having been received by the department before February, 1911.

In the preceding month there were 82 fatal and non-fatal accidents reported, a total of 263, and in February, 1910, there were 41 fatal and 186 non-fatal accidents, a total of 227. The number of fatal accidents reported in February, 1911, was, therefore, two more than in the preceding month, and 43 more than in February, 1911. The number of non-fatal accidents reported in February, 1911, was 31 less than in the preceding month, and 16 less than in February, 1910. Altogether there were 19 less industrial accidents reported in February, 1911, than in the preceding month, and 27 more than in the same month of the preceding year.

A NEEDED RAILWAY

To Connect Georgian Bay Towns—Aid Asked of Government

Citizens from Owen Sound, Southampton, Collingwood and Orillia are urging the Government to give aid in building a railway from Southampton through Owen Sound, Meaford, Thornbury and Collingwood to Orillia.

They ask the Government for the usual grant of $3,200 per mile of railway to be built where it is not paralleling a line already existing. This, it is expected, will amount to about $160,000 in all.

The need for a railway connecting these ports on Lake Huron and the Georgian Bay has long been felt, and all the towns interested would be greatly benefitted by it. At present the only direct means of travel between Owen Sound and Meaford is by boat in the summer or by stage. In order to go by rail from Owen Sound to any of hte points on the Georgian Bay, it is necessary to go all the way to Toronto and back.

The Canadian Pacific Railway Company may be asked to undertake either to build the line or to take over and operate the line after it is built. A charter has already been obtained for the railway.

QUEBEC BRIDGE COST $12,000,000

A Description of the New Structure Which Will Span the St. Lawrence

The new Quebec Bridge, according to contracts awarded, will cost $12,000,000. The bridge is on the line of the Transcontinental Railway, where it crosses the St. Lawrence River near Quebec, and will be the largest cantilever bridge in the world, the suspension span being the longest single truss span ever designed, exceeding that of the celebrated Forth Bridge, Scotland, by 90 feet. In working out the design, Mr. Graham has had in consultation a commission of the world's most expert bridge engineers, whose work has extended over a period of two and a half years. This will be the only bridge over the St. Lawrence River east of Montreal, and will be used by the Transcontinental Railway and any other roads that may require it. It is expected that the bridge will be ready for traffic by 1915. The St. Lawrence Bridge Company, which succeeded in competition with German, British and United States firms, is a purely Canadian company, comprising the Dominion Bridge Company, Montreal, P.Q., and the Canadian Bridge Company, Walkerville, Ont. The design which has been adopted will have K webb system in the cantilever and anchor arms. The suspended span is of a modified Pratt type. The length of the centre span is to be 1,800 feet. The total length of the structure is 3,223 feet, or about three-fifths of a mile. The suspended span is 640 feet long, 110 feet deep to the centre and 70 feet at each end. The cantilever arms are 550 feet long, 70 feet deep at the end and 310 feet high over the main post. The anchor arms are 520 feet long. The width of the bridge between the trusses is 88 feet. The bridge will be 150 feet above high-water. The depth of the water in the centre of the river is 200 feet. All members in the anchor arms and those immediately over the main pier, as well as the floor arms, will be built of carbon steel. The cantilever arms and suspended spans will be of nickel steel. The piers are all to be built of cement concrete below water, and granite-faced masonry filled with cement concrete above water. The abutments are to be of granite masonry. The caissons over the main pier on the south side will be 180 feet by 55 feet. The north side will be built in two sections, each caisson being 55 feet long by 60 feet wide. The bridge will accommodate a double track railway, and will have a four-foot sidewalk on each side for foot passengers. There are over 100,000 cubic yards of masonry in the piers and abutments. The weight of steel in the superstructure is estimated at 100,000,000 lbs. The transportation of this immense quantity of steel will require the use of 1,677 freight cars of 60,000 pounds capacity, or 67 trains of 25 cars each.

CARBON TOOL PLANT

Port Hope will soon have the first high carbon tool steel plant in Canada. The new structural steel buildings of the International Tool Steel Co., at the west of the harbor, are under rapid construction, and it is expected that the plant will be in operation in June.

SOUTH CENTRALS EASILY DEFEATED KING EDWARDS

South Central and King Edward school teams met in a Senior Public School League game at the King Edwards grounds Wednesday afternoon, the South Central team winning by the one-sided score of 25 to 1. The result of the game was never in doubt. Parker pitched splendidly for the winners and his speed was too much for the King Edward bunch, while he was given fine support. On the other hand South Centrals took kindly to Eakins' offerings, slamming the ball all over the lot and he was not given the best of assistance by his team mates. The batting of Richardson and Parker, for the winners, was a feature. Richardson drove out a clean home-run to deep centre. He was rounding third before the fielder reached the ball, while Parker had a long three bagger and a double to his credit. The fielding features were a nice double play, Campbell to Taylor, and a pretty pickup of a hard grounder by Richardson.

The teams were:

South Central—Smyth 1b, Clark rf, Chambers lf., Brown c.f., Parker, p., E. Smyth 3b, Haskill c., Williamson s.s., Richardson 2b.

King Edwards—Campbell 3b., Anderson 2b., Frost c., Eakins p., Taylor 1b., Skuce r.f., Doughty s.s., Braund, c.f., A. Frost l.f.

The Plaintiff is Awarded Damages of $1,500 and Costs

The Toronto World's report of the Osgoode Hall cases contains the following reference that is of intrest locally:

Before Mulock, C. J.:

Quinte v. Bishop (Construction Company—R. G. Agnew for plaintiff. T. N. Phelan for defendants. An action under the Workmen's Compensation for Injuries Act for damages for injury sustained by plaintiff when in defendants' employment. Plaintiff, a labourer, was employed by defendant company, who were erecting a concrete dam on the Otonabee River. (the new waterworks dam, Peterborough), working at a mixer machine for making concrete. On Sunday, Nov. 13, 1909, defendants' foreman ordered plaintiff to assist in constructing a crib work of square timber, and whilst so engaged he slipped and fell from the wet and icy timber, sustaining the injury sued for.

Judgment, I think, the case comes within the act. There is no evidence to show that the accident was caused by want of care on the part of plaintiff. The injury he sustained is of a serious character, and I award him $1,500 damages and $10.50 arrears of wages, owing to him, with costs of the action.

DEATH OF THE GREAT BENEFACTOR OF SAILORS

As the cables announced at the end of April, there passed away in London, in his 89th year, Mr. Passmore Edwards the Philanthropist and Journalist, who gave away nearly all he had to benefit his fellowmen. Altogether he donated 72 institutions, such as libraries, etc., his largest gift being the presentation of the Passmore Edwards Sailors' Palace to the British and Foreign Sailors Society, London, for International Headquarters, at a cost of $70,000, which he regarded as the most satisfactory deed of his whole life.

When our present King (then Prince of Wales) opened the Palace in 1903, King Edward offered him a Knighthood, as did Queen Victoria before, but he did not feel that he could accept the honour. Had he sought honours, no doubt a Peerage would have been his. No Cornishman and no Englishman of our day more deserved recognition from the Crown. One honour he would have appreciated, whether accepted or not, namely the offer of the Citizenship of London. So high did feeling run during the Boer war that the vote in the Council went against him.

Six Sailors Institutes on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of Canada are associated with the great Society which has lost in Mr. Passmore Edwards a most generous helper, who ever regarded its work as an agency of international peace and good will.

The English Prints have for scores of years been the Print and it is hard to get away from them. They are as good as the best American prints if they are not better. They have the name

Mrs. (Dr.) Langfeldt will receive on Monday afternoon from 3 to 6.30 at Miss Revell's home, at 333 Rogers St. when she hopes to have an opportunity of thanking all those who so kindly contributed to the gift of her beautiful necklet.

Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Waddell have returned to the city after a short tour abroad. The trip, which was to have been of a more extensive nature, was suddenly terminated by the sudden death of Mr. Waddell's father, which took place in this city a few weeks ago.

The following Peterborough persons attended the convocation of McMaster University on Wednesday evening: Mr. and Mrs. [illegible] Montgomery, Rev. J. R. and Mrs. Webb, Mrs. R. Harding, Mrs. Harry Webber, Miss Mayme Montgomery was one of the graduates, receiving the Bachelor of Arts degree.

A PRESENTATION

A few days ago Rev. Dr. Langfeldt, the former pastor of St. Luke's church, and now of the Parish of Inisfail, was agreeably surprised by a number of his friends in the congregation of St. Luke's, who presented him with a substantial purse of gold and the following address:

The Rev. E. A. Langfeldt, Ph.D., Peterborough.

Dear Dr. Langfeldt,—The undersigned, representing a number of your friends in Peterborough, request your acceptance, on the occasion of your leaving Peterborough, of the enclosed, as some expression of appreciation of the many acts of kindness which characterized your work here.

We wish for you in your new field of work much success, and for Mrs. Langfeldt and yourself every possible happiness.

On behalf of donators—George F. Warde, E. A. Peck, F. Adams, committee.

WE DARE NOT SHOOT THEM.

One might as well try to prevent Reciprocity by closing the gate as to attempt to prevent the sure and certain advance of 30-day Shorthand. Moon College graduates, it seems, insist on talking to their friends.

NOTHING LIKE IT FOR COLDS

Mrs. Holland Ferguson, Sheffield, N.B., writes: "Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine has cured my children and myself of severe colds. We are never without it in the house. There is nothing like it for colds and throat trouble, and it is so soothing and pleasant to take, my children would drink a whole bottle if they were permitted."

POST CARD COLUMN

An Appeal to Britishers.

Will all those from the old country remember that in the teams playing in the Church Football League matches every Saturday afternoon are boys from home and that their presence at the matches would bring pleasure and encouragement to their fellow countrymen. Most Britishers are fond of football and I assure them they will witness good games if they come to the matches. Many come, but we want more. Come and meet your fellow countrymen and enjoy good football

BRITISHER.

May 12th, 1911.

Sporting Editor, Examiner:

Sir,—Allow me space in your paper to say a few words regarding St. John's football team. They have had no support whatever from St. John's church and have been put to a big expense to start the team. All they ask is that members of St. John's will attend the games, as the games are free. Trusting this may meet the eyes of a few of St. John's members and rouse them up to go and see the matches and encourage the boys. Thanking you, Mr. Editor, I remain,

A Member of St. John's.

Washing Your Hands.

When you go to the washstand and carefully wash your hands with a generous application of soap and hard brush do not think for an instant that your hands are clean. The tenacious microbe refuses to be disturbed and clings to the flesh throughout the whole operation. There are some chemical compounds which will dislodge the busy bacilli to a certain extent, but not entirely. According to the investigations of a medical authority of the Prussian army, the best results in the direction of giving the hands a sanitary cleaning are accomplished by the use of alcohol. A bath of pure alcohol will remove about 99 per cent of the germs. Where it is desired to clean the hands hygienically it is recommended that the hands be not first washed with water, for this will so adulterate the alcohol that it cannot accomplish its work as effectively as otherwise.

Galt's Y.M.C.A. Campaign.

Galt, Ont., April 29.—Galt citizens have decided to launch a campaign to raise $50,000 for a new Y.M.C.A. building. At a meeting last night, addressed by Harry Ryrie, Toronto, and J. W. Hopkins, field secretary of the work, it was decided to conduct the campaign from May 14 to 28. The membership has grown from 55 to 200 in the past few years.

MacKay and King at St. Thomas.

St. Thomas, May 29.—After addresses by Hon. Alex. MacKay and Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King yesterday afternoon, a gathering of 600 Liberals passed resolutions endorsing reciprocity and expressing faith in Mr. MacKay.

The meeting was arranged by the Young Liberals of Shedden.

Trout Getting Scarce.

That New Brunswick's good reputation as a province abounding in fish is in danger, especially in the matter of trout fishing, is the claim made by Harold C. Beckett, Pugwash, N.S., in a letter to The St. John Telegraph.

I declare and believe, says Mr. Beckett, one who has fished many of the best fishing streams in the country, the Kennebecasis and its tributaries, especially the South Branch, and enjoying the right to fish in them at any time during the open season, that I am right when I say that the trout are growing scarce and small, being unmercifully decimated by unsportsmanlike sportsmen during the hot summer months, June, July and August. It seems to me that the Government fails to pay any attention to the grievances of the farmers who complain of so much damage done to their hay crop along the banks every year. But they will only have to wait till we have a few years or six months' fishing when it won't be worth the trouble to fish for trout. May is the only month in which a sportsman can be satisfied with the number and size of fish he gets, although he might be given a chance during the hunting season.

How to Fasten Oilcloth on Tins.

To fasten oilcloth on tiled floors is not easy. A well-recommended plan is to smear brewer's paste under the edges. This makes a sort of cement which prevents the edges and corners kicking up.
